Mr. PALMER. Surely such a principle ought not to be introduced into our jurisprudence, because comparisons made by a jury are the most unreliable of all methods of determining facts. How would the parties in court pass upon the conclusions of a jury unless they were required in some public way to make their comparison and announce the result of that comparison? I submit that it is entirely competent for a witness who may be examined and cross-examined under this bill to compare a particular instrument.

Mr. GRAY. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that the finding of a jury is not reviewable in a court of error.

Mr. PALMER. A finding of a jury is reviewable in some of the States; but the point upon which I am embarrassed is that it is proposed that the jury shall make the comparison. I am content that a witness shall make the comparison, because he can be examined and cross-examined, but I protest that unless the jury were required to announce their conclusion at the moment, to which some sort of exception might be taken, it would be a very dangerous practice.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from California will pardon me, this is a very simple matter, and I think there is some misunderstanding on the part of the Senator from Illinois or on mine. A man is sued on a promissory note and denies that he signed it. There may possibly be exceptions, but practically in every State court in the country experts may be brought who say, "I am familiar with that handwriting," and assert that it is or is not the handwriting of the defendant; and if there be another note or other documents admitted or proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be his, the jury may take those and compare them and use them in aiding them to make up their minds as to whether the man actually signed the note.

Now, in the United States courts you can not do that. All you can do is, if there happens to be some material in the case—for instance, if there were two notes, one of them would be admitted, and the other note in the case the jury can look at and then they make a comparison with that; but it is not reviewable; it is merely evidence on the question whether the note was signed.

Now, this bill proposes to allow the United States courts to go further and do what our State courts do; that is, let the jury see other admitted or proved genuine signatures of the party whose signature is in dispute. It would be certainly an anomaly in the law to make any provision that a particular finding of fact which they make after they have made the comparison shall be reviewable by any court. If it is reviewable in any court, it is reviewable in view of the final decision of the whole fact and not on one particular question.

Mr. PALMER. In the State of Illinois it has been settled by repeated decisions. I have a case in mind. It is competent for the court to submit to the jury for the purpose of comparison any affidavit sworn to by the party in the cause. The rule has been carried somewhat beyond that where there is a recognized signature, probably I ought to limit it to a signature made in the cause, to an affidavit, or to a decree. It is competent for the court to submit to the jury the particular signatures, to which I advert, for the purpose of comparison with the particular disputed signature; but the decisions of the courts upon that point are reviewable; they may be made the subject of exception. The court passes first upon the identity of the papers submitted to the jury or the genuineness of the signature submitted to the jury for the purpose of comparison. I am persuaded that this intrusts too much authority to the jury. I think it would be better to limit it to the functions of the court alone, that the judge shall have the power to submit to the jury, or that it shall be competent evidence to go to the jury.

Mr. HOAR. That is all there is to it.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator will allow me, the proposed amendment does not extend back to the power of the court to rule upon the admissibility of the document as the foundation. It must be established to the satisfaction of the court, or proved, as the bill says, that this is a genuine document. If there was a case on trial involving the signature of the Senator, and there were 500 bank checks bearing his signature, and they were brought into court, and it was admitted that they were genuine signatures, does not the Senator think they might be submitted to the jury for their comparison just as any other exhibit in a cause might be submitted?

Mr. PALMER. The Senator is probably correct. My impression is that the language is too broad, and that it will be found in practice to involve more danger than seems to occur to Senators now.

Mr. VILAS. I call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to one suggestion in reference to this bill. He recognizes that it is the rule that whenever a genuine signature, indisputably so, is in the case for any purpose, the law now permits the jury to compare the disputed signature with those which are genuine as one of the means of arriving at a true verdict upon the question of genuineness of the disputed signature. That has always had a somewhat injurious effect, in this, that a just comparison of a disputed signature with genuine signatures could not be well made if compared only with one or two genuine signatures. A large number of them affords a much safer basis of comparison to a jury than a particular one or two which might have been affected in the writing by peculiar circumstances. It requires a large number to make a safe comparison. This bill only fortifies and adds to the value of the rule which enables a comparison of signatures when their genuineness is known.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments to the bill were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the bill has been reported to the Senate. The bill is now before the Senate, and the question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. LINDSAY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest that the object of the Senator will be accomplished by a nonconcurrence in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest, as I understand it, that if we vote down the amendments in the Senate, that will accomplish the object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. LINDSAY. The explanation I desire to make will be made as well with the bill in its present condition. It occurs to me that the safeguards were very much greater as the bill was reported and the bill very much more intelligible than it will be if the amendments which have been agreed to be concurred in by the Senate. The bill reads:

That whenever it may be material to prove the genuineness of handwriting in any court of the United States—

The bill, before the amendment was agreed to, provided—the same may be proved, in addition to any mode now competent, by a comparison made by the witness or the jury with writings admitted or treated as genuine by the party against whom the evidence is offered, or proved to be genuine to the satisfaction of the judge.

The admissibility of papers with which the comparisons are to be made depended, first, on their admitted genuineness, or upon evidence offered to the court which convinced the court to its satisfaction that the papers were genuine, and then they became admissible, to be testified to by expert witnesses, or to be examined by the jury. It seems to me that no greater safeguard ought to be required.

Mr. HOAR. That is there now.

Mr. LINDSAY. I beg the Senator's pardon. That has been stricken out. The bill now reads:

That whenever it may be material to prove the genuineness of handwriting in any court of the United States in addition to any mode now competent, a comparison made by the witness or the jury with writings admitted or treated as genuine by the party against whom the evidence is offered, or proved to be genuine to the satisfaction of the judge, shall be admissible.

Mr. HOAR. The comparison is admissible on writings so proved, and it means exactly the same thing.

Mr. LINDSAY. The language is better in the original bill, and much more intelligible.

Mr. HOAR. I have not any choice about that.

Mr. LINDSAY. It occurs to me that we are only making uncertain that which was absolutely certain, and that we have not increased the safeguards at all by the change of the verbiage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the Senate in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were nonconcurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3247) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," approved February 20, 1889.

Mr. DANIEL obtained the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire, if the Senator will permit me, to call up the bill (S. 3547) to provide for the representation of the United States by commissioners at any international monetary conference hereafter to be called.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope the Senator will not interrupt me at this moment. I shall only occupy the floor for five minutes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Do I understand that the Senator intends to deliver a speech?

Mr. DANIEL. No.

Mr. CHANDLER. I can not interrupt the Senator under those circumstances, but yesterday I was in the same case with the bill which I wish to get up, for the Senator from Virginia was then making a speech.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, on yesterday, in the course of my remarks, I stated that Colonel Ludlow, chairman of the board of engineers who visited Nicaragua for the purpose of making a survey of the canal, had stated in his report that he and his associates were the only engineers who had ever gone over the entire route. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] challenged that statement, and said that it was a mistake. I find that in so far as I attributed it to the official report made by Colonel Ludlow it was a mistake. The Senator also stated that no such statement had been made by Colonel Ludlow. I find that I was correct. Yesterday I was only speaking from my general memory of what I had read in reports on this subject. I find that I was absolutely correct in attributing this statement to Colonel Ludlow.

Mr. MORGAN. And I admitted it, and here it is in the RECORD.

Mr. DANIEL. On page 169 of the report made by the Senator from Alabama from the select committee at this session, will be found the statement of Colonel Ludlow, and in an appendix to that report, made before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, he says:

> We are the only engineers who have ever been over the entire route, and in making that statement I do not make any exceptions.

So it is the allegation of the chairman of the board of United States engineers who visited that country that they are the only engineers who have ever been over the entire route without exception.

On page 162 of this report made by the Senator from Alabama there is presented in an appendix the remarks made by Mr. Alfred Noble, one of the engineers, upon the testimony relating to the report of the Nicaragua Canal board. I think it important in this connection to cite those conclusions, and they are given by him as follows:

> The conclusions of the board may be summed up as follows:
> First. The data collected are in many respects deficient, either for a final judgment as to the best route for the canal, for an estimate of its cost, or for the information of intending bidders.
> Second. The channel widths proposed in the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua are insufficient for the traffic expected by the company. Besides these large modifications, the project should be changed in many minor respects.
> Third. The correction of errors in the company's estimate makes a large increase in the estimated cost.

I would also ask attention to somewhat more of Colonel Ludlow's statement than I quoted on yesterday, which will be found on page 171 of Report No. 1109 of the last session of this Congress. He is asked the question by Mr. PATTERSON in his testimony before the committee of the House, as follows:

> Do you think the Government of the United States could construct this canal project over the route adopted by the Nicaragua Canal Company, and such a canal as will be entirely safe and sufficient for commercial purposes, within the limitation of $150,000,000?
> Colonel LUDLOW. I think an answer to that can not be given until the necessary information can be gained. There are some hydraulic data which must be determined before the engineers——

There he was interrupted, and does not seem to have concluded his sentence. The only comment I make is that we are assuming by this bill to make a subsidy of $100,000,000 to build a canal when the data that we possess upon the subject are imperfect, either, as was said by one of the engineers, for a final judgment as to the best route for the canal or estimate of its cost, or for the information of intending bidders, and that the chief of those engineers, the chief of the only board which, as he states, has ever gone over the entire route, informs Congress that he is unable to say whether this project can be built with entire safety and sufficiency for commercial purposes within the limitation of $150,000,000, which is a third more than this bill contemplates.

A single word more, sir, and I am done. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] on yesterday asked me a question which I misunderstood. I thought he asked me why the minister from Central America objected to the scheme to which I had referred, of giving the United States monopolistic control of this canal. He did in fact ask me why I objected to it, and my reply, with my misconception of his question, makes a rather unintelligible continuance of my remarks as reported in the RECORD. I will reply to his question, as I find on inspection it is quoted in the RECORD, why I should object to an arrangement which made the United States the apparent master of the situation. I do not object. On the contrary, I should favor a fair and appropriate arrangement which made the United States, as far as it was possible to make it, the director and administrator of this canal. I should prefer, if this project is ever carried out, that it should be done by the United States in its own name, open and aboveboard, and that our Government should assume in expression, as in fact, such a domination and control of that enterprise to the furthest extent of possibility.

My objection to this bill is, that under a contract of the State of Nicaragua, made with private citizens, the United States, under the protest of Nicaragua, and with disclaimer of request on the part of the private citizens, has injected itself, or has proposed to inject itself, upon a scheme where it is not invited by either party to do so, and where one of them protests, and where the whole scheme seems to be so intermixed and predominated by private interests that while it will be a matter of the United States with respect to the cost, it will not be a matter of the United States in that open manner which it should be if the United States should undertake it at all.

Such other objections, Mr. President, as I might have to this were sufficiently stated on yesterday, and I shall not detain the Senate with further remarks.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, when on yesterday the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] referred to the statement that Colonel Ludlow made before a committee of the House of Representatives, I distinctly admitted that such a statement had been made. I have not at any time denied that Colonel Ludlow made the statement, and I do not now. The Senator from Virginia read it again this morning. He did not read it all, however. There was a little addendum to it; but it makes no difference whether it is read or is not; it does not alter the question in the slightest degree.

Colonel Ludlow made a report in conjunction with his two colleagues, the engineers appointed by the President upon this canal subject, and he made his report on an examination that could not have continued longer than forty-two days, because that was as long as the commission were in Nicaragua, and during all but about nineteen or twenty days of that time those gentlemen were engaged in other matters, traveling about, waiting to get accommodations, and so forth. Therefore they had not the chance to examine this canal, and they did not examine it; they did not go over it; they did not make a boring or take a level anywhere except at one place, and that was where the canal enters Lake Managua from the west. They came back and made their report, and did not assume in their report that the surveys made heretofore had not been accurately made. They could not do that, because there was Childs's survey and maps, which were sent to the Secretary of War, printed, and in the possession of the Government, and I have them in my committee room. There was then Commodore Lull's survey, which was in the same manner printed, received by the Government, and put on file, with all of his estimates and maps. Then there is the first survey made by Mr. Menocal, which was made for the Government of the United States and paid for by the Government, and reported, printed, and is on file, with all of the necessary details of a full and complete survey. Then there was the next survey—that is the fourth one which was made by the Maritime Canal Company after the concession was granted. That has been fully and elaborately reported and stated. Every foot of the ground between the Pacific Ocean and the Atlantic Ocean on the route of this canal has been accurately measured except perhaps a mile or two of the bottom of the San Juan River, or 2 or 3 miles, where all the engineers have relied upon Commodore Lull's survey as being entirely complete. That survey was made with extreme care, and nobody has ever doubted or departed from it.

Now, that is the situation. Mr. Ludlow, with a view of trying to get this matter back into the hands of the Engineer Corps or somebody, to protract the time during which the engineers might be engaged upon it, requests an appropriation of $180,000, I believe it is, to keep up the survey and have a longer time about it. The committee of the House of Representatives paid no attention to that, although at the last session of Congress these gentlemen were paid $2,000 apiece in addition to their regular pay. Why that was done I never knew.

I know that the Maritime Canal Company spent a sum of money equivalent very nearly to $20,000, as much as the Government had appropriated, for the purpose of opening up the way and making it entirely convenient for these gentlemen to go and make a complete examination of the work. Then, after they returned to New York, they spent two or three months, a long time, in the office of the Maritime Canal Company, looking over their surveys and their estimates; and all their calculations are based upon Menocal's surveys and Menocal's estimates. They do raise the cost. They do that by making what they call a Government job of it; polishing and dressing it up; putting in things which a commercial canal does not need and can very easily dispense with; smoothing up the floor and the walls, etc. They made some changes in different pieces of work there, and they raised the whole sum, by a most extraordinary system of calculation, to $133,000,000. They stated in their report, and each of them stated upon examination before the House committee, that the canal could safely be built for $133,000,000, a most extravagant estimate, but it makes no difference. The committee go upon the basis of $150,000,000, and say that it is not only a practicable but a very profitable investment, even at that figure. Then they make a calculation upon the basis adopted by the report. Of course that is for profit. But they say that, taking the extreme between the former estimates of Mr. Menocal and the present estimates, they find that $115,000,000 would be the probable cost of the canal, granting that all that these men said is true.

Now, each of these men had the question put to him in every form, whether he admitted that the canal could be built, whether it was feasible. "Certainly it is feasible." "Can the Ochoa Dam be built?" "Yes." "Can the harbor be built?" "Yes." "What will it cost?" "One hundred and thirty-three million dollars." They are on the book both in their reports and in their personal examination before the committee as saying that the canal is perfectly feasible. So the committee of the Senate did not think it was worth while to make any special report upon the feasibility, except to refer to their statements, and our report to the Senate is based upon their statements, as is the House report.

After having accepted their statements with all their extravagance and based the report upon them, how does this complaint come here about little expenditures of the kind to which the Senator has referred? Mr. Ludlow, in the heat of passion, for he seems to be a very ill-tempered man (he is an officer of the Navy, and I suppose that that sort of dynamite or gunpowder in him is a good quality, and therefore I do not complain of him for being ill tempered), in argumentation before the House committee—for he was not before the Senate committee at all—stated positively that they were the only engineers who had ever been over that route. It turned out in the testimony of himself and the other two that they had never been over it all. They had passed over parts of it, not all of it. Having shocked the credulity of the committee upon that subject, I suppose, and still not being satisfied, he made the statement which the Senator from Virginia has read here to-day, that no other engineers but them had ever been over that route. They were there not exceeding seventeen days in all, and Mr. Ludlow got himself well enough informed on that occasion to state positively before the committee that no other engineers but these three men had ever been over the route; and they admitted that they had not been.

That was the most remarkable statement. The committee followed it up, and wanted to know from Mr. Ludlow where he got his information. He said he got it from a man by the name of Davis, who had been an engineer on the canal, and who had been discharged; and that is all the testimony that they had on the subject. Mr. Menocal, of course, felt wounded by that, inasmuch as he had made four surveys personally and had spent three or four years actually there tramping through those hills and cutting his way with a machete. He was called before the committee, and I have here his statement about it, amongst a number of other things which he was called upon to state. Mr. Menocal said, in reply to a question of Mr. DOOLITTLE:

> There is another question in which my veracity has also been questioned here. It has been stated here that the engineer members of this board were the first engineers who visited a certain portion of this line.
> Mr. SHERMAN. The only engineers, it was stated.
> Mr. MENOCAL. I am glad you correct me, because I only get this from hearsay, as I have not seen the testimony sufficiently to enable me to pick out from it what is essential and deserves consideration. I have been told that the statement has been made here that this board are the only engineers who have visited some section of the Nicaragua Canal line, that section being between the Danta and Nicholson streams along the line of the embankments of the San Francisco.
> I want to say to the committee positively, and I can take oath, if necessary, that I am the first engineer that ever explored that section of the country, and I do not think I will be mistaken when I say I am the first educated white man who went up the San Francisco and Nicholson creeks; I first did so in 1873. I was trying to find a line more or less directly from Ochoa to Grey Town. Up to that time all the routes proposed for a canal across Nicaragua had followed closely the bank of the river. I knew the line was a long one, and there were a great many engineering difficulties connected with it, and I was trying to find a path through these ranges of foothills of the San Francisco which would enable me to locate a line more or less direct from Grey Town to Ochoa. My first examination, as I said, was in 1873. In 1876 I devoted a number of days again to the exploration of that section of the country. I was very much encouraged by this examination. I had also examined in 1876 the upper portion of the valley of the Deseado from Grey Town, which, together with the preliminary examination I had previously made, convinced me that a path existed between those hills through which I could locate a practical line for the building of a canal from Ochoa to Grey Town.
> In 1885 this matter was brought before the Navy Department, if I remember correctly, by Admiral Ammen, who had followed this scheme from its inception, and he suggested to the Secretary of the Navy that I be sent to Nicaragua to run a line across that country and see if such a canal route could be located there. I was ordered to Nicaragua in charge of a party of engineers to make surveys. I there ran a line from Ochoa to the divide—

That is a great rocky barren.

> I had another party running across the divide and from Grey Town to the divide. The results of these examinations made by my assistants and myself were such as to demonstrate that the canal route was practical and could be located. Of course, the location then was only a preliminary one, but sufficient to satisfy us that the physical conditions were such as would enable us to locate a canal across that country. I returned to the United States, and this report was published.
> Some gentleman interested in the Nicaragua Canal were very much encouraged by the results obtained by this investigation, and they organized an association, which later obtained a concession from Nicaragua, and at last a company was organized for the construction of the canal. I was then appointed chief engineer of this company, and we then made a careful and what we call the final location of the route, such as was required in the concession. In making this location, the engineer who was in charge of the location of that portion of the San Francisco Valley, not being thoroughly familiar with the ground, found considerable difficulty in locating the foothills that should form the base of embankments which had been proposed, and while I was engaged in the construction of the gun shops at Washington and other works of the Navy Department the report came from this engineer that they had been unable to locate these hills and establish the practicability of this line of embankment.
> Mr. DOOLITTLE. What are those hills?
> Mr. MENOCAL. They are the foothills which now form the base of the embankments.
> Mr. DOOLITTLE. Between the canal and the river?
> Mr. MENOCAL. Between the canal and the river. I went to Secretary Whitney and stated that my reputation, as well as the plan of the canal, depended, in my opinion, upon the solution of this problem then before us. I had been over the country and knew the hills were there, but the vegetation is so dense that you could not see them until directly before you, and these engineers, having never been over the country before, found considerable difficulty in finding the hills upon which we proposed to build the embankments. Secretary Whitney gave me permission to proceed at once to Nicaragua. I obtained leave at 4 o'clock in the afternoon from him, and I started the next day. I arrived at Nicaragua, and I devoted myself to the examination and location of all these hills, and with three parties of engineers started to develop and connect them so as to obtain a chain or line of embankments, with which we proposed to hold the water in this artificial basin.
> Mr. DOOLITTLE. I wish you would state about your going up the river at that time, and about what point you stopped.
> Mr. MENOCAL. Our headquarters were then at the mouth of the River San Francisco—

The very river in question—

> If you will allow me to point it out, my headquarters were at these islands you see here, and I would take a canoe every morning (there is a gentleman present, who was my secretary, who could testify to that, if it was necessary), and I would go up the San Francisco and then over these hills and spend more or less time upon them to develop them. The statement of the board has been made here upon the authority of a man by the name of F. P. Davis. Mr. F. P. Davis went to Nicaragua for the first time in the latter part of 1887 or early in 1888. Up to that time he had never seen the country. When he arrived at Nicaragua he was ordered to locate a portion of the divide line which has since been abandoned, and he did not know or see anything of this line except what he heard from others.
> During this time when this report was made that the hills could not be found so as to connect them and obtain the line of embankments which I had proposed, Mr. Peary, of Greenland fame, of whom you very well know, was my assistant, and he withdrew the engineers from the location of what is now called the upper line and put them to work on the location of the lower route on the river bank, and Mr. Davis was transferred from his work on the divide to the location of the line between the Sarapiqui River and the San Juanillo, and he was engaged there for some time, and on the completion of this service he was discharged, work was suspended in Nicaragua, and he returned to the United States. In the meantime this chain of hills to which I have referred, and which it has been stated to this committee I never saw, had been thoroughly examined by three parties of engineers. The chain of canal embankment was laid down practically as it is to-day, with some slight modifications made after more complete investigations with the cross section of every hill and every valley, and it is practically the same as it was located in 1888, when I was there, and any engineer can see that. That is all that I think it is necessary for me to say in connection with that matter.

Then he goes on into other questions where his estimates and veracity are questioned. He deals with them like a gentleman. He is not there as an engineer for the purpose of trying to pick flaws in somebody else's work or anything of the kind. According to the evidence that has been before me and the committees, including the Committee on Foreign Relations, Mr. Menocal is as much entitled to respect and credit as any man we know.

Mr. President, that is purely a collateral issue between Mr. Ludlow and the committee really as to whether Mr. Ludlow's statement was correct that his party were the only men who had ever passed over that part of the line, when he admitted and all of them admitted that his party never had passed over it, when I show here by Mr. Menocal's report the full and complete survey of every foot of it, the actual measurements on the ground of every foot of it, reported to the Government once and then reported to the Maritime Canal Company.

Now, I submit that this is not a very just way to attack the pending bill. I am perfectly aware that the Senator from Virginia could not have read all of this report. He could not have studied it. Otherwise he would have been incapable of doing Mr. Menocal this injustice. The report is an extensive one. The House committee took all the testimony. The Senate committee did not take a particle of it. The House committee, after taking it all and considering it by a great committee of seventeen members, I believe, many of them the most eminent and honorable gentlemen in the United States, came to the conclusion that the canal could be built and ought to be built, and they reported the pending bill. The select committee of the Senate took the bill just exactly as they reported it. We concurred in it. I find, on some question being made of a very technical and critical character upon the language of the bill, that it is necessary or proper that I should offer an amendment to it, which I had printed and laid on the desks of Senators yesterday. I now offer that amendment.

The amendment is intended to give to Nicaragua and Costa Rica every right that they have under the concessions they have made, and it has gone so far as to prohibit this company from making a transfer of any property or anything else to the United States or anybody else in contravention of those rights under the concessions. We have done all that we knew how to do to preserve fully and perfectly the rights of Costa Rica and Nicaragua under the concessions. We do not want to violate them. The least of our purpose is to take any advantage of them or to violate them; and the hypothetical drubbings that the Government of the United States got yesterday evening on this subject, and frequently heretofore, upon the idea that the bill is here for the purpose of robbing Nicaragua and Costa Rica are totally out of place. They do not apply to this case in the slightest degree.

The Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate have been engaged upon this business since Mr. Edmunds first offered the resolution in the Senate to have the matter investigated, and I will read the resolution, as I am on my feet now, merely to call the attention of Senators to the origin of the whole matter.

The committee in their first report made upon the subject, on the 10th day of January, 1891, say:

> The Committee on Foreign Relations respectfully report that on the 11th day of April, 1890, the Senate, in executive session, adopted a resolution in the following terms:
> "Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and it hereby is, directed to inquire into what steps have been taken under the act of Congress entitled 'An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua,' approved 20th February, 1889, and what are the present conditions and prospects of the enterprise; and to consider and report what, in its opinion, the interests of the United States may require in respect of that interoceanic communication."

The resolution was passed. The committee went into executive session upon it, and frequently in the examination of the members of the company who were called before it we stated to them, "Your statements made here are not going to affect your company, because they are made in confidence; they are made secretly." The committee examined into the subject from the date of the passage of the resolution, about which I knew nothing as a member of the committee until I found the committee engaged in the examination of it—I happened not to be in the Senate when it was passed—until the 10th of January, 1891, and then made this report, which is signed unanimously by the committee. It contains all the provisions upon the subject of the rights of Nicaragua—Costa Rica was not then in it—which are contained in the present bill, and no objection was made from that day to this as to a fair and honorable and just proposition being made to Nicaragua that we would preserve sacredly all her rights.

This committee report is signed by JOHN SHERMAN, George F. Edmunds, WILLIAM P. FRYE, William M. Evarts, J. N. Dolph, JOHN T. MORGAN, Joseph E. Brown, H. B. Payne, and J. B. Eustis. Surely that committee were not trying to rob Nicaragua. Nobody here believes it. They may indulge in all the censure and criticism; they may heap all the abuse they desire to upon that committee; but they can not make any impression upon the Senate as to the honorable motives that influenced those gentlemen in making this report and as to the justice of their inquiries so far as they were able to make them.

We made an elaborate examination of the law, of the engineering reports, accompanied with maps. We examined the concessions very carefully to see what were the powers and rights of all these parties, and appended all of them to the report, together with a statement of Mr. Miller, whom we summoned to testify before us, and Mr. Hiram Hitchcock and Mr. Atkins and Mr. Mason and Mr. Menocal. We came to that conclusion.

At the next session of Congress the subject was taken up, and the committee was changed to some extent by the passing out of the Senate of some of its members, and new members were added, among others the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. He sat there, participated with us in all this business, and I never heard an objection, and he did not make any, to any of these contentions or concessions or questions that are raised here now.

In the meantime the House of Representatives took it up. There were seventeen men on its committee. Three Congresses have passed since that time and three times that number, seventeen men, have been engaged in the other House in the examination of the same subject. In the Senate the Committee on Foreign Relations, enlarged recently, was engaged in it until the Senate saw proper to make a subcommittee to take charge of this business, and I had the honor to be made chairman of it. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] is a member of it; the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] is a member of it; the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] is a member of it; the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] is a member of it; the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] is a member of it; the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] is a member of it, and I am a member.

Now, it will not do to say that there has been any fraud or desire to rob anybody in measures which these various gentlemen have examined with the most scrutinizing care. Neither will it do to say that they have not examined every point in the case that has ever been suggested. But it will do to say that when opinions antagonistic to the canal have been introduced here as amendments to the bill when it passed through the Senate before, two years ago, and were voted down, the committee took up several of those amendments and incorporated them into the bill with a view of accommodating the action of Congress to the objection that had thus been stated, and they are in the bill now. Some of the very amendments which were voted down before are in the pending bill now as reported by the committees of both Houses.

This movement on the part of the House and the Senate can not be attacked collaterally by a question like that which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] brings up here to-day on a statement by Mr. Ludlow that the engineers of the company have never passed over this line. Sir, that is too rash a statement for any man in the world to make. He had every opportunity in the world to qualify it. When we come to ascertain—as he had never been there before—how he came to make such a statement, we find he said that he had been informed by Davis. Here is Mr. Menocal's statement.

Now, I am determined, so far as I am concerned, to present this question to the Senate fully and fairly, as is done in the report; no fact withheld; none concealed; none excused or apologized for. Every fact that can make against the canal has been fully stated and fully discussed. I am determined, so far as I am personally concerned, not to be drawn off into a collateral issue where the jealousies of engineers may come in and cause them to criticise each other severely. We have not anything to do with that, but what we want to ascertain from the whole bulk of the testimony is whether or not this measure is well founded upon engineering, whether it is well founded in public policy, whether it is feasible. In respect to the last point, no man who as an engineer has ever examined the canal—and there must have been as many as twenty or thirty who have examined it thoroughly for different companies; I say twenty or thirty, perhaps I am wrong about the number, but a great number have examined it thoroughly—has ever pronounced against its feasibility or its necessity.

Then the question remains whether or not the Government of the United States wants to lend its assistance to the company. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] can persist in calling it a subsidy. There is no subsidy in it. The Government of the United States in this matter, as in several others where it has taken stock, as in the case of the United States Bank, in the case of various highways that have been built through the United States, toll roads, and such matters, is asked to invest its credit in an enterprise of very great moment to the United States and the world and to all coming generations of men.

Some of my brother Democrats, who are not more straight-laced or obstinate perhaps in their convictions as to the rules and tenets of the Democratic creed than I am, object to it on the ground that the Government has no right to do it. I stand upon the ground that General Jackson took about this matter, which is that outside of the United States we are the equal of any power in the world in all our authority. General Jackson took that ground in reference to this very canal, and sent Biddle there for the purpose of making explorations in order that he might crown his Administration with the highest glory in building it. I have the authority here to show it, but I will not detain the Senate now to read it unless some Senator wishes to have it read. But I do not appeal to any man for an interpretation of my views upon the Democratic doctrine. It is very true I would not run counter to the admitted and conceded tenets of the creed of the Democratic party when I knew it, but Thomas Jefferson also had this subject under consideration, and he was in favor of it. No man was more boldly in favor of it than Henry Clay, and yet Henry Clay was not a Democrat in the present acceptation of the word. Neither was he a Republican. So far as authority goes for this movement, no President and no Secretary of State has ever put his objections to this canal upon paper. On the contrary, almost every one of them has in the broadest terms adopted all that relates to this canal as being entirely within the powers of the Government of the United States. It was the leading and expressed feature of the conventions that nominated Franklin Pierce and James Buchanan for the Presidency.

So, Mr. President, upon that ground I feel entirely safe, if I were governed only by precedent; but I never had a doubt that, under the power to extend our commerce, to protect and care for it abroad, we could engage in this enterprise just as well as we could engage in the exploration of the seas in far distant countries for the purpose of finding out, according to our hydrographic operations and surveys, the state of the bottom of the ocean and the bays and the like. I have had no more doubt of it than I have that we have the right now to send our mails back and forward across the Atlantic Ocean and the Pacific Ocean and pay for them. I have had no doubt about the power of the Government of the United States to extend its mail facilities anywhere. Therefore I felt perfectly confident that I was standing on firm ground, both of precedent and my own convictions, whatever they may be worth; they are worth everything to me as a Senator.

We have brought the project forward in this way, and if I could only get the Senators on this floor to read the testimony taken by the House of Representatives, I would not have to say one word in advocacy of the bill. In that testimony all three of the commissioners were examined. I do not know that I am required, merely because I have had connection with this subject, to spend my life in the effort to pass the pending bill or to wear myself out in it, although the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] seems to think that I am saturated with it, and with nothing else. I flatter myself that there is room left in me for several things besides this canal; that occasionally I have correct views upon other subjects besides this, and that it does not by any means comprise everything in the world that I happen to know. But I have been studious and diligent about it; I have been faithful and honest; and there is not a spot on the escutcheon of the Maritime Canal Company or anybody else connected with this business. It is perfectly pure and clean and free, and I would despise it if it had any stain upon it at all.

The question that I asked the Senator from Virginia yesterday evening—and he felt this morning compelled to allude to it a little somewhat—is, Who has proposed anything else? Do you intend to leave that backbone between those seas and make no effort to remove it, although every great statesman in the world for three centuries—yes, for full three centuries—has had his attention attracted to that passage? Finally, by the consent of all men who have considered the subject, we have come to the conclusion that the Nicaragua Canal route is not only the practical one, but that it is the only one through which we can get ships from ocean to ocean. Now, are we going to abandon the whole business? Are we going to be driven off by some threats that have been sent in here, which Mr. Olney entirely disclaims, through the minister of the young Republic, which is as yet in such a nascent state that we do not know what it is?

I have found the argument against this canal to turn now entirely upon that minister's statement. I have shown absolutely that in three of his statements one of two things was certain, either that he did not know what he was talking about or else he was violating the action, solemn, dignified, and final, of the Government that he represents here. It is the first time in my experience—and I think I can appeal to the experience of the older members of the Senate that it is the first time in theirs—when any foreign minister has been permitted to send to the Senate of the United States as censure his objection to, his criticism upon, a bill that is pending here. We are not allowed under our Constitution to be held responsible anywhere else for words uttered in debate or for the votes we give on this floor. That is a great protection; and it is even necessary now to protect a Senator who dares to raise his voice against that man. It is necessary now. Even something else may be necessary; I do not know.

On various occasions, commencing with the Administration of President Washington, coming down through several, John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, John Quincy Adams, Mr. Pierce, and so on, certain foreign ministers who were accepted at this capital have essayed to make criticisms upon what was passing in the Houses, and to make objections to what was going on in the Houses, and to ask the Secretary of State what it all meant, whereupon some of them have got their walking papers and others have been very severely rebuked.

Messages of the President of the United States have been criticised sometimes by foreign ministers at this capital, and whenever those criticisms have come out they have been suddenly dealt with in a very summary manner. On a very recent occasion, when the Government of Great Britain was represented by a worthy gentleman here who had public and private acceptability amongst all classes of people of a very high order, and he undertook to interfere, as was alleged, in a pending Presidential election, he was dismissed from this capital and sent home as far disgraced as this Government knew how to disgrace him in giving him his passports and ordering him off.

What we have a right to do here, what we contend for and all we contend for, is that we shall have on the floor of the Senate and in the other House perfect liberty of debate; that any man shall get up here and express any conviction or statement or argument he chooses to do; and that we are not to be interfered with by objections and suggestions interposed here for our consideration by a foreign minister.

Here is the honorable Senator from Virginia, who spent two hours or more yesterday evening, and predicated his objections to the bill not upon anything that was in it really, but distinctly read and enumerated all the objections thrust in here by this foreign minister. He took them up seriatim and undertook to advocate them in a way that cast, in the opinion of the Senator, extreme odium upon all our committees and all the reports that have been made, in so much that the Senator from Virginia indulged, at the instance of that minister, in most vituperative comments upon the men engaged in this business.

I would have made a very serious protest about this as a Senator, and others would have done so also, but Mr. Olney was entirely taken unawares by the fact that that minister's statements were ever laid before this body. That minister stated in an open communication, which is put in quotation marks in the Washington Post, that he and Mr. Olney had agreed upon it at a diplomatic dinner that that paper should be sent in here to the Senate. Mr. Olney denies it. Mr. Olney said he thought it was his duty to present that matter to the chairman of the committee who he then supposed had charge of the bill, the Committee on Foreign Relations, which always had charge of it until this session of the Senate; and he was very much disquieted and much offended that that matter should have been brought in here as a subject of discussion.

Now, sir, what we are to meet to-day in the Senate is not the merits of this case, but the threats and the arguments of the minister from this new Republic, the Greater Republic of Central America. That is what I am confronted with. It is the first time, I think, that any Senator in charge of a bill here has ever been compelled to go outside of this Chamber and to take up the complaints made by a foreign minister in advance of the passage of a bill and discuss them.

This is exceeding ungracious and unkind to the Senate of the United States, if I may use that last expression with a becoming sense of the dignity of this body, for the reason that the bill itself submits the whole matter of the actual existence and execution of the law to the acceptance of the Maritime Canal Company. If they do not accept what we provide here the bill amounts to nothing. If they accept it, then of course they are concluded by it. What will you say then? Must we withdraw the bill and cease our efforts to build this canal because we are admonished by the minister from these three States that the bill will not be accepted, or that the bill violates their concessionary rights?

Let us inquire a moment who these three States are. Two of them are Honduras and Salvador, that have no more concern with these concessions than England and Austria; they are total strangers to it. These concessions come from two sovereign Republics, Costa Rica and Nicaragua. Here is a man who represents these three Republics, or says he represents them, for we do not know how that is, or at least the basis upon which he represents them. We do not know what their constitution is, what his powers are, or anything about him. He says he represents these three Republics united under a diet. He does not represent Costa Rica, and yet Costa Rica has rights which to her are very much more important under the concession she made than the rights that are guaranteed to Nicaragua. Costa Rica is locked out from the Atlantic Ocean there by ranges of hills that prevent her access to it, and her route to the seaboard is down the San Juan River, where our own President has decided as an arbitrator that she is entitled to equal privileges with Nicaragua. Therefore Costa Rica is an indispensable factor. More than that, we overflow more than 50 square miles of her territory in building this canal. More than that, she has 30 miles of navigation up the San Carlos River, and will have in this overflowed region a great basin or estuary where she can collect ships of commerce almost into the heart of her country from all over the world and trade with them. Therefore Costa Rica has rights under these concessions that are even more valuable to her than those of Nicaragua.

Mr. Calvo is here. He has been here for a good many years. He is a gentleman of great intelligence, of marked ability, and of high acceptability in all the diplomatic and other circles of this city. Mr. Calvo has not a word to say. He makes no protest. He makes no threats. How is it, then, that immediately after that little diet was formed there of two Republics that have nothing to do with this canal and Nicaragua, the third, that has an important part of it, there comes a minister to this country and in very hot haste lays before the Senate of the United States, by a trick, his objections to this canal? What is his business here but that? He wants to defeat the making of that canal. Why? I have my own opinions about several reasons why; but there is one about which history leaves no doubt.

Since it was first ascertained that Nicaragua was the best route for this canal, concession after concession has been made. I think the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] enumerated about twenty or twenty-one. Out of every one of those concessions Nicaragua has made money. She has got money on the spot to fix the bargain, and then afterwards she has contrived in one way and another to get rid of it. She keeps this canal on the bargain counter always, and will keep it there as long as we let her do it. Our company—I say our company, our American company—paid her $150,000 in gold for this concession. They have gone there and expended four and a half million dollars. They have there now a splendid outfit of houses, establishments of different kinds of great value; they have built a railway 11 miles long and laid it with steel rails—a good railway. They have engines there; they have a machine shop there, and a great amount of material. Here comes Nicaragua in combination with these two other Republics, and they together, through their minister, are threatening us that they are going to forfeit these concessions and take everything away. Yet, if we pass this bill, they will not be able to stand up against this company, because the weight of the influence of the Government of the United States then will be in favor of the rights of American citizens also under this concession.

I object to Nicaragua keeping this canal on her bargain counter any longer. I object to her defeating this concession and then proposing some other concession to some one else here or somewhere else and getting another sum of money and getting all the work that has been done there—the surveys, three of which have been paid for by the Government of the United States, Nicaragua never contributing one dollar or the services of an engineer except for a very short time. That is what we have done. Now, if she can drive us off, if she can induce us to drop the subject, if, after being here a participant in this company and in full accord with the Maritime Canal Company, her own minister acting as a director on the board, and without any objection at all, she can just jump up a new diet or new alliance with two other Republics there that she thinks will increase the strength of her case, morally speaking, then, Mr. President, we will have to give way.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that we might perhaps get a vote on the bill if——

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senate were full enough for me to ask for a vote. I would like to do so.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think we might get a vote if the Senator would be willing to have one taken.

Mr. MORGAN. I would yield the floor in one moment, of course, to get a vote.

Mr. CHILTON. I heard the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] say that he desires to make some remarks upon the bill. I do not think it is possible to get a vote now.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think so either. At the same time I was about to conclude my remarks. But I happen to have such a connection with this matter that I think makes the statements that I am now indulging in before the Senate somewhat important upon the case, and I think they ought to be put on the record. I am about through with what I had to say about it. I have said really more than I expected to say when I got up, but I felt that it was due to myself and the committee, that it was due to the Senate, that I should say what I have said, and also make one other observation, which has reference to the bonds that are to be issued here.

The bill provides that the bonds shall be guaranteed and issued as the work is done, approved by the board of engineers, and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; so that if it takes five years or six years to complete the canal, the guaranty of the United States will be issued upon these bonds year by year and quarter by quarter and month by month, as the work progresses. The President of the United States is given the power by the bill to stop the work whenever he sees proper to do so, leaving it entirely in his judgment as it is going along whether it is going to be a failure, or anything of that kind. Whatever the canal costs up to $100,000,000, of course, will be paid out of money received under these guaranties, the bonds to be sold at par for 3 per cent interest. That is a clear proposition.

Now, I should like to know in what form that is a subsidy to the Government of Nicaragua when 70 per cent of the stock is reserved to the United States. Out of the $100,000,000, $70,000,000 is reserved, and every dollar we expend goes to making our stock more valuable. But to provide for the wants of Nicaragua—I mean her objections—in every possible sense, at the suggestion of gentlemen who are in favor of the bill, and at the suggestion of some gentlemen who are not in the Senate even, I have prepared the amendment that I have now submitted to the Senate and which I hope will be adopted. If there is reason and justice in the minds of the men who make these objections, they must give way, it seems to me, before the language of that amendment.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. CAFFERY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Platt,
Allison,	Cullom,	McBride,	Proctor,
Bacon,	Davis,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Berry,	Frye,	Martin,	Stewart,
Blanchard,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Tillman,
Caffery,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Wis.	Turpie,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vilas,
Cannon,	Gray,	Morrill,	Walthall,
Carter,	Hale,	Murphy,	Wetmore,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Peffer,	White,
Chilton,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Wilson.
Clark,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call of the Senate develops the fact that 47 Senators are present. There is a quorum present.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Maine will allow me for one second, I desire to say that I wish again to suggest that unanimous consent be granted for putting this bill with the pending amendments on its passage, and that debate cease, except under the ten-minute rule, on Friday next at 3 o'clock. I make that offer now to the Senate that the bill be voted upon at 3 o'clock on next Friday, with all the pending amendments and motions which pertain to it, allowing ten minutes' debate for each Senator upon any proposition which may be pending before the Senate in reference to the bill at that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that a vote may be had on this bill and pending amendments on Friday next, at 3 o'clock, with this modification, as the Chair understands it, that there may be what is called a ten-minute debate on proposed amendments. Is there objection?

Mr. TURPIE. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. HOAR. I hope that the Senator will give notice that he will endeavor to-morrow to complete the bill. If we are going to do any other business this session, that will be necessary.

Mr. MORGAN. I now give notice, as suggested by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, one of the oldest gentlemen in the Senate, that on to-morrow I shall ask the Senate to sit out this bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of making any extended remarks upon this bill. I have been earnestly in favor, and am now, of the building of the Nicaraguan Canal. I have always realized that its way is made clear and smooth and plain by cooperation with the States of Central America whose territories lie along its line. It has always been urged as one of the reasons why the plan is practicable and can be carried out, that we are in, and will continue to be in, hearty cooperation with Nicaragua and Costa Rica and any State or any power in Central America which lies adjacent to or has an interest in this enterprise; and to me it is a most unfortunate incident in the history of this legislation that we are found now with possible hostility, or, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] well characterized it the other day, indifference or sullenness on the part of one of the Central American powers whose territory this line touches upon; and I am not encouraged in my hope of this bill finally passing by any turn that this discussion takes, or has taken, that leads to the exasperation or stirring up of hostility of those Central American powers.

I do not think, Mr. President, that we are more likely to find ourselves in a domain of acquiescence and consent to this great enterprise on the part of the Central American powers because this is deemed an impertinent intrusion on their part, that they object to certain provisions in this bill, or because of the allegation that Nicaragua is keeping this on her bargain counter in order to exact terms from us or blackmail, as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] characterized it the other day. I protest against that manner of dealing with any other power which has a right to be heard on this subject-matter.

I do not deem the letter that the minister from the Greater Central American Republic sent in here an impertinent intrusion. I do not agree with the Senator from Alabama that it was interfering with prerogatives of the Senate that that subject-matter was brought here. I do not know how we could become aware of that most important and perhaps dangerous objection unless it was laid before us during the discussion of the subject-matter and when we were determining whether or not we should vote for the bill.

The Senator says we do not know whether that minister is duly accredited or not, and the other day he declared that we did not know who he was. That minister represents the consolidated power of these three States. He does not represent Costa Rica, but we can deal with Costa Rica when we reach any protest on her part. He does represent Nicaragua, is duly accredited here, and is the only minister here of Nicaragua.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, he is mistaken in imputing to me the statement that we did not know that the minister had been accredited here from Nicaragua. What I said was that we did not know, nor do I believe, that these objections have been put in his charge by the Government of Nicaragua.

Mr. HALE. The assumption is that when Nicaragua went into that confederation, she went into it as Massachusetts and Virginia went into the Confederation of 1776; as Austria and Hungary went into the confederation which makes the monarchy of Austria-Hungary; as the States of Italy, who had been at each others' throats for centuries, formed the great Italian Kingdom, reaching, as Virgil says, from Piedmont on the northwest to Calabria on the south. The presumption is that these three States——

Mr. MORGAN. I am not acting on presumption.

Mr. HALE. I am acting on the presumption——

Mr. MORGAN. I know you are.

Mr. HALE. I am acting on the presumption that the minister here recognized by the President of the United States represents Nicaragua, and is her only representative, and I do not know, as he believes that his country is being unjustly dealt with in the emendations to the original compact between the company and Nicaragua, how he could better or more fittingly or more respectfully present his views than to send them through the proper channel of communication—the Secretary of State. Whether the Secretary of State is surprised or not, I do not know. I should have considered that he was doing less than his duty if he did not, in the midst of this discussion, send to the Senate, through the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who is our organ of communication with the State Department and with the President on such matters, this communication; and I should hold that the Senator from Ohio, the chairman of that committee, would have done less than his duty if he had not submitted it to the Senate.

The Senator from Alabama has the view that this is an intrusion, an impertinence; I look upon it as an exercise of proper diplomacy, and that the minister would have been doing not his full duty to his country if he had not done so. The Senator says it is an intrusion because it is brought before us before we have passed the act. Why, Mr. President, the only time at which it ought to have been brought before us was while we were considering the bill.

The Senator will gain no votes for his measure by taking occasion here to arouse opposition on the part of a friendly nation—not a European nation, but a sister Republic—and by reflection that can only result in a condition leading to more objection and more hostility. That is not a good domain of legislation or of negotiation.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. This is not my measure. This is a measure of the people of the United States. I am no more identified with it than any other Senator who has heretofore had it in charge, either as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations or as a member of the committee.

I am not going to stand on this floor and conceal anything or have occasion afterwards to suffer rebuke from my own conscience about matters of this kind for this bill or any other, and if the Senator from Maine finds in my conduct or in my words occasion to vote against a great measure of this kind he may do so.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is invested with a great responsibility. He has more than his individual responsibility.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall try to properly discharge it.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is the organ of the committee and of the Senate in introducing and in passing this bill, and what he says bears greater weight than it would coming from another.

Mr. MORGAN. It ought not to; but if I have such influence, I will try to exercise it honestly and faithfully and fairly.

The matter I referred to in respect to blackmail and in respect to my opinion that this minister did not have the right from the Government of Nicaragua to make these objections, I am satisfied of.

Mr. HALE. I am not.

Mr. MORGAN. Very good.

Mr. HALE. I am not, and I do not think the Senate is satisfied of it. I do not think, with all due deference to the Senator and his great learning, his integrity, and his industry, which has led us in years of service to have the highest respect for him, that in dealing with a subject-matter of this kind he should use phrases and convey allegations which tend to stir up trouble rather than to propitiate. I do not like the use of the word "trick," as applied to the conduct of a foreign negotiation with this Government. I do not think the Senator will gain, or that we shall gain, by it.

The Senator says that this is not his bill. So far as I am one member of the Senate, it is my bill. I have been in favor of it, I am in favor of it to-day, and I am in favor of every assertion that this country can make here, now, and everywhere, that the whole subject of isthmian transit shall never be left in the domain of controversy, and allowing any great power of Europe or anywhere else to interfere. The sooner this bill is passed, rightfully drawn, with due deference to the rights of the Central American States, the better for me, and in that regard the bill is mine, if it is not his. My sensitiveness arises not because of anything offensive the Senator has said, but because I fear and believe that he is harming his bill by the course which he is taking.

I should be glad to have a vote upon the amendment the Senator has presented. I should have been glad to vote for the amendment, but I do deprecate the method of discussion which tends to arouse and inflame opposition rather than to reduce it.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, there are to be some hereafters about this matter, and I have become satisfied that a final effort is being made here, through this gentleman who has sent in his message to the Senate, to destroy the hope of the United States to construct this canal. I believe that the people of the United States intend to construct it. I believe that, unless we avail ourselves of what has taken place, and which is an absolute estoppel upon Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and tender to them a bill like this—and I think this is a very good bill—that we shall fail utterly to get any hold upon the Isthmus by which we can build the canal. I believe that that will result in embroiling us with those States, because I am satisfied that the determination now is to break down this concession, if it can be done by this new diet. The further determination is to hold on to the money of our people that they have got, to hold on to the work they have done there, to confiscate the million acres of land which have been granted in fee simple, and to drive Costa Rica out of her rights in this matter. But now, inasmuch as this is a subject the magnitude of which is to my own mind incomprehensible, the results and consequences of which no man can measure, I am determined to keep my course of conduct exactly in the line of truth, honor, integrity, uprightness, and courage, without shrinking one hair's breadth from what these things convince me is right.

I know more about this than does the Senator from Maine, but I am not at liberty to state it. I dislike to make that remark, for the reason that I do not want the Senate of the United States to repose a blind confidence in anything I have to say. I believe there is no measure that has ever been conceived by the Congress of this Government which will at this moment of time be of more advantage to the people of the United States than this. I believe it is an indispensable thing to the connection of our coast lines. I believe that we are about to be driven, or that the effort is being made to drive us, from our rights, to cause us to surrender them and to abandon them in virtue of a threat which I do not believe Nicaragua has ever justified.

Now, I have stated my own convictions upon this record. If what I have said here is a damage and a detriment to this bill, it has been said in the light of the truth, and if truth is going to damage it, let it sink. But in after times, in after days, in a very short period of time, the American people are going to call us to account for what we are doing here. They will never have to call me to an account, Mr. President, because I shrink from contact with a movement that I believe is intended merely to frown our rights out of existence and destroy them.

The rights are just the same between Nicaragua and Costa Rica and the United States, growing out of our own legislation and growing also out of the participation of those States in the operations of the Maritime Canal Company; they are just as sacred as if they were all embodied in a treaty. There is no doubt about what they are, because the statute shows, the records of the Maritime Canal Company show, and if we are driven away from the assertion of those rights by this new idea, which has been concocted since the organization of this diet, or possibly in the organization of it, the fault will not be mine.

I think, Mr. President, that that, perhaps, is all I ought to say just now.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Ohio will allow me, I gave notice yesterday that I should ask pretty early to-day for an executive session, which I think will take but a short time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall only speak for about five minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I had resolved in my own mind that I would not be drawn into the debate in regard to the Nicaraguan Canal. My position in respect to that canal is well known to Senators. I have always believed and still believe that the only way by which the Nicaraguan Canal could be built was by the action and credit and power of the Government of the United States.

When the treaty came to us—a treaty which I am not at liberty to discuss in open session—I supposed that through it we might accomplish the object, and if that treaty had been adopted by the Senate at the time, I have little doubt the Nicaraguan Canal would have been completed by this time. I think that occurred about twelve years ago, perhaps not so long. At all events, Nicaragua by that treaty—probably the most liberal that ever was framed between the United States and any other nation in the world—practically gave us the control of Lake Nicaragua, the river, and the whole region between the two oceans. It was a broad and liberal treaty, so liberal as to indicate on the part of the people of Nicaragua an earnest desire to complete the canal. That that desire still remains I have no doubt whatever. I need not say how, or why, or when, or where, but unfortunately that treaty was withdrawn from the Senate of the United States and disappeared entirely from our consideration; but, in consequence of that, the people of Nicaragua agreed to transfer and concede to a corporation created in the United States rights and privileges almost boundless in their extent. They gave, among other things, to this company a million acres of land in Nicaragua; they gave terms and concessions which were very liberal, and which, as I suppose, might possibly, if the times were favorable, have led to the construction of the canal.

The history of that company you all know. They have expended about four and one-half million dollars; they dug a portion of the canal between the lake and the Atlantic Ocean, but they probably have been too sanguine in their expectations. At any rate, they were unable to borrow money, and they could only build this great work by borrowing money at a large discount. They were compelled to sell their bonds at a ruinous rate, and the result has been that they have practically failed, and I believe are now unable to complete the canal. I have avoided saying anything about this because I did not wish to say what probably might not be exactly true, that they can not complete it, but I feel bound now, in the present condition of affairs, to say that in my judgment that canal can never be built by a corporation, however strong and powerful it may be. It must be built, if at all, by the people of the United States. The Suez Canal was built by the contributions of the people of several nations, among them France and Great Britain. It could never have been completed as a mere corporate enterprise.

Nicaragua has always shown her desire to have the Nicaraguan Canal completed, and therefore soon after she had formed the temporary alliance of three South American States, a confederation which will probably be extended in time to six or seven states, and then there will be another republic embracing the whole or the greater part of Central America. But, without waiting until the full formation of the new Republic, Nicaragua, Honduras, and Salvador sent a minister here. He is a very intelligent and able man; he is an astute man. It has been said that he came here without the requisite authority. Why, sir, the Constitution of the United States gives plainly to the President the power to receive ambassadors or other public ministers or consuls, and the right of that minister to come here and communicate with the State Department is just as clear as the right of the ambassador of Great Britain or the ambassador or minister of any of the most powerful governments of the world to convey their claims and opinions to our Government. We ought, therefore, to treat him not only with personal respect, but we ought to treat with respect the country which has been so anxious for us to carry out this great enterprise, which will redound greatly to their advantage as well as to our own.

The minister of the Greater Republic of Central America sends us a friendly message; he delivers it to the proper authority, the Secretary of State. The President has acknowledged him as the minister plenipotentiary from those powers; he communicates in due form with the Secretary of State, and that statement made by him has all the marks of friendship and of honesty. There is no such sign about it as my friend the Senator from Alabama thinks there is. I see nothing in the communication but what is friendly. The minister himself says that the work can not be completed by the corporation, but that it must be completed, if at all, by the United States of America, and he comes here and submits the matter to us. The communication came in the ordinary course of business transactions. It came to me as the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations from the Secretary of State, and the very first thing I did was to show it to the Senator from Alabama, because, having charge of this bill, I felt he ought to know about it. We consulted and talked about it, and the Senator made no objection at all to the communication, so far as I could see, but advised that it be presented to the Senate. It was right that it should be presented in open session; it did not relate to any matter of foreign negotiation; it was not executive business; it was simply in relation to a bill pending before us and under debate, and therefore, although I disliked very much the aspect of it and some of the minister's objections to the bill, I considered it my duty to present it here in open session, and it was properly here. The considerations therein stated by the minister of the Greater Republic of Central America ought to have been and was printed and considered in our debates.

But my honorable friend drew England into the controversy; and whenever there is a bugaboo to be presented, England is brought before us. The Senate of the United States does not fear England or any other power, and the people of the United States do not fear England. We have had two wars with England, long since past, and I hope that war with England will never occur again. The two nations ought never to fight each other. They ought always to be friendly. Great Britain is more and more following the example of the American people of having a government for the people, of the people, and by the people, and I believe the time is not far distant when the people of Great Britain will be as free as we are. In many of their late proceedings they have been approaching nearer and nearer to the rule of the people in their country, and, but for the Irish question, I have no doubt that they would approach much nearer. That, however, is a question that we have not to deal with.

I think, under all the circumstances, although I will vote for this bill in any form in which it is likely to be presented—I think the better course for my honorable friend to pursue would be to allow the bill to rest. It can not pass during the present session of Congress. Everybody knows, without going into details, that even if the bill should pass the Senate, in all probability it would not be taken up in the House of Representatives. It can be taken up and considered at the next Congress whenever it shall meet.

I would not take advantage of the company which have undertaken to build this canal. I would pay back to them every dollar they have expended in advance for improvements made in the harbor, in the towns adjoining the canal, and in all parts of the work.

I should be very glad to see another treaty made between Nicaragua and the United States which would provide for the completion of the canal, something that would be acceptable to the United States Government, and that we should proceed to deal with that canal precisely as we have dealt with the great canal upon Lake Superior and the other public works of our country.

Until some arrangement is made between Nicaragua and Costa Rica we can make no progress. The waters that back from the river or the lake will flow over portions of Costa Rica, and we touch her soil at places. It is therefore necessary to have the consent of Costa Rica to anything we do. This bill, or any treaty we can make, should provide for all contingencies. It is better that this bill stand open and rest not upon complaints made against Nicaragua or its minister, not because Nicaragua is only a portion of this new confederacy, but with the confident hope that all difficulties will pass away, that the Government of the United States, with the free assent of the new Republic, will take up and build and complete this canal, which will be, if completed, the greatest achievement for the good of mankind that is likely to happen in the course of a hundred years.

I do not wish to advise my honorable friend what course to pursue, but certainly such is my opinion about it, and I therefore felt bound to express it.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio whether this bill is not substantially the same bill which he, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, or as a member of that committee, duly authorized, reported to the Senate some time ago with highly eulogistic and extended comments?

Mr. SHERMAN. I did so, and I stand by it.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator twice reported such a bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. But, unfortunately, the corporation which has undertaken to build this canal is not able to do it, and we have to assist them or the enterprise will fail. I join with my honorable friend also——

Mr. WHITE. I ask the Senator if at that time it was not evident that it would require the assistance of the United States to carry out the provisions of the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. They sought the assistance of the United States; and if the United States had given them that assistance at the beginning of their enterprise, they probably would not have failed. That indorsement by the Government of the United States would have enabled them to sell their bonds. When we refused to do anything and stood by, leaving the corporation to deal with a problem involving the expenditure of nearly $100,000,000, with actual money of only $5,000,000, it was simply impossible for them to hope to build it. But they did go on until their means were exhausted.

Mr. MORGAN. I am bound to deny the statement of the Senator from Ohio that this company came to the Congress or before the committee and sought its assistance. His report shows exactly the reverse.

Mr. SHERMAN. Did I say "sought its assistance?"

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator said so.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, perhaps I should not have used the word "sought." I think we sought them.

Mr. MORGAN. We sought them.

Mr. SHERMAN. And unfortunately, perhaps, encouraged them too much.

Mr. MORGAN. We have encouraged them all along by reporting bills, two of which the Senator from Ohio reported, the third from that committee I reported when I was chairman of it, the fourth I have now reported as chairman of the select committee. Perhaps we have encouraged them too much. It is rather a thing that a great many men do not like to do—to encourage American citizens—but when a Guatemalan or a Nicaraguan comes here he gets a tremendous amount of whitewash, an immense amount of sugar coating.

The honorable Senator from Ohio is to be the premier of this Government in the next Administration, and his utterances, of course, are ex cathedra. He states that France and Great Britain contributed to the building of the Suez Canal. I beg to correct him in that respect. They did not. On the contrary, Great Britain did all she could with the Sultan of Turkey to prevent the building of the Suez Canal, and she is now only a private stockholder, having bought into the company, after the canal had been completed, through the sagacity of Disraeli. We have suggestions here that the honorable Senator from Ohio means when he gets to be Secretary of State to renegotiate and reestablish the Frelinghuysen-Zavala treaty. I have always said that I preferred that treaty to any other. I have always preferred that method of making the canal to any other, but the Senator will find, when he gets into that little negotiation, that he has to deal with five or six different sets of powers, some of whom have to do with the canal and some of whom have not, and he will find a very tangled web if he expects to get through the Senate without objection, if I am living here at the time, a treaty that does not provide for those American citizens who have been invited by Nicaragua to go there and accept this concession and invited by our Government to do the same thing. If he expects to get such a treaty through without their being compensated for all the losses and damages they have sustained, I must admonish the honorable Senator now that when he has left this Chamber, where we will all regret very much to part with him, he will find that there will be opponents and antagonists here who are determined to stand up always for the rights of our American citizens—always.

One word more, Mr. President. The Senator from Ohio, joining the Senator from Maine, has taken occasion to censure me for remarks I have made on this floor and to impute to me passion and indignation. I confess to you that I have a good deal of indignation at being called up here by Senators upon statements made in a letter by a man who says he is minister from Nicaragua and from this diet, two or three of which have been proved to be absolutely false by statements made here now. He never heard of those objections until he came to this capital. In my opinion, he has no authority from Nicaragua to present those specific objections. He takes the ground that this contract is forfeited the moment the Government of the United States becomes a stockholder in the company. If that is true, when the concession contains a provision for all governments to take stock in it, then, of course, the concession is in the opinion of Nicaragua forfeited now. Then the question arises as to the rights of the American people and the American Government. Because Nicaragua choose to announce the determination to forfeit it, threaten its forfeiture, or to announce the fact that it is forfeited, are we to abandon our course in respect to this matter?

If such weakness is to characterize our course, we will be dealt with just as those Republics choose to deal with us. We have never done an unjust, an unkind, an unfriendly act, and after all this legislation, the passage of these bills, frequent diplomatic correspondence which will be on your desks to-morrow in regard to this canal, at the very last moment, and when the bill was about to pass this body, then in came the letter of objection from this gentleman. It has been made the basis of attack upon the pending bill from the time it came here until this moment. Why communicate these objections to us at that hour, when Nicaragua has reserved to herself, in the act itself, in her maritime company, of which we are not members, the right to accept or reject this measure? Then was the time for him to make his objections. If they were good, he could defeat the measure upon them, and it would not be a law. Then was the time, because we tendered him that opportunity, instead of coming in in advance and undertaking to shape legislation here, not by making overtures to us for carrying on the canal under the concession, but declaring that it is already forfeited and threatening us with forfeiture. And for us, in the presence of such threats and such declarations, to cower down before him is only an invitation extended to him that he will do as he pleases with us hereafter.

Now, I am a friend of the canal; I desire to have it built, but I say that the people of the United States can never build the canal, as the Senator says they ought to build it and control it, when they are led by a set of men who are weak in their councils, by men who are afraid to step forward and demand their rights as they exist, openly and freely. I am not demanding the rights of the people or of the Government of the United States in any spirit of indignation or exasperation, or anything of the kind, but I think we have got them; this country knows we have got them; they have been paid for at a great price both by the Government and by our people; and, that being true, I am not disposed now to lower my flag and run away from my duty because a man comes here at that time of day and makes objections to legislation going on in this body.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VILAS. I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield to me to make a motion with reference to a vote.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no idea that the Senator will get a vote if he makes the motion.

Mr. MORGAN (to Mr. CULLOM). Let him make it.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will not insist upon it. I gave notice yesterday that I would move an executive session to-day.

Mr. VILAS. I am not at all disposed to interfere with the Senator from Illinois unless we can advance the business of the Senate by the course I would suggest. I know he gave the notice yesterday, and he gave it for a little earlier time during the day.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; I did. But I have been yielding because I did not desire to disturb the debate as it was going on, thinking possibly we might get to a vote upon the Nicaraguan question. But there is no indication that there will be a vote to-day.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let us get to a vote.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senate is ready to vote upon the question of the passage of the bill, I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. VILAS. Not upon the final passage of the bill; but I desire to move to recommit it, in view of what has been said on the subject, all of which——

Mr. CULLOM. I withdraw the motion for an executive session, if the Senate can come to a vote on this matter.

Mr. VILAS. I desire to move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations, in view of the suggestions which have been made on the floor, and which seem imperatively to demand it.

Mr. LODGE. The bill does not come from the Committee on Foreign Relations, I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. VILAS. Then I move to commit it to the Committee on Foreign Relations, unless it is the desire that it shall be recommitted to the select committee. I am perfectly willing that it shall be recommitted to the select committee, if that is the desire. But the suggestions which we have heard on the floor of the Senate this afternoon lead to the conclusion that the bill ought to be considered especially by the Committee on Foreign Relations. The manner in which the bill now stands before us is one which requires, it seems to me, that motion rather than the other.

I wish to observe that the suggestions which have been made of the want of authority on the part of the representative of the Greater Republic of Central America are answered by the communication itself. He begins his communication by saying—in the way of information to the Secretary of State—there are "several bills relative to the construction of an interoceanic canal through Nicaragua that have been for some time pending before both Houses of the American Congress," and "his Government recently instructed him to examine them and to make, under certain conditions, suitable representations to his excellency, the Secretary of State." which representations he proceeds to make.

Is it not perfectly obvious from that language that his Government have considered these very bills, and that they have considered every feature of the objections which he now in this manner interposes to them, and that the conditions under which he was instructed to make these representations were simply if he found those features ingrafted upon the bills which, as he says, he observes have been reported in both Houses of Congress, that he would then make these objections.

Now, observe the manner in which he concludes his communication—respectful, kindly, courteous, differential in every word of it:

> The undersigned is convinced of the good faith of the gentlemen who have introduced these bills in both Houses, and of those who advocate their passage; he takes, moreover, pleasure in stating that he recognizes these efforts as the result of the legitimate interest which they feel in behalf of the construction of an interoceanic canal, in which the confederation that he represents is quite as deeply interested. And, in calling attention to the serious objections enumerated, which would render these efforts nugatory, the only object that he has in view is to protect just rights which he thinks are menaced by the bills aforesaid.

Is it conceivable that the objections so presented by that Government in such a respectful, considerate, and careful manner the Senate will not even have considered by the proper committee? He tells us that these objections will render the efforts to proceed in this way nugatory; and he gives us the voice of that friendly Government by instruction.

I submit that every friend of the bill ought to be willing to see that the committee of the Senate which is charged with the due consideration of the relations that exist and ought to exist between this Government and friendly governments, like that of Nicaragua, should take this subject into its care and custody until some proper method is devised.

I am obliged to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] for his kindness, and hope that it may result in a vote upon this question.

Mr. ALDRICH obtained the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. What is his motion, I desire to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. VILAS. The motion is to commit the bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations, although, if the chairman of the select committee prefers a motion to recommit the measure to his committee, I will make it in that form.

Mr. MORGAN. The chairman of the select committee has never any choice between insults; he does not care what the character of them may be. If the Senate wants to vote this bill out of the hands of the select committee, of course it can do so.

Mr. VILAS. I do not think it possible——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair). The Senator from Rhode Island is entitled to the floor.

Mr. VILAS. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will allow me to say one word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. VILAS. I can not think it possible that the Senator from Alabama should for a moment think I meant to convey any insult by a motion of that kind, provided for by the rules of the Senate and often recognized on this floor, and assuredly he can not think that the Senate of the United States is either to insult him or to be deterred from doing its proper duty because of the suggestion from him that such a thing could be possible.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, since the treaty called the Zavala-Frelinghuysen treaty and the communication which has been read were submitted to the Senate, I have been earnestly in favor of the building of the Nicaragua Canal. I have been in favor of building it by the Government of the United States directly, if that were possible, or in favor of building it through the intervention of the corporation which has been created by the Congress of the United States, called the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua. I am still in favor it. I believe that the American people are strongly in favor of the canal. I believe that a majority of the Senate, a large majority, are earnestly in favor of building the canal; and the question which the friends of the measure ought to consider here is not whether its opponents desire it to be sent to one committee or the other, but whether the bill now before the Senate is of such a nature that it ought to pass, to carry out the purpose which the friends of the measure have in view, and, if it is not, what amendments should be suggested to it.

It is the greater, the paramount, question, and I think it is aside from the question we have here whether the gentleman who sent the communication the other day represents one State or the other; whether he was authorized by his Government to do it; whether the Government of Great Britain or the Government of France or any other government has any especial regard in respect to this matter. The question we are to consider is, in the first place, whether the bill before the Senate is the proper one for the United States Congress to pass to carry out the object we have in view, and, in the next place, whether it intrenches upon any of the rights and privileges of sister Republics in Central America. Is there anything in the criticisms he sends here which should command our attention and should cause a change to be made in the measure? I think myself that some of those criticisms have force. One thing is certain, that the United States can not successfully build the canal except with the cooperation and friendship of the States in Central America through whose territory the canal is to be built. It therefore becomes us who desire to have the canal constructed in the first place so to amend the bill as to have the canal constructed in the best possible way and so as to preserve all the rights of these Republics. I think the amendment which has been suggested by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is of itself a sufficient protection to all the rights of the Central American States.

I can not go, and I say this with regret, to the extent to which the Senator from Alabama has gone in his criticisms of the methods by which those suggestions were placed here. I think the representative of that Government had a right, through the State Department, to appear here and state the objections of his Government to the bill which is before the Senate. I think we are bound in good faith to take notice of those objections and give them such force as they are entitled to. As I have said, however, I think the amendment which the Senator from Alabama has suggested covers that question.

The bill now before the Senate proposes to do through the form of a corporation exactly what was done, as I remember, in the case of the Suez Canal. That canal was built by a private corporation, with private stockholders. Subsequently the Government of Great Britain purchased a majority of the stock.

Mr. MORGAN. No.

Mr. ALDRICH. A controlling interest in the stock.

Mr. MORGAN. No, not a majority.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is essentially a controlling interest in the canal.

Mr. MORGAN. Not a controlling interest. The other Governments would not permit Great Britain to do it.

Mr. ALDRICH. They have a large interest.

Mr. MORGAN. They wanted to control it.

Mr. ALDRICH. They have a large interest, which in effect controls it.

Mr. MORGAN. It does not in effect control it, because it is a minority interest, inasmuch as the other Governments——

Mr. ALDRICH. My impression is, Great Britain owns an absolute majority of the stock.

Mr. MORGAN. No.

Mr. ALDRICH. But, entirely aside from the question which I am now discussing, whether Great Britain has one-fifth or one-third or an absolute majority——

Mr. MORGAN. Very good.

Mr. ALDRICH. This proposition is to build the Nicaragua Canal through a company, a large majority of the stock of which is to be owned by the Government of the United States. It is not the building of the canal by the Government of the United States in form, but in essence. It is building the canal by the United States Government in the same way that the Governments of Great Britain and France hold stock in the Suez Canal.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is by holding stock in the corporation.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALDRICH. What other rights does this bill provide shall be maintained, and what else is to be paid except the money paid for building the canal itself?

Mr. MORGAN. None at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. It proposes to pay, as I understand the bill, not exceeding $4,500,000 to the gentlemen who invested their money in stock of the Maritime Canal Company and in developing the canal in the Central American States.

Mr. MORGAN. In bonds.

Mr. ALDRICH. In bonds. It also provides that they shall have $7,000,000 of stock in the new corporation out of a total issue of $100,000,000. All the other stock of the corporation is to be held by the United States and by the States of Nicaragua and Costa Rica. It is essentially, then, an enterprise of these three States; simply that and nothing more. The amendment last suggested by the Senator from Alabama, as I understand it, reserves all the rights of Nicaragua and Costa Rica in this enterprise, whatever they are and of whatever nature they may be, whether given by the concessions or otherwise.

Now, shall we at the present time kill this proposition to build the canal? Because that, in plain terms, is exactly what the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] proposes to do. It is true that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] says, "If you do not do this now, when I become Secretary of State I will negotiate a treaty."

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not say that.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator said that in effect. He says, "If you will let this matter go over we will negotiate a treaty by which the canal shall be built." In the first place, we have no assurance that the States of Nicaragua and Costa Rica will again enter into any such negotiation or conclude any such treaty as that suggested by the Senator from Ohio. We know the great ability of the Senator from Ohio; we know that if it is within the range of possibility, such a treaty will be negotiated; but I say to him that if he is depending for the building of the canal upon the possibility of entering successfully upon negotiations of that kind, I fear very much that he will find himself mistaken, and that the people of the United States will wait indefinitely for the canal to be built. This Government in the present Congress has an opportunity to build the canal in a way to which no man who believes in the project can seriously object.

I have listened to the speeches which have been made upon the other side of the Chamber, and aside from the objection which has been made on the ground that the bill violates some of the provisions of the concessions, I have heard no Senator make any objection to the framework and the scheme of the bill. I have heard some Senators say that there is a provision in the concession that the canal shall not be constructed by the Government of the United States. It is not proposed that it shall be constructed by the Government of the United States. It is to be constructed by a corporation in which the United States will hold stock. That corporation is to issue securities which are to be guaranteed by the United States. The money derived from the sale of those securities must be expended, under the direction of the engineer officers of the Army, in the construction of the canal, and can be expended nowhere else and for no other purpose.

The pending bill is as carefully guarded, I believe, as any other measure that has ever been presented to the Senate of the United States. It is the only way by which the canal can be built. The real friends of the project should understand that any such suggestion or motion as that made by the Senator from Wisconsin means the death knell of the canal, which I believe is very dear to the hearts of the American people. Senators may talk about it, and twist in various ways in regard to it, but the Senator from Wisconsin knows as well as I do that his own purpose is to kill the pending bill and to kill the project for a canal, to which he is and always has been opposed. I trust no such delusive suggestion as that which has been made by the Senator from Ohio—which is in the future so far that no man in this Chamber will live long enough to see it realized—will prevent the real friends of the measure from voting against the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin; and I certainly hope that our regard for the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and for his labors in this behalf through a long series of years will prevent this body from ever sending a bill reported from his committee to another committee for revision. I agree with the Senator from Alabama that a suggestion of that kind is an insult to his committee and to himself.

Mr. CULLOM rose.

Mr. LODGE and others. Let us vote.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senate is ready to vote, I shall desist from making a motion to go into executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the pending motion?

Mr. VILAS. I desire to have a vote on the motion as I made it originally, to recommit the bill to the committee which reported it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the bill be recommitted to the Select Committee on the Construction of the Nicaragua Canal.

Mr. GORMAN. Pending that, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a short executive session.

Mr. MILLS. Oh, no; it is too late. Let us adjourn. We can have an executive session to-morrow morning.

Mr. GORMAN. I have moved that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 27; as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 27, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. DANFORD. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order, the consideration of the conference report on the immigration bill, and I ask for the reading of the report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment to the bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the immigration laws of the United States, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment, and agree to the House bill with amendments as follows:

Strike out, in the first section, all after the words "admission to the United States the following" and insert the following:

"All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read and write the English language or the language of their native or resident country; but a person not so able to read and write who is over 50 years of age and is the parent or grandparent of a qualified immigrant over 21 years of age and capable of supporting such parent or grandparent may accompany such immigrant, or such a parent or grandparent may be sent for and come to join the family of a child or grandchild over 21 years of age similarly qualified and capable."

Strike out the present section 2 and insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. For the purpose of testing the ability of the immigrant to read and write, as required by the foregoing section, the inspection officers shall be furnished with copies of the Constitution of the United States, printed on numbered uniform pasteboard slips, each containing not less than twenty nor more than twenty-five words of said Constitution, printed in the various languages of the immigrants in double small pica type. These slips shall be kept in boxes made for that purpose and so constructed as to conceal the slips from view, each box to contain slips of but one language, and the immigrant may designate the language in which he prefers the test shall be made. Each immigrant shall be required to draw one of said slips from the box and read, and afterwards write out, in full view of the immigration officers, the words printed thereon. Each slip shall be returned to the box immediately after the test is finished, and the contents of the box shall be shaken up by an inspection officer before another drawing is made. No immigrant failing to read and write out the slip thus drawn by him shall be admitted, but he shall be returned to the country from which he came at the expense of the steamship or railroad company which brought him, as now provided by law. The inspection officers shall keep in each box at all times a full number of said printed pasteboard slips, and in the case of each excluded immigrant shall keep a certified memorandum of the number of the slip which the said immigrant failed to read or copy out in writing. If in any case, from any unavoidable cause, the foregoing slips are not at hand for use, the inspection officers shall carefully and thoroughly test the ability of the immigrant to read and write, using the most appropriate and available means at their command, and shall state fully in writing the reasons why the slips are lacking, and describe the substitute method adopted for testing the ability of the immigrant."

Strike out present section 3 and insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893, to facilitate the enforcement of the immigration and contract-labor laws, shall apply to the persons mentioned in section 1 of this act."

Strike out present sections 4, 5, and 6 and insert as follows:

SEC. 4. That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any male alien, who has not in good faith made his declaration before the proper court of his intention to become a citizen of the United States, to be employed on any public works of the United States, or to come regularly or habitually into the United States by land or water for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor, for wages or salary, returning from time to time to a foreign country.

"SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, company, or corporation knowingly to employ any alien coming into the United States in violation of the next preceding section of this act: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the employment of sailors, deck hands, or other employees of vessels, or railroad train hands, such as conductors, engineers, brakemen, firemen, or baggagemen, whose duties require them to pass over the frontier to reach the termini of their runs, or to boatmen or guides on the lakes and rivers on the northern border of the United States.

"SEC. 6. That any violation of the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of this act by any alien or citizen shall be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment for the term of not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That all persons convicted of a violation of section 4 of this act shall be deported to the country whence they came.

"SEC. 7. That notwithstanding the provisions of this or any other existing law, the Secretary of the Treasury may permit aliens to enter this country for the purpose of teaching new arts or industries, under such rules and regulations as he may provide."

Add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 8. That this act shall not apply to persons arriving in the United States from any port or place in the Island of Cuba, during the continuance of the present disorders there, who have heretofore been inhabitants of that island."

Insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 9. That any alien who shall, in violation of this act, or any other existing law, secure entry into the United States without inspection or examination, or through mistake, misrepresentation, collusion, deception, or fraud, may be taken into custody by the properly authorized immigration officers within thirty days after the facts become known to them; and such alien, upon a special inquiry at the most convenient place, conducted according to section 5 of the immigration act of March 3, 1893, shall be dealt with as provided by law for alien immigrants upon their first arrival."

Strike out the present section 7 and insert as follows:

"SEC. 10. That this act shall take effect July 1, 1897."

L. DANFORD,
STANYARNE WILSON,
Managers on part of the House.

HENRY CABOT LODGE,
WM. E. CHANDLER,
CHAS. J. FAULKNER,
Managers on part of the Senate.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If the motion to agree to the conference report should not prevail, will a motion be then in order to send this bill back to conference and instruct the House conferees, or must that motion be made before the vote is taken on the adoption of the report?

The SPEAKER. If the conference report is disagreed to the matter will then be open to further conference at the request of either House. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be competent to refer this report back to the conference committee with instructions to the House conferees?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. DANFORD. Mr. Speaker, as to the time the discussion on this report shall occupy, it has been suggested by the chairman of the committee that it run until a quarter past 4 o'clock this afternoon, and that at that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered and the vote taken. I ask unanimous consent to that arrangement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DANFORD] asks unanimous consent that the discussion proceed until 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., when the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, in connection with that request, I would suggest that gentlemen who desire to speak upon this question, but who may not have time to speak under the proposed order, be permitted to print their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HENDERSON. For ten days.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. For ten days.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put that as a separate proposition unless the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] desires otherwise.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I hope there will be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DANFORD] is that the debate continue until fifteen minutes after 4 o'clock this afternoon, when the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. PARKER. I object. It appears to me we should have more time.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. PARKER. At the request of the gentleman from Missouri, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] asks unanimous consent that leave to print remarks on this question be granted for ten days to members desiring to avail themselves of the privilege. Is there objection?

Mr. TERRY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word. Perhaps I did not make myself fully understood in the parliamentary inquiry which I submitted a while ago. I understand that under the rules when a conference committee has reported, that is the end of that conference; and therefore the Chair was correct in the answer that he made a while ago. But in case we decide to have a new conference, and conferees are appointed, can we not instruct our new conferees when a new conference is entered upon to agree to the Senate amendments with certain things eliminated?

The SPEAKER. The House can, of course, instruct its conferees, although it is not usual to do so until there has been at least one "full and free conference."

Mr. TERRY. That is what I wanted to get at.

Mr. PERKINS. Upon this proposition to grant leave to print for ten days, while I am not disposed to object to what may be the disposition of the House, I think such leave ought not, probably, to be extended more than five days, and with the understanding that the remarks furnished to be printed be confined to what might be spoken on the floor upon this bill. With such a modification of the proposition, I will not object.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] will accept that suggestion.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri accept the modification proposed?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked that members be allowed to print remarks on the pending proposition for five days, nothing to be printed that could not be spoken on the floor. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DANFORD] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DANFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to confine my remarks to a few propositions, and I shall be brief in my statement of them. In the first section the conference report changes the House bill. The House bill applied the test of illiteracy only to males, leaving females to come in without the application of any test of illiteracy whatever—leaving them to come in only under the provisions of existing law. The conference report includes females as well as males in the excluded class, if they be illiterate. It is to questions growing out of this feature of the case that the principal objections come from those who oppose the report.

The House bill excluded all male illiterates, and permitted all females to come in without the application of that test. I hear it said that if the bill as proposed by the conference committee should become a law, we will be separating families. Now, Mr. Speaker, as the bill passed the House, no matter how bright or competent, no matter with what degree of accomplishments the wife might come as an immigrant to our shores, if she brought with her an illiterate husband he could not enter. As to the proposition made in the conference report, it refers to both the husband and the wife. I agree that if an admissible wife should come to these shores accompanied by a husband who is not admissible under this test, then if the wife proposed to take up her residence here there would be a separation of families. I want to address myself to this proposition, which is urged in opposition to the conference report, and I want to do so with reference to what are the known conditions of things so far as immigration goes.

If this test is to be applied in the future, then it will be known in all the countries whence our immigration comes that the test will be applied before admission to citizenship in this country. There is no trouble about knowledge on that subject on the other side of the water. There is a great and mighty agency at work. One of the agents of the steamship lines engaged in transporting immigrants to our shores said before the House committee, "We have our agents in every village and hamlet of Europe." This was said in the discussion of what was known as the Stone bill, and it shows that there need be no concern about this matter, for the reason that the steamship companies are looking anxiously to see that they do not bring to this country inadmissible immigrants, whom they would be obliged to return at their own expense. And I want to say, in passing, that this very proposition is also contained in the bill as it comes from conference. It applies that particular provision of law to those who shall come under this bill as well as under the law as compiled in 1893, I believe.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there will be very few persons attempt to come to this country who are not qualified under the law. Very few families will attempt to come to our shores who are not admissible immigrants in all respects, the husband and wife, and the children, if any there be, over 16 years of age. But this is spoken of mainly with reference to the separation of husband and wife. I would suggest that if perchance the husband and wife shall pass the vigilance of the steamship companies, who are engaged in throwing immigrants on our shores at the rate of hundreds of thousands every year, when they do come and learn what the law is, there need be no separation of husband and wife, for the illiterate husband can accompany his admissible wife back whence they came.

I admit, Mr. Speaker, that the bill was drawn for the purpose of excluding immigrants of this character. It was drawn with that purpose in view. I do not see that it will work any great hardships to those who may propose in the future to come to this country, in consideration of the propositions I have already made: First, that our laws are well known in every city and hamlet of the old country; and, in the second place, that if perchance a family divided on the question of illiteracy should reach our shores, there need be no division of the family.

Now, there is one other proposition contained in the report of the conference committee and in the bill brought out of the conference that differs to some extent from the bill as it passed the House. It was provided simply that illiterates of a certain class should not come to this country, but it provided no test by which the question of illiteracy should be ascertained. That was left possibly to the whims of the agents at New York or wherever the immigrant might land. This bill provides a test. That test is that the immigrant shall be qualified to read twenty words of the Constitution of the United States and write the same. The test contained in the Senate bill is five lines of the Constitution. This reduces it to about three lines of the Constitution, because an average line of the Constitution, taking up almost any edition, will average from five to eight words to the line, and twenty words will make about three lines of the Constitution. I want to suggest that there is no better specimen of the English language extant than the Constitution of the United States.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these are the main differences between the conference report and the House bill as it passed this body during the last session of Congress. There are very many reasons why we ought to do something on this subject of immigration. Each of the great political parties of the country have from time to time and from year to year promised that they would in some way restrict immigration. This is the first measure that has been proposed for a number of years that extends the disabilities of immigrants; and it extends them in a direction, in my judgment, that is entirely proper, not alone because of illiteracy, but for many other reasons which could be assigned.

Now, as to the number of illiterates seeking our shores from year to year. I have before me the report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration for the year ending June 30, 1896. You will find on page 30 of the report that the number of illiterates who reached this country during that fiscal year was 66,314, out of a total of 263,709. Of this illiteracy a very large proportion came from southern and eastern Europe. The percentage of illiteracy from the Scandinavian States was exceedingly small, less than 1 per cent; from Denmark it was but .95, from Norway 1.18, from Sweden 1.16, from Germany less than 3 per cent, from England about 5 per cent, and Ireland only 7 per cent. But when you come to the countries of eastern and southern Europe the percentage runs up to over 60 of illiterates. So that the immigration that comes to us from Germany and from the Scandinavian states, and the countries of western and northern Europe, will be affected very little by the passage of the act. It will not reach the servant girls who come from Sweden, Norway, and Germany.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. DANFORD. I will yield for an inquiry.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Where is the census of illiterates to which you have referred taken, and under what provision of law?

Mr. DANFORD. It is contained in the report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration.

Mr. DOLLIVER. But is there any provision of law requiring the orderly taking of such a census?

Mr. DANFORD. I do not know how it has been done, but it has been done and will be found in the report of the Commissioner. Examinations have been made within the last year in view of pending legislation.

I say, then, Mr. Speaker, that, so far as the immigration that comes to us from western Europe and from northern Europe is concerned, it will be affected very little by the proposed law. There is a demand for some legislation on this subject, a demand that reaches us as we sit here from day to day and scan our public journals. There is not a great city in the North that is not organizing charities for the purpose of feeding men and women who are able to work. In my own Congressional district, where we have no large cities, the farmers are providing the coal miners and the men who have worked in the mills and factories of that district with the cheap grain and the cheap vegetables from their farms, in order to keep them from starving. Associations are being organized everywhere, outside of the regularly constituted charities of the land, for the purpose of relieving the hunger and want of the people of our large centers at this time.

This immigration that has been thrown upon our shores in the last fifteen years has mainly gone to the great centers of population. A portion of the Scandinavians and of the Germans who immigrate go onto the farms and become producers of grain; but in the main the immigration seeks the great centers of population, and the social statistics of the censuses of 1880 and 1890 show that whilst we had a total per capita increase of about 24 per cent in the decade, the increase in our cities having a population of 10,000 and upward was 60 per cent, and that does not include all that were thrown upon our shores in that decade. In our mining centers and in our smaller centers of population these people have congregated in great numbers. I was struck with a remark in one of the morning newspapers a few days ago, that if we could start every wheel in this country, and give every man, woman, and child employment at fair wages, in the present condition of our immigration laws there would, within twelve months, again be 250,000 or 300,000 idle men in the land. These idle men and idle women must be dealt with and must be heard. I do not speak here for the class of weary men who never want to work, but I speak for the men who want to labor, who have come here from the old country to work, who are out of employment, and who beseech of this Congress some legislative action in this direction as well as in other directions.

Now, there is one other feature of this bill, known as the Corliss amendment, by which it is proposed, at least in some measure, to stop the coming to this country of what are known as the "birds of passage"—men who seek our shores at the beginning of the working season, who work for the better wages paid in this country during the summer, and go back to their native country, taking their money with them, leaving their families there, perchance, and then return again in the spring. Of that class who came within the last year there were almost 49,000. The Commissioner in his report, in speaking on this subject, says:

> Some aliens come and go so often that old officials at the immigrant station recognize them. They are each year listed as new arrivals. These immigrants are not considered desirable, as they have no love for our country or its institutions, pay no taxes or assessments, contribute nothing to the common weal, but, after taking advantage of the high wages paid for labor, carry their earnings with them to spend in a foreign country.

The statistics of immigration show that during the year ending June 30, 1896, there were between 48,000 and 49,000 of these immigrants, returning from spending their winters and their money in the Old World, or Canada, to take the labor of the American citizen. We think this legislation is in the right direction. I concede that there is great trouble in dealing with these birds of passage, and if anyone will attempt to draft a law that will in any way exclude them or catch them, it will probably prove a more difficult matter than it is imagined to be until the attempt is made. This bill is so drawn that their coming must be habitual.

This seemed to be the best that we could bring out of the conference, so far as that proposition went. This bill is not nearly so drastic as the bill that the House passed at the last session. That bill went much further than the conference report goes.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Will my friend permit another inquiry?

Mr. DANFORD. Yes.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I observe that the House bill requires intending immigrants to read and write the English language or some other language, and that the Senate bill requires the immigrant to read the language of his native country or some other language.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. DANFORD. His native or resident country.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I speak of the Senate bill. The conference report appears to depart from the language of both bills, and requires him to read the language of his native or resident country.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is correct.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I should like to know the object of changing the language of both bills?

Mr. DANFORD. Well, the object of changing this language, at least one of the objects, was to reach a class of people who have been thrown on our shores—40,000 within the last fiscal year. They are known as the Russian Jews; men who have been persecuted and driven out of Russia, who have been made to move on as they passed across continental Europe, who have almost drained the magnificent charities of the city of London, and I noticed in one of the New York dailies a few days ago that the Associated Hebrew Charities in that city, for the first time in their history, were asking for aid outside of their particular sect. They are being thrown upon our country after having been made to move on across continental Europe, and after having drained the charities of England they are being thrown upon this country, and it was for the purpose of reaching that class, I confess, I consented to that change.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Does that reach any other class? Are there not residents of Europe that speak a language, but not the language of their native or resident country, who are good people?

Mr. DANFORD. There may be a very few of them. Their native or resident country includes almost every immigrant that would come to our shores.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. If the gentleman will permit me, I would call his attention to the Mennonites, a class of people who come into my State, a most desirable class, who speak the German language. They were, however, born in Russia and resided in Russia; but they do not speak the Russian language, and yet they are one of the best classes of people on the face of the globe.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If they speak their own language or the language of the country in which they reside, they are admissible.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. They were not born in Germany.

Mr. DANFORD. I decline to yield further.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. They are admissible under the law.

Mr. HITT. I desire to ask the gentleman when he says residents of a "country," not "nation," was it intended by the committee when they said that that was the language of the country where the man lived, rather than the nation controlling that country? There are a number of people living in a province of Russia where the German language is spoken, and the German language is the language of "his country."

Mr. DANFORD. It would be his native language.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That is what anybody would construe it to mean.

Mr. DANFORD. Now, Mr. Speaker, the provisions of the bill as it comes out of the conference are different in very few material points from the bill as it originally passed the House. There has been an attempt in both the House and the Senate to restrict immigration to some extent. I believe that it is demanded—I believe that it is demanded by the people of this country, especially in the Northern States, from one ocean to the other. At least, we have no disposition whatever to in the least trench upon the rights of our naturalized citizens or to do anything that will make it a hardship for desirable immigrants to come to our shores; and while I shall remember in any vote that I may give the debt I owe in that direction, I ask members on this floor who are so anxious that every opportunity shall be given and every door opened to bring classes into this country and to bring immigration here, to remember that there are in this land of ours millions upon millions of men and women "to the manner born." Their ancestors have been here hundreds of years. They marched across the continent from ocean to ocean, and they have established here a civilization we believe to be the highest in the world, and I believe that we owe to them, so far as in our power lies, to elevate American labor. I believe that in elevating the plain people of this land we elevate all the people. Our fathers have stood by the schoolhouse in all the generations that they have occupied this country, as they have gone through the forests and across the prairies. It was their "pillar of fire by night and of cloud by day," and within its walls and on its rude benches there has been trained and educated mentally, morally, and physically as grand a race of men and women as the world ever knew.

Mr. Speaker, we owe something to them. We owe something to their demands; and whilst I shall listen and listen favorably to the demands that are made here by our naturalized citizens, it seems to me that we ought at least for this one time to listen to the very general demand that is made upon us for restriction in our immigration laws. That is a demand that comes to us. It is the promise of both the great political parties; and I trust, Mr. Speaker, that we will in some small measure at least keep it in this bill. I say in some small measure, for this bill does not by any means go as far as I would go in this matter. I believe that in this question of labor, in view of the condition of labor in this country now, there is greater danger to the Republic than anything else that threatens it; and I do not mean by that that labor, the honest toil of this country, is not loyal to it. They are as loyal and much more so than many other classes of our people. But when men are hungry, when men are driven to live upon charity, it does not make good American citizens to live in that way. And I beg of this House to go as far at least as the conference report has gone upon this question. There is no general rule that does not in some instances work hardship. I do not desire to work hardship, and it was not the purpose of the committee to work hardships in this matter, but to bring in a bill that would have some effect in restricting immigration. [Loud applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely trust that the motion to agree to the conference report will not prevail, and that the House may order another conference and instruct its conferees in accordance with the suggestions I now beg leave to submit to the House.

The report, by the way, is subject to a point of order, because it is not accompanied, as is required by Rule XXIX, with a statement "sufficiently explicit," as the rule says, "to inform the House what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate." How necessary and important such a statement is, especially in the case of this bill, will appear from the explanation I am about to make, if my colleagues will kindly give me their attention. I will waive the point of order, Mr. Speaker, because I prefer to have this matter decided upon its merits rather than upon a technicality.

I refused to sign and present to the House the conference report upon this bill, mainly for two reasons: First, because the effect of the bill in its present shape will separate families, husbands and wives, mothers and children; and, second, because the bill not only bars illiterates, but goes much farther, and in specific terms admits only those who can read and write "the language of their native or resident country." Both of these provisions are entirely new. They were contained neither in the House bill nor in the Senate bill, but were inserted in conference, against my protest and vote. This shows that I was justified when, some weeks ago, I expressed the fear on this floor that if this bill went to conference it would come back in a shape which we might find it difficult to explain to our constituents, and which might offend the sentiment of a great many of them. This has literally come true; but as soon as the scope of these drastic propositions is fully understood I am satisfied that my appeals to the sense of justice, fairness, and humanity of this great House of Representatives will not be in vain.

The bill adds to the excluded classes the following:

All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read and write the English language or the language of their native or resident country.

What does this mean, and what would be its effect? If the purpose of this measure is to exclude illiterates—and this is generally conceded—then this phraseology is devised not only in direct contravention of that purpose, but also with entire disregard of the social and ethnological conditions of the world. And yet, Mr. Speaker, how necessary is a study of these conditions if we would legislate intelligently upon a subject of this kind. Knowledge and reason, and not prejudice and passion, will, I trust, still prevail, even in legislation of this character. There are millions of people born and living in European countries and in the countries south of us who, although not illiterates, can not speak the language of their native or resident country, and who would consequently be barred under the provisions of this bill.

Take, for instance, the Germans of the Baltic provinces of Russia, a sturdy, thrifty class of farmers who have turned that northern country along the Baltic Sea into fertile farms and blooming flower gardens—every one of those people would be barred under this bill because, while German in language, they are subjects of the Czar, and if they came here and were required to read and write the American Constitution in the Russian language, "the language of their native or resident country," they would have to admit their inability to do so, and would consequently be sent back to the country whence they came.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Could they not read it in English?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I will say in answer to this question that these people have maintained their individuality in Russia for several hundred years and many generations of them have been born on Russian soil.

A MEMBER. Is not that their native language, then?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Not under this bill, because this bill says the language of their "country;" it does not say "province;" it does not say "county;" it does not say "kingdom" or "principality;" it says "country;" and the country of these people is Russia.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is it not the intent of the bill to require the immigrant to read the language prevailing in the neighborhood from which he comes?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. This is the intent, perhaps, but it is my intention to ask the House to refer this bill back for the purpose of correcting it so that every doubt of its intent may be removed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Suppose the class of whom the gentleman speaks should be excluded, how is any injustice inflicted upon them?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It would restrict immigration. That is the gentleman's objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is raising another question, namely, the general question as to the benefits or disadvantages of immigration. That question I am not now discussing, but I shall touch upon it later on. My present point is that, under the guise of an intelligence test, we should not exclude people who can read and write.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Before the gentleman leaves that branch of the subject, I wish he would include also, under the class he has mentioned, the residents of Finland in the Russian Empire. Finland was the fairest part of Sweden at the opening of this century. The people use the Finnish and the Swedish languages and they are highly educated. There is a large and valuable immigration to this country from Finland. The ancestors of those people have been for at least a century born in Russia, but they do not speak Russian, and therefore, according to the gentleman's view, would be excluded under the operation of this bill.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is true.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be enlightened on this point, because upon my understanding of it will depend my vote on this bill. The provision in the bill reads:

All persons physically capable over 16 years of age who can not read and write the English language or the language of their native or resident country.

Now, I want to ask my friend [Mr. BARTHOLDT] whether he claims as to the Mennonites, for instance, who for many generations have resided in Russia in settlements and who speak the German language, not the Russian, that this bill in its present form would be so construed as to exclude them rather than be liberally construed, so that, if speaking German, the language of the resident people of the region whence they come——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The language of this proposed bill, if the gentleman will permit me, can not be construed so liberally as to admit those people, because here are the specific terms "native or resident country." Under this phraseology those people would be absolutely barred.

Mr. CANNON. If I thought so, I would vote against the conference report.

Mr. HITT. What would be done in cases where there is no national language, as in Switzerland? Would this bill exclude every person coming from Switzerland?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is a very proper inquiry. In reply to the question of my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT], I will say that in Switzerland there are three languages recognized as official, German, French, and Italian, and consequently persons coming from that country would not be barred under this bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. As to the Baltic provinces, is not the German language recognized as the language of that country or that province?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I think not.

Mr. HOPKINS. As one of the languages of that province?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. There is only one language recognized as the official language of Russia, and that is the Russian language.

Mr. TAWNEY. In what language are the proceedings of the courts transacted?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I can not say with positiveness. But I am coming to all these points, if gentlemen will permit me to continue.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to Alsace and Lorraine.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am coming to that.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. In those provinces, now a part of Germany, the people, as the gentleman knows, speak the French language.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, as has already been said, the Mennonites of southern Russia ought to be mentioned in this connection. These people are often called German Quakers, and we have already made their acquaintance upon American soil, particularly in Pennsylvania, Nebraska, and the great Northwest. Their religion commands them to oppose war and strife, to leave their doors without locks or keys, and to regard every human being as their brother or sister. They in reality practice all the virtues of good citizenship with rare conscientiousness. They are all well educated; and those of them who have come to us have invariably brought considerable amounts of money with them. Under this bill every one of those would be barred because they are Russian subjects, and the language of their country is the Russian language, while in fact they can speak no language but the German—the same language, by the way, which is being used at the Court of St. James and at the castle of the Czar at St. Petersburg.

There are hundreds of thousands of French living in Alsace-Lorraine who have not yet acquired a knowledge of the German language. Every one of them would be barred under this bill. Not one of them would be permitted ever to raise his eyes to that great gift of the French Republic to ours—the Goddess of Liberty in the harbor of New York.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is it not a fact that in Alsace-Lorraine the people as a rule can speak both the German and the French languages—that even the girls who work in the fields at the hardest kind of labor are able to speak both languages?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is undoubtedly a fact. There are hundreds of thousands of people in Alsace-Lorraine who speak both languages. But my statement that there are also hundreds of thousands of French there who can speak the French and no other language is also true. And these it is proposed to exclude.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman permit me a suggestion?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have an impression that the gentleman may have given too narrow a definition to the word "country" as used in this bill, and may possibly have confused it with the word "nation." I do not understand that the word is restricted in the manner which the gentleman assumes it to be. I find in Webster, under the word "country," the first definition given is, "A tract of land; a region as distinguished from any other region; and with a personal pronoun, the region of one's birth, permanent residence, or citizenship." It seems to me, in view of this definition, that the language of this bill would be perfectly clear in its application to people who speak the language of the region or vicinage in which they reside.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that the spirit of the law would require that very construction.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Maine, that while the suggestion he makes may be true, I do not desire to run the risk in legislation of any construction which may be erroneous and unjust. I do not think it is the intention of the House to run any risk in this regard. And for this reason I ask the reference of the bill back to the committee, for the purpose of perfecting it in these particulars.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Does not the bill provide that the immigrant may select the language in which the test shall be made?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It is true that under another section the immigrant may select the language in which he proposes to be examined. But he is confined to the limits prescribed by section 1, which says "the English language or the language of his native or resident country." To this extent he has a right to choose, but not further.

Mr. MILES. Is it not true also that the slips in the box will have only English words, etc., as provided in the first section, from which to select?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Is not that an interpretation of the gentleman himself, and not of the bill?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman is correct; slips would be provided only in languages of existing countries. There are many countries throughout continental Europe in which there are three, four, or five different languages spoken, and in which only one or two are recognized as the official languages. Apply the law to these conditions and the effect is evident. The one man who is barely learned enough to read and write might be admitted, and another would be excluded by the language of this section, even though he were a great engineer, an artist, a composer, or some other valuable addition to the citizenship of our land. No German, Scandinavian, or Frenchman, born in the vast territory south of us upon the American continent, between the Rio Grande and Cape Horn, can ever put his foot upon American soil as an immigrant if he can not read and write our Constitution in the Spanish language, which is the official language of those countries.

Is it possible that the House should be willing to go to this length? I can not believe it, Mr. Speaker. The majority of the House undoubtedly favor a reasonable and fair educational test; such a bill, for instance, as we passed last summer, and which, as you will remember, I supported. But I can not believe it to be the intention of the House to unfairly discriminate between the different languages and recognize one and not the other, irrespective of the intelligence, the character, or financial standing of the immigrant himself, and under the guise of an illiteracy test shut out not only the illiterates, but also those who have acquired educational qualifications, perhaps even in a high degree, but happen to be unable, because of the geography of their birth, to come within the language qualification of this bill.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will yield for a question, with pleasure.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Does the gentleman consider it a great hardship in exchange for the great boon of American citizenship to require an immigrant to come up to a sufficient measure of the very moderate provisions of this bill? Would it take the intelligent man, such as the engineer or the artist he describes, long to enable him to comply with the exceedingly moderate provisions of the bill, in exchange for the great boon of American citizenship?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In answer to the gentleman from New Jersey, I would say that if we want to go that far let us vote on a proposition of this kind; but do not legislate by indirection. If you say to the people of the old country, "We have passed a bill requiring an educational test, and if you can comply with that test you can be admitted," then let us confine the requirement to this intelligence qualification; but do not by indirection exclude persons who can in every way comply with such a test merely because they can not do so in the language whence they come.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Would it interrupt the gentleman to ask him a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am always pleased to yield to my distinguished friend from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What is the purpose, as you understand it—having traveled the road of the bill—in the requirement that the immigrant should read any language? What is the purpose contemplated?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The object of an educational test, in general, is to restrict immigration to those who are able to read and write, and such a qualification is exacted upon the theory that men or women who have been raised in surroundings with sufficient regard for the benefit of such elementary education are more desirable and better immigrants than those who are totally ignorant.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is what I supposed. Now the limitation is to the United States first, and then, failing in the United States, the language of the countries of their nativity or residence?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, sir. Now, what would be the effect upon this bill of changing that language, striking out the words—

Country of nativity or residence—

And inserting the words—

Some civilized country?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Some other language.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If you desire to define it—

Some civilized country with which the United States has diplomatic relations.

Would not the educational test, so far as the development of intelligence is concerned, be the same in its effect? And would not that get rid of all this question that you are making in opposition to this bill?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I think the gentleman, by his limitation to countries with which we have diplomatic relations, will do something that he does not intend to do.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well, then. Say "some other language."

Mr. BARTHOLDT (continuing). For the reason that there are languages that have no country behind them, so to speak. But I will come to that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, what I am trying to get at is, Would not the educational test be just as valuable if the immigrant could read the Constitution of the United States in some language, as to limit it to the language of the country in which he was born?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Undoubtedly; that is our contention.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? I am after information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON]?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman has pointed out large classes of people, whom he thinks are worthy immigrants, who would be excluded by the language of this act. Now, is not the peculiar language of this act indispensable in order to include a much larger class of undesirable people who, while they may be able to read and write certain languages, are, nevertheless, by reason of their character and habits, absolutely incompetent to become good citizens?

Mr. MILES. Who, for instance?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is another question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The Polish Jews, for instance. I mention them simply as a type.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If the House desires to go beyond the educational test, and discriminate not only between languages, but even between religions, as the gentleman from Indiana suggests, let us vote upon such a proposition directly. I should certainly have to oppose it; but let such a proposition come up by itself, and not in connection with a bill which, upon the face of it, simply provides an educational test.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman has not answered the question which I asked him. As a matter of fact, is not the peculiar language of this bill, to which he objects, necessary to exclude a very large class of people who, while they may be able to read and write, are lacking in other qualifications necessary to make them good American citizens?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I suppose the gentleman refers to the Hebrews, of whom I shall speak later on.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I refer to no particular class.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I thought the gentleman mentioned them.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Have you any statistics showing the number of individuals who would be excluded under this bill, or is there a good deal of imagination about it?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question, I shall have to refer my friend from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] to the statistics published by the Commissioner of Immigration. These statistics are unreliable, however, for this reason: They were not obtained in a scientific way or by census officials, but were obtained at Ellis Island or Castle Garden simply by asking the newcomer, male or female, "Can you read?" and "Can you write?"

The answers to those questions are all the information we have upon the subject. These statistics have been published. They show, for instance, that under this bill 7 per cent of our Irish friends would be excluded. I have statistics from scientific European sources, however, which show that under this bill, if properly enforced, about 25 per cent of the Irish will be excluded. So altogether, including about 50 per cent of the Italians and Portuguese and Spanish, and so forth, I think the number who will be excluded of our present immigration will be about one-third.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Those persons mentioned by the gentleman would be excluded under a bill which he says he would help to pass, would they not? For instance, the 25 per cent of the Irish and the 50 per cent of the Italians would be excluded under the gentleman's idea of a bill.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. This would about be the effect of the bill as previously passed by the House.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Well, then, this is not an objection to the present bill.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Oh, but this is not the question now.

Mr. MAHON. I wish to ask the gentleman a question for information. I see the first section of the bill, as contained in the proposed report, says:

> The language of their native or resident country.

The gentleman knows that in a great many countries several languages are used. Then is not the second section explanatory of the first?

> Printed in the various languages of the immigrants in double small pica type.
> And the immigrant may designate the language in which he prefers the test shall be made.

How does the gentleman explain that?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. May I add to it, that any language taught in any country is the language or a language of that country?

Mr. MAHON. The second section says that the immigrant may choose the language.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I have answered the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania before. I say the languages are limited by the first section, and the slips provided for in the second section, to which the gentleman refers, will be printed only in the languages recognized in the first section.

Mr. DANFORD. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him, is not that the very reason of the language in the bill there, that it shall be their "native language," or of their resident country, rather than their "national language"?—because a national language would be an even more restrictive term than "resident language."

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It all depends, Mr. Speaker, upon the interpretation of the term "country." I hold that the immigration commissioners would be forced, under the language of this bill, to interpret the term "country" to mean that when a man comes from Russia to this country he must be able to speak the Russian language, and if he can not speak the Russian language, they would have to send him back.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Missouri answer a question for information?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman was a member of the conference committee?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman understand that this provision was intended by indirection to exclude certain classes of immigrants; that is, that this wording was meant for the purpose of excluding from our shores certain classes of people who could not read and write the language of the country of their nativity or residence—for the purpose of excluding certain classes even if they could read and write?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I can not say what the intention of my colleagues of the conference committee was when they insisted on this phraseology; but if it was their intention by indirection to exclude those who are able to read and write, while they proposed to offer a literary test to the country, then I am against their proposition.

Mr. MONDELL. I would ask the gentleman if we would not reach this matter much better by simply saying that the immigrant must read or write the English language or some other recognized language?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That would be perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Would not that admit a very great class of undesirable people?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I think not.

As I have said before, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. COX. I want to draw this point out distinctly, if I can. Suppose I were to present a person desiring to come to this country who could neither read nor write in any language, but is an honest, temperate, and worthy man, is he excluded?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. He is excluded.

Mr. COX. Suppose his wife could read and write, and was an intelligent woman, do I understand, then, that she could come in and he has to stay at home?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. This would be the case.

As I have said before, Mr. Speaker, there are languages with no country behind them, if I may so put it. If this bill is enacted, the people speaking them could never see the sun rise from the mountain tops of the Alleghanies and Rockies or in the valleys of the Hudson and Mississippi. Take the Polish and the Hebrew languages for an example. Poland was divided between Germany, Austria, and Russia, and while there is a Polish language, there is no Poland; and every Pole under this bill would be barred, even if he were a professor or a constitutional lawyer, if he could speak but one language. Even Kosciusko, were he living, could not land here if he were unable to speak the language of the oppressors of his country.

I know there are those, Mr. Speaker, who would shut and bolt the doors of the Republic against the Hebrews. Opinions differ on this point. But we all know they are a persecuted race; and if I were asked by my constituents now, in the dawn of the twentieth century, to lend my hand to their further persecution, I should prefer to return to my sanctum, take my pen in hand and write editorials against such an inhuman proposition. [Applause.] They have their great faults, just as we have; and in their case it is undoubtedly due to the fact that they have been persecuted for more than a thousand years. But they are nevertheless an art-loving, peaceful race, a race which has given the world some of its greatest actors, authors, and composers.

What I mainly object to in this connection is legislation by indirection. If it is true, what some of my friends on this floor contend for, that we need no more immigrants, let us honestly say so. If "the land of the free and the home of the brave" is hereafter to be forbidden ground for any nations or races, such as the Hebrews, let us vote on a direct proposition of this kind. In the last campaign we heard a good deal about national honor and uprightness. This is the time to practice it by legislation. Let us, at all events, thoroughly understand what we are doing. The adoption of the clause to which I take exception will be the first step, Mr. Speaker, of the American Congress to discriminate not only against nations, but also against religions. The American people have always regarded the Jew-baiting in Europe with just contempt, and especially so the treatment of the Jewish subjects at the hands of the Czar, which some years ago aroused the honest indignation of every warm-hearted man and woman on this side of the Atlantic. If it is intended to force Uncle Sam into this same business, and to deprive him of the right to ever again express sympathy with the downtrodden of Europe, all that is necessary to accomplish that object and to crystallize the prejudice of the few into the law of the land is to pass this bill as it now reads.

The next feature of the bill to which I object, and which I am satisfied the House will not approve, is also contained in section 1. It is there provided that any admissible immigrant over 21 years of age may bring with him, or may send for his parents or grandparents, if over 50 years of age, and if the immigrant is able to support them. Not a word is said, however, about permitting the immigrant who is qualified to land under this bill to bring his wife, the mother of his children, with him if she is not so qualified; which means necessarily the separation of families, pure and simple. Against this inhuman provision I protest, Mr. Speaker, not in the name of any party, or nationality, or religion. I protest against it in the name of humanity, because it is the cause of humanity that is being violated by this section.

Let me illustrate the proposition by an example. A citizen of another country, the head of a family, has determined to immigrate to the United States. He has sold all his goods and chattels to raise the necessary money for the voyage across the ocean of his wife, his children, and himself. He has bid good-by to the friends of his youth, telling them that he is going in search of a better country, a better home, and a brighter future. When he arrives at Ellis Island he is subjected to the examination. He passes it successfully. Then the thumbscrews are put upon his wife. She is a loving wife, a good mother to her children. She can cook a good meal and knows all about her household duties, but she can not read or write. She was in the habit of going to church and understood the sermons well, because she used to repeat their lessons to her children, but she can not herself handle a pen. She can not read in books, because she was raised in poor circumstances, and instead of going to school she had to work in kitchen, barn, and field. If this conference report is adopted, Mr. Speaker, this worthy woman, this good wife and mother, will be ruthlessly torn from husband and children and sent back to the country whence she came, or else the whole family must return with her. Is this the sense of the House? I am positive it is not.

In extenuation of this cold-blooded proposition it will be said on this floor that these people need not come. True; they need not come. But they will come, Mr. Speaker, unless you pass a law stopping immigration altogether, and if any steamship agent, or consul, or other person, should inform a father of a family on the other side of the ocean that he could not take his wife to the United States, that man would surely smile like the incredulous Thomas, and would say, "That is another of those lies they tell about America." This because he knows that there is no country on the face of the globe to which he could not go, if he himself were qualified, with his wife and his children. One great argument against slavery was that it caused the separation of families. That great issue was decided in favor of humanity and liberty, and shall we now, at this late day, pass a law which, in its inhuman and cruel effects, will be open to the same objections as the institution of slavery?

It may be said that these newcomers are not yet members of our body politic, and that consequently we need not concern ourselves about them. I ask my friends on both sides of the Chamber, will this excuse be admissible in the court of humanity? Will it be valid before the forum of the culture and civilization of the nineteenth century? We have an undoubted right, Mr. Speaker, to board a train going in the direction of the Middle Ages, but I hope Congress will refuse to be the locomotive. We should also remember in this connection that at this very moment there are perhaps thousands or tens of thousands of immigrants who have come here ahead of their families in order to establish homes for themselves, and who are even now contemplating invitations to their wives and children to join them in the United States. If those wives and mothers should happen to be illiterates, their reunion with their husbands would be impossible under this bill.

Mr. LACEY. May I ask the gentleman a question in that connection? This bill requires that in case of the failure of an immigrant to pass the examination the individual shall be returned. In such a case where there are two together, what would become of the other individual, the one that did pass? Would not he or she be left in this country, while the one that failed to pass would be sent back?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, sir; and that is one of the objections which I have to this bill—that it separates families.

Mr. LACEY. There is no authority, then, for charging to the steamship company the expense of returning them both?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No. The one who is qualified to pass under this bill may be admitted; or, if he desires to return with his wife and children to the country whence he came, he may do so at his own expense.

Mr. BOATNER. Does the gentleman understand that under the provisions of this bill a foreigner who has settled in the United States and acquired domicile or citizenship here is prohibited from sending to the old country for members of his family or bringing them in unless they are qualified under the provisions of this act?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. He can send for his wife and children at any time, but if his wife is not qualified she would not be admitted, as the bill now reads.

Mr. BOATNER. Or any other member of his family—his father or his mother.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It is being urged in defense of this inhuman provision that these wives and mothers should first apply themselves to study, and shall learn how to read and write before coming here. But I ask you, my friends, can they do so? How shall they do it? Are they expected as women of 30, 40, or 50 years of age to attend the village school? They are mostly poor people, hard-working people, who rise with the sun and go to bed at nightfall. The interval is occupied by hard work.

Mr. Speaker, if the best interests of our country demanded it, I should vote for a law admitting only those who have relatives in this country, and shut out all others, rather than to give my consent to a provision which will admit others and shut out relatives.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman, as I understand, is a member of the conference committee. I should like to ask him whether the change in this language was made for the purpose of discriminating particularly against any class of people abroad?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether that was the purpose. It is undoubtedly the effect.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then I will ask the gentleman whether this provision would be acceptable to him:

All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read and write the English language or any other language generally used in the country from which such person comes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is too indefinite. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the provision contained in the House bill is the best that can be devised to meet all these objections. It reads:

All male persons between the ages of 16 and 60 years who can not read and write the English or some other language.

That is the amendment I will suggest, after we have sent the bill back to conference.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if my friend will tell me what people the conference provision would shut out that the House provision would let in, I shall be very glad, because then we shall get down to practical matters.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I have occupied forty minutes in enumerating these very people. I regret very much that my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has not heard the explanation. I have mentioned the Mennonites; I have mentioned the inhabitants of the Baltic provinces; I have mentioned the French inhabitants of Alsace-Lorraine; I have mentioned the French, the Scandinavians, and the Germans living south of the Rio Grande who were born in those Spanish countries, but who speak their own language—not the Spanish. All these people would be barred under this bill. And I say this should not be done. If we want to do that, we should do it by explicit terms, not by indirection—not under the guise of an illiteracy test.

Mr. KIEFER. Would not the Poles and Finlanders, as mentioned by our friend over the way, come under the same head?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. They would be excluded also. As I stated before, neither of these objectionable features was contained in the House bill as passed last summer. And all I now ask the House to do is to stand by its previous action. In one other conference the whole matter can be remedied in five minutes by simply restoring the text of the House bill in the terms I have just mentioned, namely: "All male persons"—that would admit the wife—"all male persons who can not read and write the English or some other language." This would meet both objections. To confine the test to male persons was deemed advisable by the House because of the great demand for female servants all over the country which existed then and which exists now.

There are some other provisions to which the press has raised objection—the one, for example, which provides for the reading and writing of parts of the Constitution of the United States; because that instrument contains so many technical terms and rare words difficult to be comprehended by the average immigrant. Suppose that one of the slips provided for in this bill should contain the words, "No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed." I claim, Mr. Speaker, that you might as well hand to the immigrant—say an Irish farm hand or a plain German mechanic—a stone with Assyrian cuneals or Egyptian hieroglyphics upon it as to ask him to translate, or rather to read, this provision of the Constitution in another language.

Mr. MILNES. He is not obliged to translate it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The same paper suggests that instead of requiring the reading and writing of passages from the Constitution the provision might designate the Bible, and it proposes the following passages of the Bible to be read and written by immigrants:

Leviticus xix, 33-34: And if a stranger sojourn with thee in your land, ye shall not vex him.

But the stranger that dwelleth with you shall be unto you as one born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself; for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.

Psalms cxlvi, 9: The Lord preserveth the strangers.

Zechariah vii, 10: And oppress not the widow, nor the fatherless, nor the stranger, nor the poor.

Jeremiah xx, 3: Do no wrong, do no violence to the stranger.

Deuteronomy x, 18, 19: He doth execute the judgment of the fatherless and widow, and loveth the stranger, in giving him food and raiment;

Love ye therefore the stranger: for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.

This, I trust, will be the spirit in which this question will be disposed of by the House. In spite of all the outcry against immigration, it is nevertheless a fact—and I call special attention to this revelation of the latest statistics on the subject—that our natural increase of population, plus immigration, makes a combined total rate of increase smaller than that of nearly every European country without immigration. France, where the national legislature has put a premium on fecundity, is of course one of the countries excepted from the list of comparisons. The large European cities, too, have increased more rapidly in the last ten years than our great American centers of population. The fact that those countries are prospering, nevertheless, seems to be conclusive evidence that immigration after all is not the cause of our troubles. Moreover, the latest annual report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration shows that there are almost as many people leaving the country as are coming, so that the whole problem seems to be solving itself.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Is the gentleman opposed to any law restricting immigration?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I think if the gentleman from Indiana had watched my course in this House he would be aware of the fact that last summer I sat here trying to engineer through the House a bill whose purpose was to regulate this very question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I will admit, Mr. Speaker, that at least a portion of that time I was occupied with other matters to such an extent that I have occasionally been forced to overlook the course the gentleman was pursuing and was not exactly aware just what he favored in regard to this matter. I was therefore forced, for the purpose of getting information, to make the inquiry directly of him.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, allow me to say that it is not a very pleasant duty for me, as the chairman of the Committee on Immigration of this House, to oppose a bill in its final stages which I had helped to frame and which I supported, and which I helped to pass through the House. I still hope the House will give all of its present opponents an opportunity to vote on this bill after eliminating its objectionable features. As it is, my own sense of justice, considerations of party and country, and the combined and unanimous opposition of the German-American press, and many of the reputable American journals of the United States (such as the Philadelphia Ledger, which this morning comes out editorially in favor of the spirit of my amendments and propositions), compel me to take the stand I do take. In the language of Martin Luther: "Here I stand; I can do no otherwise. God help me. Amen." [Continued applause.]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, at this late day in the session, and with our experience in the difficulty of passing immigration bills, we can not stop to have every bill trimmed to our taste.

This bill comes before the House on the report of the committee of conference. It does not suit me in all its particulars. I would prefer a more drastic bill. But it is an improvement on our present legislation.

I believe the principal opposition to this bill comes from the steamship companies. They are writing to their friends to telegraph their members of Congress to oppose the bill. In this connection I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the following telegram.

The Clerk read as follows:

To F W. A. POPPIE, Millbank, S. Dak.:

Immigration bill comes up in House Wednesday. Wire your Congressman our expense protesting against proposed exclusion and requesting bill be defeated, informing him that vote in favor means defeat next election.

(Signed) CLAUSSENIUS & CO.,
North German Lloyd.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. This telegram was forwarded to Senator LODGE by Mr. Poppie, andwas published in this morning's Post.

This is not a political controversy. The last national Republican convention and also the last national Democratic convention declared in favor of restricting immigration. I desire to send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the platforms of these two conventions on this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOREIGN IMMIGRATION.

For the protection of the quality of our American citizenship and our American workingmen against the fatal competition of low-priced labor, we demand that the immigration laws be thoroughly enforced and so extended as to exclude from immigration to the United States those who can neither read nor write.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That is the provision adopted by the Republican national convention. Now I ask the Clerk to read the one adopted by the national Democratic convention.

The Clerk read as follows:

KEEP OUT PAUPER LABOR.

We hold that the most efficient way of protecting American labor is to prevent the importation of foreign pauper labor to compete with it in the home market.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, it is simply a question of political economy, and not in any sense partisan.

I have been curious to learn just how this educational test would affect the immigration to this country. The total number of immigrants coming here, as shown by the report of the Commissioner of Immigration for the last fiscal year, was 343,269. This is an increase of 84,731 over the number coming during the previous year, or an increase of 32.77 per cent. As times improve, immigration will largely increase; and unless we pass some measure restricting immigration, the number coming into this country during the next fiscal year will exceed a half million.

The conference report practically excludes only those who can neither read nor write. Taking the status of those who came into this country during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, we find that 65,103 came from Austria-Hungary, 68,060 from Italy, and 45,137 from Russia proper, making a total of 178,291, or 51.93 per cent.

Of the 65,103 who came from Austria-Hungary, 23,973 could neither read nor write; of the 68,060 coming from Italy, 31,374 could neither read nor write; of the 45,137 coming from Russia proper, 12,816 could neither read nor write. Out of 178,291 coming from these three countries, a total of 68,163 could neither read nor write.

Now, there came from Germany during this same period, 31,885; from Norway, 8,855; from Sweden, 21,177; from England, 19,492; from Ireland, 40,262; a total of 121,671, or 35.44 per cent from these five countries.

Now, of the 31,885 who came from Germany, all but 713 could read and write. Of the 8,855 who came from Norway, all but 57 could read and write. Of the 21,177 who came from Sweden, all but 146 could read and write. Of the 19,492 who came from England, they could all read and write but 757. And of the 40,262 who came from Ireland, all but 2,473 could read and write. So that if this conference report had been the law during the last fiscal year, out of a total of 121,671 immigrants who came from Germany, Norway, Sweden, England, and Ireland, only 4,146 would have been debarred, while out of the 178,291 who came from Austria-Hungary, Italy, and Russia proper, 68,163 would have been debarred. So do you not see that all this talk about the Germans being affected by the passage of this law is ridiculous? It would not affect the Germans; it would not affect the Swedes; it would not affect the Norwegians; it would not affect the Englishmen, nor the Irishmen. But it would very seriously affect and restrict the immigration from countries from which undesirable immigration comes, and in that respect this conference report is satisfactory.

The Commissioner of Immigration has also made a report of the amount of money brought into this country by immigrants. It is curious to note that the large majority of immigrants coming from Austria-Hungary, Italy, and Russia proper bring less than $30 per head with them, while the great majority of immigrants from Germany, Norway, Sweden, England, and Ireland average more than $30 per head; and although fewer numbers come from these countries, they bring almost twice as much money with them.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The report of the Commissioner of Immigration shows that during last year between $4,500,000 and $5,000,000 were brought in by the immigrants, and he admits that that represents about one-third of what they really brought in, because before they leave their homes they are told not to tell how much money they have.

Mr. KIEFER. If the gentleman will allow me, I will give the exact amount.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I can not yield, because I have only twenty minutes.

It is also important for us to consider where these immigrants go when they reach this country.

I find upon examination of the Commissioner's report that of the 343,269 immigrants who came into this country during the last fiscal year, 127,082 stopped in the State of New York; 61,007 of them stopped in Pennsylvania; 36,561 stopped in Massachusetts. A total of 224,650, or almost two-thirds of the whole number who came into this country, remained in the three States of New York, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts. Why, the gentleman from Missouri who opposes this report [Mr. BARTHOLDT] knows nothing of the evils of unrestricted immigration. Only 2,485 went to Missouri. The gentleman from Louisiana, a member of the committee who opposes this report, only had 1,516 in his State. Wisconsin had 4,572; Nebraska, 1,043; Minnesota, 5,979. No wonder gentlemen do not seriously regard it essential to restrict immigration when they are not bothered by it.

It is the great States of New York, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts that suffer. The theory that these immigrants settle down on our Western prairies and become tillers of the soil is ridiculous. They do not settle on our Western prairies. They settle in the great cities of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Pittsburg, and among the mines, the mills, the factories, and the coke ovens in these three States; and, in the name of my State, I demand that legislation be enacted that will relieve us from this imposition.

This bill will restrict immigration, not wholly, nor even sufficiently, but it will restrict it to some extent. Properly enforced, properly construed, it will keep out of Pennsylvania, New York, and Massachusetts about 1 in 4 who now come in.

If these immigrants entered into the professions and among the ranks of skilled labor, it would not fall with such a heavy hand upon that class of people who are known as common laborers. Let us look at the report and see what occupations were followed by those who came last year. Of the 343,269 who came, 50 of them were lawyers, 147 were clergymen, 19 were editors, 143 of them were physicians. They have not increased competition among the clergymen, the editors, the doctors, or the lawyers.

No very considerable number of them were skilled workmen. There were only 534 machinists, only 126 jewelers, only 10 dressmakers, only 3,676 carpenters, only 589 gardeners, only 106 plasterers, only 117 plumbers. But there were 123,028 who had no occupation, 91,262 laborers, 38,926 servants, making a total of 253,216 common laborers who entered into direct competition with our poorer people. Of the 343,269, all but 90,051 entered into direct competition with the laboring men and women of this country, who receive the poorest wages, and whose lot is the hardest. Two-thirds of this great army—or nearly two-thirds, considerably over 200,000—settled in the States of New York, Massachusetts, and Pennsylvania, and entered into competition with our own people for their daily bread.

This country to-day is suffering from a surplus of common labor. There is work enough for all the men, women, and children who belong here, but there is not work enough for the laboring men and women of the world.

We put a tariff on a machine to keep it out of this country and give to the producer the home market. That tariff operates and is intended to operate to increase the wages of the men and women in this country. That very increase of wages is an inducement to the laboring men and women of other countries to come here and compete with our own people for these increased wages. Our laboring people would be better off—much better off—if you could give them the exclusive labor market of the country, and not force them into competition with the cheap pauper labor of other countries. We have been legislating for the producer, and properly so. It is high time that we begin to legislate for the man and the woman whose only capital is the ability to do a day's work. We protect our coal, our iron, our steel, our cotton, and I hope soon our wool.

Why? That the American producer may have the benefit of the home market. Now, if that is good policy, if that is good political philosophy, if that is good political economy, let us protect the brawn and the hand that produce the coal, the iron, and the steel. [Applause.]

I would like to see all the laboring men and laboring women of Europe have employment, but I would not like to see them employed by the turning out of our own working people. I have no unkind feelings toward foreigners, but I believe it to be my duty, so far as in my power lies, to protect the laboring men and the laboring women of this country before extending protection elsewhere. Let us begin it here. This country is rich enough and great enough to support our own laboring people. Wages will regulate themselves and keep pace in price with other things, but under this competition with the cheap pauper labor of Europe our laboring men and women are unable to obtain sufficient work and sufficient wages to secure the necessities of life.

Thousands of foreigners come here every year, save their wages, and send them to their relatives and friends in their own country.

It is estimated on good authority that during each year from twenty-five to thirty millions of dollars are sent by Italians in this country to Italy. They do not become citizens of this country; they come here to earn money to send home, and when they have earned a sufficient quantity, they go back and spend it there. Large amounts are sent to other countries also. Taking this into consideration, with the large amounts that are spent each year by visitors and tourists from this country in Europe, it may be said with some show of truth that the United States is practically supporting Europe to-day.

If we could only have our people spend their money at home, and keep the money earned here at home, there would be better times and less distress in this country. We can not stop people from visiting Europe. We can not stop a few of our silly women from marrying men with titles and bestowing upon them their fortunes. Fortunately, however, Europeans with titles do not marry our poor girls, our sensible girls, but only the rich, frivolous kind, whom we can well spare. But we can stop the people from other countries from coming here and filching the bread from the mouths of our people by such restrictive measures that will prevent their coming and give to the laboring men and women of this country the labor of the country until such time as there is greater demand for labor than they can supply.

Let us, therefore, adopt this conference report as the most likely measure we can get enacted into law at this session, and adjourn, having passed an immigration bill and kept our promises to the country. [Applause.]

I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. HOPKINS. Before the gentleman from Pennsylvania takes his seat, I would like to get his view on the construction of the language that has been criticised by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT]. That gentleman claims that under the provision which requires the immigrant to be able to read "in the English language, or the language of his native or resident country," desirable immigrants from the Baltic provinces of Russia and from other parts of Europe will be excluded. What is the gentleman's view as to that?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question. I may not be lawyer enough to answer it correctly, but my judgment is that the language of the bill, "the English language, or the language of his native or resident country," would be construed to mean any language spoken in the resident country, so that any person coming to this country who was able to read and write in any language would be admitted.

Mr. CANNON. Why not let the law say that plainly?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Because if you send this report back for further consideration, it will be so delayed that you will get no law at all.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that some arrangement be made as to the control of the time. None has yet been made.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I supposed it was understood that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DANFORD] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] controlled the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HENDERSON). If there be no objection, the time for debate will be controlled on the one side by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DANFORD] and on other by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BUCK].

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, my views are on record not only against this particular measure, but against the theory and principle of the legislation upon which it is based, so that perhaps I would not trouble the House at this time with any remarks whatever if it were not that, from the very fact that there is, perhaps, an irresistible current of feeling among the American people in favor of this legislation, silence on my part might be misconstrued not only into acquiescence, but perhaps into something worse—a lack of courage to stand to the conviction which I feel on this subject to the very bottom of my soul.

I believe it a truth among the principles of government that whatever tends to restrict or to restrain the movements of human effort has in it the germ of injustice and of wrong. I believe that this legislation is of that character, and, though I am no prophet, I think the time will come when the old spirit will reassert itself and when there will be those who will agree with me that this legislation in its present form is trivial, inexpedient, unnecessary, and un-American in the light of the spirit which lies at the foundation of the American Government. I do not think the gentleman from New York meant an invidious distinction when he said that he would listen with patience to what the foreign-born members upon this floor might say in regard to this measure. Manifestly, he anticipates their opposition, and that anticipation argues that there lurks somewhere in his own conscience an idea that there may be something wrong in this bill. Else why anticipate opposition from that particular quarter?

I wish to tell the gentleman and the members of this House that my opposition to this measure is inspired by something loftier than my foreign blood. When I took that oath before the Speaker's stand to defend the Constitution of the United States against foreign and domestic foes, I took it with the same conviction of responsibility and seriousness as my American-born brother upon this floor. I have nothing to gain as a foreign-born citizen by opposing this bill. I have no friends that want to come here from foreign countries. They are all here. The bones of my parents repose in American soil; and, if I may say it, I have two generations of native-born Americans behind me. Nor have I a foreign constituency to look to. On the contrary, I admit with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there is a strong current of feeling in the opposite direction, and if a vote of my own people were taken I believe that possibly, under the influence of that error, that prejudice, that misconception which clouds the minds of the American people to-day on this question, they would vote me into a hopeless minority. I have, therefore, nothing to gain by the position which I take, and nothing to do but to express my conviction and my belief that this measure is injurious, is unjust, and not founded in good principles.

If the exclusion of persons who can not read and write is based upon the principle or demand for the protection of American labor, why, sir, the figures which the gentleman has read show that the purpose will not be accomplished. There are poor laborers enough in this world without counting those who can not read and write to bring about the very competition which is complained of.

If it is complained that ignorance is the cause of the trouble, I tell my friends, as I said before, that education is a broad and comprehensive term, and does not mean book learning only. I could refer the gentleman to statistics in the Library, and prove to him that in communities where persons wholly illiterate predominate in numbers the relative proportion of criminals is smaller than in more educated communities.

An eminent writer has said that culture is the object of education, but culture does not mean book learning; culture, he says, means the attaining of a proper conception and faith with reference to God and a proper apprehension of the relative duties of man to man.

I do not think I need remind the American people of the service which immigration has done for this country. Nor need I remind them of the service that it has done in the attainment and preservation of the liberty which has been so great a power in the development of its destiny. I need not point my friend from South Carolina to the field of Camden, where the blood of De Kalb fertilizes the soil.

My friend refers to "the crowding of people in the large cities." Sir, what has made Chicago the marvel of civilized development but "the crowding of people in the large cities?" "The crowding of people in the large cities" is an indication of the aspiration and the ambition of men to better themselves. In Europe the city of Berlin, which a generation ago was barely a metropolitan city, has to-day two millions of people. People crowd the cities in their eagerness to come in contact with intelligence, with education, with improvement, and the possibilities of advancement. Communities can protect themselves against this overflow of population if it exists. Every county or municipality has the power to make laws to protect itself against paupers and vagrants; and if there is no room in the city for persons who can not or will not work, there is power in the law to send them elsewhere to fields where they are needed.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, my time is limited. I could go back with you to the history of nations and show you that no nation ever prospered from the moment it became selfish and exclusive. If the Roman Republic, if the Athens of the ancient world, instead of creating an aristocratic citizenship, had invited the surrounding peoples, to welcome and make them their equals, the civilization of the world might never have seen the relapse of the Middle Ages.

We are told secretly—it is not openly declared as the intention of the bill to strike in that direction—that numbers of an insignificant and inferior race come here from southern Europe. I need not defend that race. It is true that under the effects of oppression and peculiar institutions the mass of those people are ignorant. But remember they are the descendants of the Cæsars and the Gracchi. Remember that Venice was the mistress of the world when London was but the "tower of a prison" and a slaughter field of political strife and murders. Remember that when all of northern Europe was in the darkness of the Middle Ages, Italy had her Dante and her Tasso, her Petrarch, her Boccaccio, her Michaelangelo, and a little later her Christopher Columbus. These races have the instinct of high aspiration in their souls.

But in the little that remains of my limited time I want to make an appeal to my friends on the Democratic side, and on the Republican side of this House too. In 1852, when the Free Soil party began to show its power in the politics of the country—that party from which sprang the Republican party of to-day—what was the sentiment which they embodied in their political platform? It is brief. I will read it from the platform of the Free Soil convention at Pittsburg, August 11, 1852:

> That immigrants and exiles from the Old World should find a cordial welcome to homes of comfort and fields of enterprise in the new; and every attempt to abridge their privilege of becoming citizens and owners of the soil ought to be resisted with inflexible determination.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I approve only the first part of that platform. I admit that there is an element of politics in the second when it speaks of citizenship. As a citizen of these United States, made such by the grace of your most liberal laws, I should stand here with the best of you and defend the dignity and the worth and the value of American citizenship. If your naturalization laws are too liberal, let a more restrictive policy be adopted. If these people are not worthy, after five years, to be citizens, do not give them the privilege. But let me tell you, since education is the topic, that those foreign-born citizens who have abused their trust and their duty, who have violated their oaths as American citizens by becoming aggressors upon society, the destroyers of property, the teachers of propagandism, pernicious to social and political order, are not the ignorant. They are the men who have studied the philosophy of the freethinkers of the world. They claim to be highly educated. They claim to be superior to the men of the common mass who, upon lines of sentiments of brotherhood toward each other, on the basis of law and order, have built up the civilization of the world.

Mr. Speaker, in the last political campaign it was claimed that this Government and this country were in danger of disintegration. It has been said upon this floor, aye, and the story has gone throughout the country and is in the public prints, that nobody can vote against this measure, or will do so, except those who are interested in the great steamship companies. It is a sad story, a sad commentary that such lack of confidence should impair the relations between the people and their representatives; and it repeats itself every time a measure in which large private interests are involved is up for consideration in the halls of legislation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Louisiana have permission to close his remarks.

Mr. DANFORD. I must object, unless the time is extended for taking the vote.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. DANFORD. I object, unless the time is extended beyond the time fixed for the vote to-day.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I have yielded to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. BUCK. I have very little additional to say. I had mapped out a brief course of argument for the time allotted, and I have about concluded what I desired to say.

This manifestation, Mr. Speaker, of the lack of confidence and of public assault on the honor and integrity of the legislative bodies of this country, unmerited and unjust, as I believe, is one of the disintegrating symptoms which hover, vaguely if you will, around the body politic and distinctly threaten its peace and perpetuity—one of those symptoms which were contemplated with so much seriousness and apprehension in the recent political campaign. It was claimed to be the corporations against the people; organized capital against organized labor; united wealth against common poverty. Such were the cries, and they were calculated to fill the patriotic mind with fear and misgiving. What, if anything, had the recent immigrant to do with that? On the contrary, the danger will be aggravated and emphasized if this country will suffer the wave of an intolerant spirit of exclusion and narrow-mindedness to shut it in. We must go back to the fundamental principles under which we became great and prosperous, and let in the light of day and true manhood in all its forms and aspirations. The grandeur of American citizenship and the life of the genius of our institutions lie in the dignity of their universality. [Applause.]

When God Almighty, back in the early ages of man, as the Scripture tells us, found the people trying to raise the Tower of Babel, what did He do? It has given rise to a common German proverb that "God Almighty takes care that the trees do not lift their tops to heaven." When we have grown great and think ourselves masters, something comes to remind us of the limit to our possibilities. And it taught something else as well. The people in those days must have been prosperous and happy if they had nothing to do but build a tower to reach up to the heavens, and God confounded them. He created diversity of language and nationality, and sent them out into the world to work out their redemption—a redemption to regain what they lost. And to attain that is our problem now—the problem of nations and of individuals.

The greatest step was made, second only to the Revelation in the birth of the Saviour, when the American Constitution and Declaration were given to the nations of the earth. Pass what restrictions you will, do what you think right and proper, and what is required of you in the performance of duty to protect the integrity of the nation; but do nothing to violate principle; do not violate the great eternal truths on which our Government rests and on which the nation has grown great.

I had started to remind my Democratic friends of the traditions of the Democratic party on this question, and I will read briefly an extract from the platform of 1848:

> Resolved, That the liberal principles embodied by Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence and sanctioned in the Constitution, which makes ours the land of liberty and the asylum of the oppressed of every nation, have been cardinal principles in the Democratic faith; and every attempt to abridge the privileges of becoming citizens and the owners of the soil among us ought to be resisted with the same spirit that swept the alien and sedition laws from our statute books.

Such, Mr. Speaker, have always been Democratic principles. They are repeated in subsequent platforms which I would read if time permitted. They are the principles which made more glorious the greatness of Jefferson and Jackson. Jackson himself, the illustrious exponent of Democracy, would come under the ban of the objections made in the arguments on this bill in the sense that birth and ancestry are contended for by some gentlemen, great on the floor of Congress, as the only qualification that can imbue a man with the spirit of American liberty. His parents breathed the atmosphere of this country but one short year before the birth of that great American statesman, the very paragon of American individuality, the champion of Democratic principles and of the people's rights—the rights and privileges of the masses. Andrew Jackson was born when his parents had resided in this country but one short year. How, then, may you tell us that the foreigner can not imbibe the spirit of American citizenship? Why, sir, it grows within him with his growth, as it grows in you with yours. Liberty and patriotism are of no clime and of no soil. They are "enthroned in the hearts of men," and are as universal as the sense of kinship with the ever-living God. I have seen native-born Americans, before the tomb of that great man 10 miles down the river, smile and gibber, and I have seen the foreign born there, thrilled with emotion, ready to kneel and worship at that shrine. [Applause.]

Mr. DANFORD. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I have one very serious objection to the bill which is proposed by the conference committee in its report, and that is that it does not go far enough, that it is not drastic enough. I wish it were possible, sir, for the committee to recommend, and for this House to pass, a measure which would be as broad as the evil at which this legislation is aimed. The educational test will hardly suffice. Many a man, sir, can read and write, and yet is utterly lacking in those qualities essential to make him a good American citizen. He may be profligate in his habits. He may be unwilling to work, and thereby become a charge upon the public. He may be a nihilist or an anarchist, or he may possess other characteristics which make him unfit to become a factor in our national life.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we can all agree upon general principles, but the difficulty is, I confess, in framing a measure which will meet the exigency, a measure practical in its application and which will subserve the purposes which we have in view. Any test that is employed, short of an absolute exclusion of immigrants, must necessarily be an arbitrary one—must necessarily bear hard in individual cases—but the sole question should be, What will be its general operation and effect?

Now, I favor this bill as recommended by the conference report because I believe that, even with its shortcomings, its general features are salutary. To be sure, objections have been urged to it. It is said, in the first place, that it will separate husband and wife; but the great transatlantic steamship companies, which have been making money by transporting the unworthy from foreign climes to our shores, have established their agencies the world over, and the moment it is distinctly understood that by the terms of this bill these companies must send back to the lands from which they have invited them those immigrants who are incapable of complying with this educational test, that minute the husband and wife will be informed of the existence of this test, and if unable to pass it, they will remain abroad instead of undertaking a venture which they know will be fruitless. If perchance, however, they happen to reach these shores, one of them being able to pass the educational test and the other unable, then if they choose to separate, one to become a citizen of this country and the other to go back to the land from which they came, the separation is their own act and not the act of the American people, whose sacred and substantial rights are to be regarded by us rather than the rights of particular individuals from abroad.

Mr. LACEY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. Why not amend the bill so as to compel the steamship companies to take them both back under these circumstances?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I have no objection to that, so far as I am personally concerned; but I do not believe it is necessary, since I do not believe they will come here knowing in advance the terms of this law and their inability to comply with them.

Another objection, Mr. Speaker, which has been urged to this conference report is that its language will exclude a certain class of people in the world who might make desirable immigrants; but I have failed to draw out from the gentleman from Missouri—and he has adroitly avoided my question upon this point—the fact that the particular form of language employed in this bill is necessary in order to exclude a much greater class of people in the world who, while they may be able to read and write, are utterly incapable of becoming good American citizens, but who would be a burden rather than an advantage to our body politic if they were to be ingrafted upon it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman is undoubtedly in favor of stopping immigration——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I have not said so. That is the gentleman's assumption. I prefer to speak my own sentiments through my own lips.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am not quite through with my question. My question is this: If you are in favor of keeping out certain classes of people, either people who can not read or write or people to whom objection can be made because of their religion or nationality, why do you not say so in the bill? This bill legislates by indirection. It presents to the American people an intelligence test, but does not say that those people shall be excluded who will be excluded under the terms of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman can not place me in any false position in this matter. This question is broader than religious prejudice, more expansive than sect. It is as broad as the continent on which we live, and involves the very life of the Republic and the permanency of our civilization. I am not insisting that discrimination shall be made against any religion. I care not whether a man is a Catholic or a Protestant, whether he is a Gentile or a Jew. The sole inquiry with me is, Will his coming to these shores have the effect of bettering the condition of my countrymen, naturalized and native born, or will his coming be an injury to them? If it will be injurious, I am in favor of his exclusion. I am not in favor of the total restriction of immigration, but I am in favor of any measure that will exclude from our population that undesirable and dangerous element which can be of no benefit, but which will work a great injury to us, and that is the reason why I favor this conference report. As I have intimated before, sir, it is a step forward, a step in the right direction. If not the best, it is at least the best attainable measure just now.

Mr. Speaker, there may have been a time when we could assimilate this undesirable immigration—the ignorant, the pauper, and the vicious class. That time has passed. Annually there are coming to our shores large numbers of people who are utterly unable to discharge the duties of American citizenship. They add to our burdens and responsibilities without adding anything whatever to our energies and our resources. They strain our public and our private charities, fill our charitable and penal institutions, and are a constant menace to our free institutions.

The time has now come, sir, when we should do something to prevent this, not simply talk, but do something in the interest of our citizens, the naturalized as well as the native-born. We must act if we are to escape this great danger. I would like to know of what avail is our great common-school system, that system under which we are preparing our children for the duties of American life in a Republic where every man is a factor in public affairs. I would like to know why we are talking about compulsory education, if at the same time we are willing to admit to our shores vast hordes of people who can not read or write and put upon their shoulders the full panoply of citizenship. What consistency, too, is there in a great State calling a constitutional convention to amend its organic law in order that it may make an educational qualification a prerequisite to the right to vote? With what consistency do they tolerate fraud at the ballot box against the ignorant black man in that same State, justifying themselves by the plea that intelligence should control in their State and municipal affairs, and at the same time extend through their representatives on this floor a welcome to the whole Union to men from abroad so ignorant that they not only can not read twenty lines of the Constitution, but can not even comprehend the simplest duties of citizenship in a free republic?

Is our restriction upon immigration to stop with the exclusion of the Chinese, who can both read and write? Are all other nationalities who lack this accomplishment to be admitted free? Is the right of self-protection one which inheres only in the individual? Does it absolutely cease to exist, sir, the moment we approach the nation? Is there no power in the people of this country to protect themselves from this menace, this evil which assails them? We prate, Mr. Speaker, about the protection of American labor. We are even now formulating a protective tariff bill to the end that the laboring class of our countrymen may be shielded from the competition of cheap labor from abroad, and we propose, through the medium of this bill, to confer upon our laborers wages so remunerative as to bring back happiness and comfort to their humble homes. What sense or reason, sir, is there in all of this kind of talk if we are to continue to throw open our ports to the foreign cheap laborers themselves and welcome them to unrestricted competition with our own laborers right here upon our very soil?

Gentlemen, sir, may talk in eloquent language about ancient history. They may deal in stale platitudes about "the land of the free and the home of the brave." They may dwell upon the humanities, and even quote Scripture as profusely as did the gentleman from Missouri, but the time has come in the history of this country when the plain, practical question comes home to us whether or not we are willing to legislate in a manner that will not only protect American labor, but also in a manner that will protect American civilization.

The gentleman from Missouri, who interlarded his remarks so beautifully and so copiously with extracts from the Scriptures teaching the duty of hospitality to the stranger, seems to have overlooked the pregnant fact that these same Scriptures are filled to overflowing with the doctrine of the right of self-preservation both to the individual and to the state.

Here, Mr. Speaker, is presented to us an opportunity to pass, not a measure that is broad enough to meet the entire exigency, but one which will remedy a part of the difficulty which surrounds us. Shall we act the part of cheap demagogues and abandon our convictions to curry favor with certain elements which are constantly conjuring up the fate of Knownothingism to affrighten public men in the discharge of their plain duty, or shall we rise to the height of the occasion and take this resolute step toward the emancipation of our countrymen from this great evil which afflicts them? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of more stringent immigration laws. I believe that all criminal, pauper, contract-labor, and ignorant classes and anarchists should be denied admission to our shores.

The people of Kansas do not object to the Germans, Swedes, Irish, and others who have helped develop our great State. We are proud of them; but they all, regardless of their nativity, favor keeping out the objectionable classes.

As strongly as I favor the further restriction of immigration, I can not support the conference report. No one of us can tell what would be the effect of the bill agreed upon by the conference committee. Hardly any two members of this House would construe it the same way.

Let us write a law upon the statutes that will protect American labor, but let it be in language that we understand ourselves, and one that can not be misconstrued.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, the consideration of this conference report involves two great questions. One is the mode of legislation. A conference committee, as I understand it, is appointed by the House and by the Senate to settle the differences between them. In this case that committee did nothing of the sort. It brings in a new and severe law. The House imposed an educational test, that the immigrant should read and write the English language or some other language; the Senate imposed the same test, that he should read and write his native language or some other language; and the conference imposes a new, drastic test, never passed by the House and never passed by the Senate, that he must be able to read and write the language of his native or resident country. That committee had no right to legislate for the Senate and the House of Representatives, and to frame a provision not approved in either one or the other, which goes further than either went. And, again, this House said by this act that men only should be submitted to the educational test; that is to say, that all women should be admitted free of that test. The Senate said all wives and mothers of families should be admitted without that test. Now, the question between the two Houses was only which was right, how far the exemption should be carried, because the House exempted mothers of families and the Senate did, too; and the only question was whether all women should be exempted. These conferees say that no woman shall be exempted, and they again carry legislation further than either the House or the Senate. They submit to us legislation that has not been adopted by the House or the Senate.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Will my friend permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PARKER. Certainly, if it is short, as my time is limited.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Does the gentleman propose to say that it is not within the purview of a conference committee to suggest legislation not passed by the House or Senate?

Mr. PARKER. I do. I say it is not within the purview of a conference committee to suggest new legislation, to go beyond the matters in controversy between the two Houses, and to introduce matters which are not in controversy there. The function of a conference committee is to settle differences between the House of Representatives and the Senate, not to make new legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I have said that this is a great question, a question involving the powers, privileges, and prerogatives of this House, and the powers, privileges, and prerogatives of the Senate, but it is no greater than the other question that is raised by this bill.

Mr. Speaker, this century sees a movement of population, of their energies, ambitions, homes, and families, that no other time has seen. The movements of the nations when the Roman Empire fell, the movements of the period of the settlement of America, do not compare with that which we now witness. Go down with me to the city of New York. See on the one hand what gentlemen describe, and rightly describe, as pauperism and wretchedness which ought to be kept out, and on the other hand see the young father and the young wife and the young family leaving the old home, coming to the new land, with farewell on the mother's lips and with the earnestness of hope in the man's heart, and tell me what will you do to keep out the wrong and bring in the right? There may be doubt as to the efficacy of an educational test. There may be doubt as to whether the gentlemen who propose it want to bring in the failures in the professions and to keep out the peasant, whether they want to bring in the bankrupt, the anarchist, or the runaway scamp, and to keep out the hard-working honest farmer, like the Italians from the country places, who in my town constitute from 10,000 to 15,000 population and do not any of them seek for poor relief.

Perhaps it was not the intention of the framers of this bill, judging from the amendments they have now put in, to discriminate in favor of the house of Israel, who educate their children in the synagogues and teach them their duty to God, no matter how poor, how oppressed, how downtrodden they may be. The original bill did discriminate in their favor, and now we are almost told here that the conference report is designed to keep out the Hebrew! I doubt somewhat whether, when we are looking for hearts and hands and character, we can find them by putting the schoolmaster on the dock. But it is decided by this House, it is decided by the Senate, that we shall try that experiment, and all that I say is, Try it with prudence and discretion. If we wish to say that no man shall come here who can not read and write, let us say so; but let us not say that no man shall come here who has a wife who can not read and write, unless he leave her behind.

The report on immigration for last year shows that our difficulty was not that we got too many women, but that we got too few proportionately. The Commissioner of Immigration, in his twenty-nine different recommendations for the amendment of the immigration laws (not one of which is reported by the committee), has one in favor of keeping a strict lookout for men who leave their families in the old country and come here alone to earn money and send it abroad, in order that they may not be allowed to come over many times. The statistics show that men came here last year to the number of 212,000, and women to the number of only 130,000. We want the women to be nearer in number to the men. Do they compete with the labor of this country, or do they come as wives and bring families and cause money to be spent here? Of the women who came here last year 38,000 were servants, but the rest, including mothers and children, were mostly members of families. We want members of families. We do not believe that it is better to admit a man, no matter how well educated, to be separated from his family and to live here by himself. It is better neither for the country nor for him. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, this is a large question. I have here the Census of 1890. In the first volume, opposite page 92, I find a table showing the home-born and foreign-born. In my own city about one-third are born of American parents——

Mr. PARKER. I should like a minute or two more.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I yield the gentleman from New Jersey two minutes more.

Mr. PARKER. I thank the gentleman. In my own city about one-third are born of native American parents, about one-third are foreign born, and one-third are born of foreign-born parents. Would you believe that that proportion is greater for the total of foreign born and those born of foreign parents in the cities of Rochester, Boston, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Jersey City, Cleveland, St. Louis, Brooklyn, St. Paul, Buffalo, San Francisco, Detroit, Chicago, New York, and Milwaukee? Is not this, therefore, a question to be prudently handled?

I have thousands of foreign-born friends who in their independence of spirit cast their votes against me at one election, and who by the same independent votes aided in giving over 12,000 majority in the same city at the last election. I owe them my confidence, my belief in their honesty. I owe the country, on the other hand, strict enforcement of the laws against the pauper and against the criminal. But I do not owe to anyone, nor does the country owe to itself, the breaking up of families, the turning back of the wife of the household while we admit the husband. We do not owe to ourselves any harsh experiment with the great, growing pulse of the world, and any measure which is not certainly right (but is merely tried tentatively to see how it will work) should be moderate. We want no Russian passport system; we will have no absolute or oppressive law in dealing with human flesh and blood. We will try to do right by all.

The House bill and the Senate amendments both had full consideration and were moderated by a regard for the family. I can not believe it right to abandon both bills for a new measure which lacks that regard——

[Mr. CORLISS addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I confess that this conference report, as it now stands, has stirred my blood more than anything I can remember since I have been a member of Congress. Can it be possible that we are forgetting the principles that we have stood for in the past? Can it be possible that we are forgetting to-day that we are a Christian nation? Can it be that we are forgetting that all that constitutes true manliness is the willingness of a man to sacrifice something of himself for others? Can it be possible that this bad measure is to be urged through the House on the plea that this measure must be adopted or a good measure can not be had?

I confess I shrink with extreme reluctance from adding any other prohibition to those already raised to impede immigration to this country. Have we forgotten so soon the motives and principles that moved our fathers or our grandfathers when they first came here? I tell you, sir, that we are none of us so far removed from the immigrant that we can lightly touch him by the smallest weight of our little finger or lay the burden of a hair upon him that we can possibly avoid in justice to ourselves. When we do restrict immigration, it should be done with the very greatest possible care.

Is the educational qualification the only one? Why, Mr. Speaker, the very worst class of immigrants that now come here can not only read and write, but they are, some of them, from the most highly educated classes. Such people are found in the ranks of the socialists, the communists, the anarchists, and the nihilists. They may come, and we have no means of excluding them. We have no law for their exclusion. Is it not better for our own interests and the interests of the foreign born who have already made their homes among us that the better class of honest toilers from these foreign countries should come here to balance their baneful influences? Is it not true that in the last election it was among these people—in our foreign-born population—we found the most conservative of our people? I say, sir, that the most conservative people during the last campaign and election were found in the immigrants who have made their homes amongst us. Almost to a man they were found honest, faithful to our institutions, and conservative.

The House bill was sufficiently drastic; but let us look for a moment at the condition of this bill as it is returned to us by the conference committee. Mr. Speaker, I would sooner burn off my right hand than cast a vote for the bill in its present condition, or if it is not amended in several particulars. In the first line of the amendment recommended by the conference committee I would insert the word "male," so as to read "all male persons physically capable," and so forth. In the second line amend by inserting "all persons speaking the English language," admitting anyone who could speak our language.

Do you want to exclude immigrants from Ireland, or any other persons who can speak our mother tongue? Some of the very best immigrants—in fact, the very best in the second and third generations, if not the very first, trying as they may be in certain characters, equal to Germans and Scandinavians in all good qualities which they bring here—are Irishmen. In a generation they are the Yankees of Yankees, the Americans of the Americans; and can we afford to exclude those whose mother tongue is English? Yea, verily, I do not believe that this conference bill can pass. I regret that a son of Massachusetts, yea, two sons of New England, should have set their hands to such a report as this.

Again, in the third line I would strike out the words "of their native or resident country" and insert "some other;" so as to read:

Be able to write the English language or some other language.

Again, I certainly would add the words to the first section:

Provided, Such child or grandchild shall give a bond with surety to provide such support.

And I certainly should add, again:

This section shall not apply to any immigrant born on this continent or in South America.

I would welcome here the persons from our sister Republics on this continent and from South America. Has there been any trouble with immigration from those countries? If they desire to come here, is it a friendly act on our part to exclude them when there is no reason for so doing? Then, again, I have to say, notwithstanding the hot advocacy of the words in section 4, beginning—that that provision in the bill is very objectionable. I would not refuse to vote for this bill solely because those words are there; but I want to say to this House and to the country that we ought to cultivate friendly and not unfriendly relations with the Dominion of Canada. The day is not distant when they will become a part of us, I hope. Let us observe all comity between this country and that country, and I submit that this is an unfriendly act I submit, furthermore, that there are hundreds and thousands of our people who cross into the Dominion to labor, as the people of the Dominion cross into this country, and that this is a most unjustifiable proceeding. I submit that there is no act that any of us have committed during our service in Congress that we shall look back upon or that our children will look upon with so much regret as a vote to adopt, unamended, this conference report.

Or come regularly or habitually to the United States, etc.—

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have no hope of enlightening anybody in the remarks that I make, and I shall talk during my five minutes in order that I may place upon record the reasons touching my vote on this conference report.

I have no doubt, as none of us have, about the power to exclude any or all immigration. In the exercise of that power, I advocated and voted, many years ago, for the complete exclusion of the Chinese. I never have been better satisfied with any vote I gave than that. Later on I voted for the legislation on the statute books prohibiting the importation of labor under contract. Later on I voted for the legislation excluding paupers. Now there seems to be a desire to further exclude immigration and to apply the intelligence test. Very well; I am inclined to think that is desirable. We have a great common school system in this country, the best on earth, I suspect. We claim so, at all events. It is an exceedingly expensive system, but the very object of it is to make the sovereign competent to rule the country.

Now, it is quite proper, if we pursue that course at home, that we should shut out those—if the time has come to do so, as it seems to me it has—who have not received similar training elsewhere. We have a legal right and a moral right to do it, and it seems to me desirable. Therefore I voted for the House bill.

Well, now, here is the House bill, and I want for just a minute to tell my trouble. It lets in anyone who can read and write in English or some other language. That is the House measure. I voted for it cheerfully. The Senate, by amendment, let in anybody who can read and write the language of their native country, or some other language. Now, there was that disagreement between the two Houses. The bill went to conference. Here is the conference report:

All persons, etc., who can read and write the English language or the language of their native or resident country.

Now, why did they put that in instead of the Senate provision or the House provision? I have been trying to find out. There are twenty or thirty languages spoken in the Russian Empire. There are large numbers of people who are desirable immigrants who can not speak the language of that country, but who speak the German language, or, perhaps, other languages. Does that provision shut them out?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It does.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says it does. Others say they do not think it does. Others say they doubt. Why have any doubt? If it is desirable to shut out all subjects of Russia, shut them out. If it is desirable to shut out all citizens of any other country, then shut them out. But let us do it in a manly, square way, so that there will be no doubt of our intention. Now, for the reasons indicated, as I do not believe this conference report accomplishes what it was intended to accomplish, as it is ambiguous, I would sooner vote down this conference report and ask another conference, and instruct our conferees what the will of the House is.

But gentlemen say it is this or nothing; that somewhere or other, from out the vasty deep, there is some mysterious person or influence that is going to hamstring any legislation unless we adopt this conference report. Well, who is it? What is it? Trot out your bogie. Name him. Here we have yet six weeks, almost, of this session. There is quite enough time for this conference committee to meet again and again. If I am informed that I must take certain legislation of doubtful construction, I object. If I am informed it is that or nothing, then I say, "Construe it to me;" and if they refuse to do it then I will throw the responsibility upon somebody else. My people desire legislation concerning immigration, but they do not desire legislation regardless of what it is.

Mr. DANFORD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] is recognized.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I very much regret the absence of my distinguished colleague, Mr. MCCALL, whose name this bill bears in this House. I am, however, fully persuaded that if he were present, he would urge upon the House the acceptance of the conference report.

In reply to my colleague, Mr. WALKER, who has just made a speech in opposition to the conference report, I have to say that it pains me to differ from my colleague, but I am very sure he misrepresents the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the Republican party in this matter; and I call the attention of my colleague, Mr. WALKER, to the fact that at the last Republican convention held in Boston for the nomination of State officers, which was one of the largest and most enthusiastic conventions of the party which I ever attended in Massachusetts, resolutions were adopted on the subject of this bill.

And I call my other colleague, Mr. MOODY, who was chairman of the committee on resolutions in that convention, to witness that a ringing resolution was adopted, calling on Congress to pass legislation for the restriction of immigration, and indorsing this very bill which is now under consideration, known as the McCall bill, and indorsing it in the most emphatic manner. And the resolution on this subject was applauded as was no other resolution in the platform adopted by the convention. I think my colleague, Mr. WALKER, will vote alone against the conference report. I am persuaded that every other member of the delegation of the twelve Republican members from Massachusetts will vote or pair in favor of the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I have objections to this bill, and my principal objection is that it is not drastic enough to suit me; the bill does not go far enough in the way of radical legislation for the restriction of immigration such as the country demands. The door is still open for the admission of Mormons, communists, nihilists, anarchists, bomb-throwers, and criminals who can read and write. I have no doubt, however, but what the bill will exclude a very large and undesirable class of immigrants that are now being emptied on these shores.

My State is being overrun by a very undesirable class of immigrants from southern Europe, whose wants and necessities are much less than those of the laboring people of Massachusetts. The labor market of my State is being glutted, and thousands of honest workmen are out of work in consequence, and the cry is loud and long and imperative for legislation on this subject.

The laboring people of this country, especially in the great cities of the country, are being driven to the wall. I am in favor of the Republican principle of protection for the American manufacturer and the American laborer as well. Much has been said on this floor during this debate about the development which has come to our country from foreign immigration. I grant the truth of that claim, but I call the attention of this House and the country to the fact that the class of immigrants which formerly came here and developed not only the Eastern but the great Middle and Western States were of an entirely different class from those that are now being emptied on these shores. Mr. Speaker, where did they come from? They came from England, from Ireland, from Scotland, from Wales, from Germany, from Norway, and from Sweden. They brought with them a standard of civilization kin to our own; they came desiring to become American citizens. Where is the great tide of immigration coming from now? From southern Europe, from Russia, from Italy, and from Greece. Entirely a different class of immigrants, with a civilization, with wants and necessities, far below the American standard. And the purpose of this bill is to exclude that undesirable immigration.

The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BUCK] read the Free-Soil platform, adopted in 1856. He read the clause to the effect that this country welcomed foreign immigration, that this country was "an asylum for the downtrodden and oppressed of every land." I believe that phraseology might be changed to-day, and might be amended, so as to declare that this country was the dumping ground for the offscourings of all God's creation. It was well said at the other end of this Capitol building that som of the immigrants that were coming here now brought with them little else than an alimentary canal and an appetite.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], chairman of the House Committee on Immigration, quoted Scripture to sustain his opposition to this conference report, about our duties toward "the stranger that is within our gates," about our duties toward "the widow and the fatherless." I admit, Mr. Speaker, that we have some duties toward that class, but I would like to read to the gentleman from Missouri from the Apostle Paul. What did the great Apostle to the Gentiles say? This is what he said, Mr. Speaker: "He that refuses to provide for his own household is worse than an infidel and hath denied the faith." I vote for this bill to restrict immigration because I believe self-preservation is the first law of nature, and because I believe that a man's first duty is to his own family; his second duty is to the community, the town, the city, the state, or the nation in which he lives. It is a beautiful theory, announced by the eloquent gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BUCK], that all the world is a band of brothers. If their civilization, their modes of living, and their wants and necessities were the same and were up to the American standard, there might be no call for this legislation; but unfortunately they are not. A Chinaman can live on a little rice a day, and dress in paper; an Italian laborer, as I have seen with my own eyes, can make a satisfactory meal out of half a loaf of dry bread, without meat, without butter, without education for his children, without the most common necessities of an American workman; and while this condition of things lasts the cry is loud and long and imperative for radical legislation for the restriction of immigration.

No, Mr. Speaker; I am opposed to shaking up the 60,000,000 of my countrymen with the 450,000,000 Mongolians in the Chinese Empire, or with the millions of degraded people of southern Europe, and striking an average. Mr. Speaker, it is high time to call a halt in this immigration business; it is a serious question, deserving the attention of the patriot, the philanthropist, and the statesman as to how far our country can go in incorporating into its body politic these dangerous and hostile elements that are now being emptied on these shores.

Mr. Speaker, much has been said against this conference report because it is alleged that it will separate a husband from his wife; the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] drew a pathetic picture, which nearly brought tears to the House, of a man and his wife who had arrived at New York and one was taken and the other left. Mr. Speaker, this is perfect nonsense; the man and wife would not be separated unless they wanted to be; they would know before they started whether they could be admitted or not. Aye, more than that; neither one of them who was not eligible would be allowed to start at all, because the steamship companies would have to carry back, at their own charges, immigrants who were not admissible, and you may be very sure that they would have tests at the port of embarkation, and no man or woman would be brought here who was not entitled to admission under this bill, if it shall become a law; so that argument goes for nothing.

Mr. Speaker, there are some things in this conference report that I do not like—that Cuban jingo provision on the end of it. I would like to eliminate that, but I can not; and to vote to send this bill back to conference, in my judgment, is to vote to send the bill to its death. If exception was to be made of any nationality or people on the score of their present dire distress and persecution, we might well have excepted the Armenians of Turkey, whose cruel oppression by the Sultan's Government is known of all men, and whose cry of distress appears to be unheard at present by mortal ear and heard only by the pitying ear of Heaven. Any conference agreement is necessarily a compromise, and the virtues of this bill as it stands are many and its faults are few, and I certainly hope and believe the House will agree to this conference report.

So far as the immigrants' qualification to read some language is concerned, i. e., "the language of his native country or of the country of his residence," the objection raised to this section by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] is a mere bugaboo and goes for nothing. Every man in this House knows that the Commissioner of Immigration would give a liberal construction to this provision, and that any man or woman of the prescribed ages who could read and write the Constitution in any language would be eligible to admission to the country under the provisions of this bill. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the House will not be misled as to the motives of some of the gentlemen on this floor who are opposing this conference report. They are really opposed to any and all legislation on the subject of restriction of immigration. We are drawing near the close of the session; the time is short; to refuse to accept the conference report is to defeat the bill.

Mr. Speaker, finally and lastly, I believe this legislation vitally concerns the welfare and perpetuity of this great Republic, the wisest and best and most munificent government the sun ever shone upon. This legislation vitally concerns the welfare of this great country, a country upon which the sun never sets, for the morning sun which gilds the rock-bound coast of Maine is the twilight and setting sun of far-off Alaska. Let us be faithful to the trust committed to our care; let us see to it that the Republic gets no injury at our hands, and that we transmit to our children and those that shall come after us the blessings of constitutional government, the blessings of civil and religious liberty that have been bequeathed to us by our fathers unimpaired.

Mr. Speaker, to that end I submit once more that the demand for radical legislation, for the restriction of immigration, is imperative. Every political party in its recent convention has demanded this legislation. The people demand it. I say the cry is loud and long and imperative, and shall we turn a deaf ear to this demand and refuse to accept this conference report as the best attainable measure possible? We can not; we must not; we will not.

[Mr. GROSVENOR addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, we are not a selfish people, as stated by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BUCK], and we are not unsusceptible to appeals to our sympathies in behalf of humanity. The fact that all the appeals that have been so far made upon the floor of this House in opposition to the adoption of the conference report have been of such a character is the best evidence that gentlemen making them realize that fact.

But, Mr. Speaker, we are sensible of our duty to our American citizens, our obligation to see to it that American labor is protected in the humble right of securing a livelihood in its own country. That is the purpose of this proposed legislation. That is the foundation upon which it rests; and, so far as I am concerned, I wish no further justification of my own action than that, with the light before me, I have done my best to protect those in this country who can not protect themselves.

On our statute books are laws which perhaps are responsible for the present condition of labor, by which tramps are scattered all over the country, by which our highways are filled with those whose hands and arms should be busy at the forge or in the machine shop or with the spindle. If this Congress, or Congresses that have preceded it, are responsible for those laws by which labor can not get employment in this country, the least we can do is to see to it that labor is relieved from as much competition as possible.

Mr. Speaker, there are three things admitted in this debate. One is that labor all over this country wherever it has spoken has spoken in favor of the restriction of immigration. That can not be denied. No single labor organization has ever raised its voice in opposition to this legislation. Another fact is that this House has already placed the seal of its approval upon legislation of this kind. In fact, I may say it is already res adjudicata, because this House at its last session, by a vote of 195 to 26, passed a measure which I shall show a little later on differs but slightly from that which we are now asked to approve by the adoption of this conference report.

The fact is that all over the country there is the demand of the people, irrespective of party, irrespective of conditions, that immigration be restricted. I must qualify that statement. It is not the demand of all the people, because there are organizations in this country, there are corporations arrogant in the might of their power, eager in their purpose of obtaining the guinea which is music to their souls, to whom the only liberty that should be worshiped is that engraven upon the almighty dollar, the love for which alone controls them in all their actions. There are such corporations; and there are newspapers in this country to a certain extent controlled by those corporations. The influence and the power of those corporations are opposing this bill, and opposition comes from no other source.

And, Mr. Speaker, the letter which was read in the hearing of this body is enough to make the blood boil in contemplation of the efforts on the part of these steamship companies to dragoon this House and its members to support a bill contrary to their own ideas of what is in the line of their duty. Could it be suspected that a member on this floor would yield to the influence of the spirit contained in that article? "If you do not oppose that bill, it will cost you your election." Who gave this steamship company the power to dictate to Congress what it shall vote for or what it shall not? How dares any corporation, no matter how proud in the height of its monetary power, to declare to a member of this House, "Vote for this bill, or at the next election you shall be among the missing?" That is the influence which is antagonizing this bill—the influence of corporations that gather from every immigrant coming across the waters twenty shining dollars.

I say, Mr. Speaker, the last session settled this question upon its merits. The pages of the RECORD show the whole case that has been presented to-day. The matter coming before us now is a conference report from committees of the two Houses, who have made an effort to reconcile differences and to present a bill such as we believe the country wants, and such as we think will meet the demands of the people.

The country wants immigration restricted. The difference between my friend the chairman of the House Committee on Immigration and myself is that he is fearful these provisions are so rigid that they will keep out a class of undesirable immigrants. My position is that I want this class of undesirable immigrants kept out. He thinks that the keeping out of the wife of an immigrant may keep out the immigrant. I say if it does, so much the better for this country, if that immigrant is an undesirable immigrant. That is "the milk in the cocoanut." This educational test is not child's play. It is put forward here for the very purpose of excluding undesirable immigration. The figures presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania this morning disclose the fact that the educational test will exclude the very class of immigrants that we do not wish to come in. There were 68,000 of them last year. And of the 84,000 increase of immigration into this country for last year, 78,000 have come from those countries that give us our undesirable immigrants.

Mr. MILES. As I understand the gentleman's position, he favors this bill because it is a class test rather than an educational test.

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. It is a class test, applying the word "test" to the desirability of the immigration. The object of this test is to exclude undesirable immigrants; that is the prime purpose. No measure, except this, can be framed by which undesirable immigration can be kept out. All other tests, all other efforts, have failed.

Now, let us come down to the objections raised to the conference report. What are they? One is that the bill as reported does not allow the wife, if illiterate, to come in with her husband. This objection is based on the supposition that somebody is compelling that husband to come into this country. Now, I think that if a husband will leave his wife even for the purpose of becoming an American citizen and getting the rewards of American labor, such a man is unworthy to become a citizen or even a resident of this country. It is within his own volition whether he will come here or stay in his own country. If he is a man who is willing to pick up bag and baggage and come, leaving his poor, helpless wife behind him, he is the very kind of a man who ought to be kept out of this country.

Several MEMBERS. But you propose to let him in.

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. No; because he will not come without his wife.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Then he is not the kind of a man you speak of.

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. If this man should leave his wife and come to this country, he would not be a fit subject for all this sympathy; he would be a very undesirable addition to our citizenship, but one we could not bar because he would come within the test. But I say such people would be rare because of the application of the principle of which I have just spoken.

My friend from Missouri should measure himself by the position which he occupied here last session. Then he was willing to allow the immigrant to come into this country if he could read and write, leaving behind him his old, decrepit, helpless grandfather, who perhaps was entirely dependent upon him for support, to whom he was the staff of his old age and should be the strong arm for his support and protection. The gentleman was so heartless, so cruel that he was willing that an immigrant should be permitted to come into this country, leaving at home the old grandfather whom he was bound to protect and care for, but becomes sentimental when the same provision is applied to the wife.

The test must be applied somewhere. If you carry the illiterate wife away, what are you to do with the boys between the ages of 16 and 21 who can neither read nor write? They are also subjects of our sympathy. They should not be left there alone. Why, Mr. Speaker, it is enough to cause "tears of iron to roll down Pluto's cheek" to think of separating mother from child, father from old grandfather. But it all must be done if your bill stands as it was when it left the House. And if you admit the wife, as it is sought here to do, the effect will be to admit her father and her grandfather—in fact, to bring in the whole family.

Now, under the application of tests designed to keep them out, the wife who can not read and write will be excluded, and the children also, if they are 16 years old, and can not read and write; but the old father or grandfather, if they are 50 years of age, can come. The effect will be that hundreds will be kept out of the country who would otherwise come, if they could bring the illiterate members of their families with them.

Now, so far as the question of language is concerned, the intention of the committee was to make the provision broad enough to cover all those who would come into this country; those who could speak their native language, or if they had left their native country, then the language of the country of their new residence. Is that not broad enough to cover any reasonable or ordinary individual who wants to come? There may be some peculiar classes of people in Europe who are so careless of their own advancement that they would not even take the trouble to learn to read or write their own language, or take the trouble to learn to read and write the language of the country in which they are living, not their native country. But at the same time they may know the language of some country other than their own, that they have picked up in their peregrinations. Such classes of citizens, I say, are not and can not be desirable immigrants for this or any other country.

As I stated last spring, and as I repeat to-day, this is not a political question, but a question which has received the approbation of both political parties. The Chicago and the St. Louis conventions both declared for such legislation. Let me read, for the benefit of the members of this side of the House, what the Chicago convention said:

> We hold that the most efficient way of protecting American labor is to prevent the importation of foreign pauper labor to compete with it in the home market.

How are you to prevent it? How will you carry out that pledge in your platform? How will you make it operative? The only way that can be devised is by the application of an educational test which will keep out that class of paupers.

The Republican party has gone still further, and declared in favor of an educational test in this very platform, making no exception whatever. Upon that declaration you went before the country, and upon that you got the great foreign vote. Yet for my own party, no better day could dawn upon Democracy through the influence of any one measure than when the majority of that side of the House shall repudiate the declaration of your party in that platform.

Mr. FISCHER. Let me ask the gentleman a question. If a man should leave the old country and come to this, leaving his wife at home, intending to send for her after he had acquired a residence, and should commit bigamy here, on the passage of this bill would it not be impossible to prosecute him for that crime?

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Under the conference report the wife who could not be permitted under the provisions of the bill to land, or to be sent for by the husband, can be brought here without inflicting an injury upon any individual in this country, because the report itself provides that the act shall not go into effect until the 1st day of July, and during the six months intervening every possible contingency that can be suggested may be provided for by husbands availing themselves of that postponement of the operation of the act.

So I am satisfied that the bill as it stands is a good one, and the members of the House will come to the conclusion, I think, that if the educational test is to be applied as it is here applied it will inflict the less damage and the least evil that can possibly happen, and at the same time exclude undesirable immigrants.

It is no small matter when we reflect upon the fact of their coming here at the increase of 33 per cent a year, with our own labor out of employment to the extent of one and a half millions of men to-day, and the condition daily becoming worse. These men out of work have for their only hope of relief this appeal to this Congress.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I yield now seven minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have then three minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I voted for the original House bill, though with very grave doubts as to the feasibility of the test of illiteracy which it applied to persons seeking a home in the United States. If a man's education were in any sense an index of his character, it might be accepted with less reluctance as the pledge of his good citizenship after his settlement among us. But I admit the difficulty of finding any basis for the exclusion of aliens not open to objections more or less forcible. We must deal with the problem as we find it. After all, the test of illiteracy is perhaps less open to complaint than any other that has been proposed, though we know that many a man has found these shores, both poor and ignorant, whose influence in the community has illustrated all the virtues of good citizenship.

Nevertheless, in common, I believe, with nearly everybody in the House, I gave my assent to the House bill. Nor should I have any hesitation in giving my assent to the bill which, after prolonged debate, passed the Senate; but I do not feel any sense of duty to approve the conference report. This report generously concedes everything to the House. It says that the Senate recedes from its amendments and agrees to the House bill, and then it proceeds to strike out of the House bill every sentence after the enacting clause, and adds a variety of matter not in either bill. I am opposed to the conference report, because, unlike the House bill, it undertakes to deal with the family as if it were not a unit, admitting a man without admitting his illiterate wife. I believe that no immigrant to the United States is desirable who is placed in the attitude of deserting his family, and I regard it as vastly more important for an immigrant to enjoy the society of his wife than of his grandfather, as this bill humanely enables him to do. [Laughter.]

I do not, however, desire to approach the question upon mere sentiment. Our friends who are in favor of the bill have dismissed all considerations that might lead us to regard the anxiety of a man to bring into the country to which he has immigrated the loved ones who surrounded him in his native land. And yet these very gentlemen who have dismissed with satire that sentiment, have graciously admitted into the bill a provision in favor of Cuban refugees. It will bring, and undoubtedly was intended to bring, a thrill of satisfaction and joy to the insurgent camps of Cuba to find that after two years' of debate the American Republic has nobly conceded to the Cuban patriots the right to enter the United States without a civil-service examination. [Laughter.]

I believe that we are, in all political parties, prone to exaggerate the dangers of immigration. Already we have heard in this debate all the misfortunes of American labor attributed to the immigration of laboring people into the United States. For one I do not believe that the honest labor of a man in any avenue of human employment diminishes the opportunities of life. If it is true that every laboring man added to the population of the United States crowds and jostles everybody else, then the prospect of civilization is melancholy indeed. If there is no more room in the world; if the United States is cursed and not blessed by increasing population; if the census of 1890 is a token of disaster and not a monument of progress, then we should adopt the gloomy view once indulged by Professor Huxley and hope that some friendly comet might smite the earth and end once for all the tragedy of social life. Gentlemen, this can not be a sane and profitable outlook on human affairs.

The addition of an intelligent workingman to the productive resources of the United States, instead of taking away from any man's chances in the world, broadens and enlarges all the opportunities of modern society. [Applause.] Therefore I feel that we are likely to overstate the dangers of immigration. It is one of the peculiar glories of the American Republic that in the last forty years we have taken millions of people out of the poverty of the Old World and given them an American prospect in life. My friend from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] says that we ought to exclude the anarchist, the pauper, the criminal. We have done that, and I believe that an effective execution of the laws now on the statute book is all that would be necessary to reconcile my friend from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] to the general course of civilization in the United States. [Laughter.]

We are at fault when we lay all the evils that beset us to the admission of aliens. The radicalism of to-day, the dangerous social and political agitation of our times does not speak a foreign language. It does not inherit either its ideas or its purposes from any foreign country. Even in Chicago, when we had to grapple with the perils of anarchy, it was an Irish policeman, Michael Degan, whose murder brought on a great trial by jury, at the end of which the law of the land was vindicated under the directions of Knute Matson, a Norwegian sheriff of Cook County, Ill.

In the neighborhood where I live we have always been anxious to have people come in and make their homes among us. For years we maintained a bureau for the purpose of inducing immigrants to settle our prairies. The whole Western country would to-day be an uninhabited wilderness if we had not been able to persuade intelligent working people from many lands to make their homes there. For one I can not think that the time has come to utterly abandon this policy and to send a hostile message to the industrious millions of the Old World who love, even afar off, the banner of the Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Did I understand the gentleman to say "intelligent men and women of the Old World?"

Mr. DOLLIVER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I thought so. This bill is not aimed at intelligence.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does the gentleman on the other side desire to occupy any time now?

Mr. DANFORD. I will yield two minutes to my colleague from Ohio.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If it is the desire of the House to vote, I am perfectly willing. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. DANFORD. If the gentleman does not desire to occupy his time, I will yield to another gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to occupy any further time?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If the House desires the vote to take place now, I am willing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio gives notice that he will yield time to another gentleman.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Then I shall yield three minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER].

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, there are two reasons which in my judgment render it inadvisable to adopt the conference report which is now before the House. One is, as the gentleman from Iowa has so felicitously said, that while the bill permits the immigrant who possesses the legal qualifications to bring in his grandfather, it prohibits him from bringing in his wife, if unfortunately she should be unable to read and write.

Another, Mr. Speaker, and more serious objection is that the bill discriminates against those foreigners who have already immigrated, many of whom have already become American citizens, by preventing them from bringing to this country their parents or their children, unless their parents or their children should be able to stand, as the gentleman from Iowa expresses it, a civil-service examination. These features of the measure are, in my opinion, indefensible, and ought by all means to be corrected. I do not participate, Mr. Speaker, in the idea that foreign immigration is an unmixed evil. I do not think that we should, by restrictive legislation, prevent a desirable class of foreigners from coming to our shores. We want as many of them to come South as can be induced to do so, at least for some years yet. While, sir, I think it is entirely proper that we should restrict and prevent, as far as possible, the immigration of the classes which will not make good citizens, yet I think that this bill is entirely too radical in its provisions, and that it ought at least to permit those of our foreign-born citizens or residents who are with us to bring to their adopted country their parents or their children. It is going beyond the bounds of all reason to say that a man who is qualified under the present law to be admitted to our territory shall not be able to bring with him his wife and his children under the age of majority because they are unable to read and write the English language or the language of their country or of their residence. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, not to speak of others which present themselves to me, but which I have no time to elaborate, I shall be compelled to vote against the bill.

Mr. DANFORD. I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER].

Mr. TAYLER. Mr. Speaker, while one or two of the provisions of this bill do not meet with my approval, I shall vote for it, because I fear that if we do not now pass the bill we shall not pass it at the present session. I think that, in one or two respects, the language could be made more accurate and satisfactory, but the objectionable features do not reach the merits of the controversy. If the construction which is suggested by its opponents should be put upon the bill and any unintended hardship follow, I am sure that a succeeding Congress will be swift to correct the error. I am too much interested in the subject and too desirous of speedy relief to jeopardize what is in sight for relatively immaterial details.

Mr. Speaker, it is the philosophy of protection which lies behind and justifies this bill. It is the law of self-preservation that demands it. It is quite as necessary that we should protect ourselves against cheap labor as that we should protect ourselves against the products of cheap labor. It is just as important that we should defend our civilization against the ravaging inroads of other civilizations when those ravages come through the immigration of cheap labor as when they come through the product of that labor. The forcible remarks just made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] followed this line and struck, as it seems to me, to the very heart of this controversy.

The civilizing process, so far as it relates to the products of cheaper labor, comes through protective-tariff acts. We can not civilize the goods themselves, but we can prevent their invasion of civilization; that is to say, we can prevent their lowering the rewards which the American citizen receives for his labor. It is the purchasing power of this reward which fixes the character and quality of our civilization.

The civilizing process, so far as it relates to the importation of the cheap labor, comes through laws restricting immigration. How can these laws so operate as to minimize the deteriorating effects of modern immigration?

Viewed from one standpoint, two classes of people have come to this country from other shores. One is made up of peoples who, when they mingle with the American people, become Americans; of those who freely and naturally commingle with our people and our ways; who raise themselves to the American standard; who love the American flag; who become all that the American people are. In a few years they are welded to the old stock, leaving impressions and taking impressions, and producing a generally homogeneous result.

The other class possesses no inherent capacity to assimilate. They do not, except in rare and noticeable instances, become absorbed into the tissue of our own people. Their fiber never changes. Though among us and apparently of us, they are aliens in spirit, in tradition, and, generally, in language.

Such a people, in the broadest and most patriotic sense, can never be said to be desirable elements in our social fabric.

If what I have said be true and be understood, I need not waste words of eulogy on those splendid people who, though of foreign birth, have helped to make our country what it is and who share with us a just pride in the magnificent empire which they have helped to make magnificent. They are less Americans than I take them to be if they oppose the spirit of this measure.

The disturbing, the threatening, fact is that the character of our immigration has radically changed in the last twenty-five years. From some countries we have received a brave, stalwart, and desirable people; from others we have received an increasing horde whose influence is, and has been, distinctly deteriorating and demoralizing. It is against the latter that we would rouse the spirit of patriotism, and, if that will not suffice, we appeal to a spirit of self-interest.

The proof is at hand. By the census of 1890 we learn that out of every million of native-born white inhabitants of the United States 898 were inmates of prisons; out of every million of foreign-born whites 1,768 were inmates of prisons.

Out of every million of native-born whites, 829 were paupers in almshouses; out of every million of foreign-born whites, 3,131 were paupers in almshouses.

To put it in another form, in proportion to the population there are twice as many foreign-born white prisoners as native born. There are nearly four times as many foreign-born white paupers as native born.

Comment is unnecessary, if not misleading. No eloquence could paint in more vivid words the appalling facts which these figures present.

Let us now examine another item of proof more convincing, perhaps, than that just adduced.

During the year ending June 30, 1896, the number of immigrants landed at ports of the United States was 343,267. These brought with them money amounting to $4,917,818, or $14.90 each. How long did that sum suffice to support these new additions to our idle millions? How long was it until these poor people became a public charge or took the bread out of the mouth of some American workman or workwoman by underbidding for his or her job? Is it for any such purpose that our gates are thrown open and the toiling masses of other lands invited to come in? Have those who are here no rights that we are bound to respect? Every man who was born under or has adopted our flag has an equal right with every other, but I submit that he has a greater, an infinitely greater, right than those who are yet in the homes of their fathers across the water. Unhappy the country and distressed the people which do not recognize and assert that right.

In the same connection we learn that, while the average amount brought by the German immigrant was $30, the Russian brought $6.75, the Italian $8.50, and the Austro-Hungarian $11.70. No man can contemplate these unhappy people without pity: but his pity is more bountiful and effective if expressed before its unhappy object has left his home in another country.

From June 30, 1885, to June 30, 1896, the number of immigrants landed at our ports was 4,694,120, and of this amazing number approximately 2,500,000 were males above the age of 15.

The prosperity of this country has been threatened, and adversity has been and is upon us. Many causes have conspired to produce this result. Has the introduction of 2,500,000 able-bodied workmen affected it any? Doubtless we can absorb many thousands of immigrants every year, but we do not want to absorb any that we can not assimilate.

Forty per cent, I think, of the immigration of the last ten years has been distinctly undesirable. It has demoralized the social conditions in many sections of the country. It has demoralized labor and wages wherever it has gone. If there is work for him to do, the immigrant who is ready to come up to the American standard of living is a gain to the community to which he comes. The immigrant who will not raise himself to our standard is a menace to our civilization, no matter how much work there may be for him to do. He has no proper place among us.

These ought to be self-evident facts; yet we find them disputed. I protest that America is not an asylum. We want all to come for whom we have work and who can understand us and become a part of us; but we do not want and do not welcome any others. Let no man mistake the temper of the American people on this point.

But let us see now if this educational test is calculated to mitigate the evil from which we suffer and from which, if relief does not soon come, we must suffer more.

While intelligence is not the criterion of virtue, it yet furnishes, along broad lines, a reasonably safe test. We do not need to look about us to find our proof. It is not to individual instances that we need to point. Indeed, it is not to any general law or to any generally accepted idea of the value of intelligence that we need to look. Considered in relation to its application to this subject of immigration, we have only to look to the statistics of immigration for the past year. Let any doubting Thomas look at these figures here presented.

Illiteracy of immigrants over 14 years of age, year ending June 30, 1896.

It requires only a cursory examination of this table to disclose some interesting and exceedingly instructive facts.

Among other things to be discerned in it is that the ability to read and write would seem to be a reasonably safe test of the desirability of an immigrant. No doubt there are many illiterate immigrants who will make good citizens, and many immigrants who can read and write who are wholly undesirable; but, in the main, this table indicates that the proposed test is strikingly and unexpectedly feasible and effective.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BUCK] made a very eloquent and forcible speech against the imposition of any barrier against the admission of foreigners to our shores; yet he admitted that the American people wanted such a measure as this passed, and declared that even in his own city, among his own constituents, there was an overwhelming sentiment in its favor.

He was, of course, compelled to assert that his people were wrong, and that their sober second thought would lead them to the other opinion.

I am ready to admit, Mr. Speaker, that the people are sometimes wrong; perhaps they are often wrong. If this question had sprung up in a day; if we had not had time for reflection; if the American people in the field and workshop, busy or idle, at work or in the quiet of their homes, had not been for years thinking upon these things, it might, with some force, be urged that they had not given it fair and calm consideration. But they have been thinking of it, they have been suffering, and they have apprehended at least this cause of their sufferings. They have convictions stronger, deeper, more uncompromising on this subject than on any other in the domain of politics, and they demand action, prompt, vigorous, and effective. Shall we give it to them, or shall we, in the calm comfort of our own surroundings, say that they do not know what they want? For my part I have neither the desire nor the presumption to disobey them.

Mr. Speaker, let me indulge a moment in retrospect. The day after my first nomination as a candidate for Congress I addressed, to a gathering of my fellow-citizens who had assembled to congratulate me, the following words:

> We welcome to the soil of America every man who can become and expects to become a respectable and industrious part of our people; who can assimilate our ways and our civilization; who will become in the highest and best sense an American. It has been said that the gates of Castle Garden swing inward. That is right; they ought to swing inward; they must swing inward. But they must be locked. They must open only to him who holds the key; the key of intelligence, of morality, of health, of civilization; above all, the key of peace and good order. They must not open to the touch of every vagabond and criminal, of every anarchist and pauper, of those who can not live and will not live as our American people live. They must not open to the touch of him who may hope, or whose training may lead him, to inject the virus of his contamination into the healthy life of this patriotic and law-abiding people.
> And so I say that the policy of protection implies not only protection against cheap goods, but protection against cheap men. Tariff laws will not be fully effective if they are not supplemented with wise and just laws restricting immigration. Upon this question I have the most profound and determined convictions, and they will find expression if I take a seat in Congress.

On this, the first opportunity which has presented itself to keep that pledge, I take pleasure in fulfilling it. It is a source of satisfaction to add that time and experience have made more profound and determined the conditions which I then expressed, and to renew the promise that my voice and vote will always be found on the side of a cause so justly entitled to the approval of the American people.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DANFORD. I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, how much time is yielded to me?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has until 4 o'clock and 15 minutes—twelve and one-half minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, this question of restricting immigration ought not to disturb gentlemen because of any possible partisan character it might under other circumstances have, for the reason that both of the great political parties have declared in favor of its restriction. It is true, Mr. Speaker, that at all times we have not been absolutely frank upon this question in our expressions, and in some of the reasons that are given for the various provisions of legislation that have engaged the attention of the House gentlemen have not always been ingenuous. I undertake to say that the purpose of the great mass of the people of the United States, and of members of this House, in discussing this kind of legislation is to curtail largely the immigration that is coming to our shores.

We have attempted to disguise this purpose in various phrases. We have talked about prohibiting the coming of the paupers, the ignorant, the vicious, the diseased; but the real purpose, Mr. Speaker, is to lessen largely the thousands and tens of thousands that every year are crowding into our labor field. The American people have begun to see that the great duty of statesmanship in this country is to lengthen and broaden the labor field of the United States, and they are looking to us for the adoption of practical and sufficient methods. They will not be content with legislation that may stimulate the building of great mills for the manufacture of iron and steel and cotton and woolen products if those mills are to be filled with foreigners. They want a labor system that will give employment to Americans. If we are to be supplied in these wants by foreign labor, our people are wise enough to know that it makes but little difference to them upon which side of the Atlantic the labor is performed. In either case it works the same hardship to our people. In either case the day's labor given to the foreigner is a day's labor filched from one of us.

Mr. Speaker, if our institutions are to be preserved, if our social order is to be maintained, it will be because the labor field of the United States each year is to be so enlarged as that places shall be found therein for all men who want to labor to find a place; and how we shall attain that end and how we shall maintain the present American wage or increase it is the great problem for the statesmanship of this land. It must be done. Our institutions are to be perpetuated, if at all, by the men who hold the ballot, and if they are to be perpetuated, it will be because the homes in which those men live are homes of comfort, homes of contentment. Those homes can have that character only when the wage is ample, and that can be ample only when the labor field is so enlarged, so broadened, so lengthened, that every man may find a place in it at a compensating wage.

The question that presents itself now is not such a one as existed fifty years ago and which was referred to by my friend from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] a while ago. He said that during the last fifty years it has been the crowning glory of this country that we had welcomed many millions of immigrants. Ah! but the conditions have changed. Then the immigrants that came to our shores came from England, from Ireland, from Scotland, from Germany, from the Scandinavian States. They were welcome. They were worthy, they were industrious, they were intelligent. Then we were but beginning our great system of internal improvements. Then we were just commencing the work of building the 185,000 miles of railway that we have to-day in the United States. As those immigrants arrived at the seaboard they were given employment in that great work, and in its conduct they were carried West to the broad prairies. Then there were millions of fertile acres awaiting settlement under the homestead laws. Then the labor field was abundant. Then the places waited for the men. Not such the conditions that prevail now, Mr. Speaker. Those fertile lands are all absorbed. That great field of labor has been filled. The work has been completed. There are no railways numbered by thousands of miles each year now being constructed. There are no inviting homesteads awaiting the advent of the industrious and enterprising immigrant from abroad. Again, the character of the immigration is largely changed. Now it comes from eastern Europe. The old sources of supply do not now furnish the immigrant, save in comparatively small numbers. Now it is composed of an entirely different class of people from those we had to deal with years ago.

Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt but that this very day, inclement as it is, there are thousands and hundreds of thousands of American citizens who have been crowded out of their places in the labor field of the United States by the other thousands and hundreds of thousands that have come to us from abroad. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.] We have received an average of 250,000 able-bodied laborers every year during the last ten years. In that way two and one-quarter millions have been added to the fifteen or sixteen millions of native Amercans who must work in order that they may eat.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. HEPBURN. Not now. I am told that the average earnings of each of these laborers is about $409 per year; so you have the monstrous sum of a hundred million dollars each year that has been wrested from the wage earners who belong peculiarly to us and whom it is our duty first to care for. Ah, Mr. Speaker, this is not simply a question of sentiment. It is a question of patriotism. It is a question of whether we can keep up the American wage, of whether we can keep places in the labor field for our own working people to delve in. Mr. Speaker, it is not simply a question of the lowering of wages; it is not simply that; it is a question of driving out of employment millions of our own people and leaving them without any wage at all by this cruel, relentless, merciless competition. Have any of you gentlemen ever tried, in thought, to place yourselves in the position of an American citizen, industrious, having a family, loving that family, who knows that they eat, day by day, as he labors, and that when he is out of employment there is no comfort in his home? Can you enter into his feelings as he leaves his home in the morning to go out into the competition which is thrust upon him by this undesirable immigration, seeking for a place to work, begging, not for alms, but for a place where he may labor? Have you tried to follow him and his thought as he goes from man to man, meeting only denial everywhere—everywhere told there is no demand for labor, that the places are all filled, that the seekers are far more numerous than the places? Ah, gentlemen, what a dreadful condition is that in which to place our countrymen. And when the long day is thus spent, when the shadows of the night come—shadows not so dark as those enshrouding his soul—and he turns his face homeward, knowing what he is to meet there, knowing of the cheerless hearth, knowing that there is no light in the window, knowing that there is no food in the house, knowing that wife and starving children await him—what think you of that man's agony? Fancy him trying to frame the sentences in which he will tell those at home of the fruitless, bootless efforts of all that day. And in the nighttime, when his child awakens and cries out in its hunger, what lullaby can that man sing to give quiet to that starving child?

That man has the ballot? Will he be content with existing conditions while he lives in a home like that? Can you expect it? In view of what your knowledge must be of the action of such a man, does not this question rise above all others that have engaged our attention? Is it not primary in its importance? Is it not the first thing for us to consider how we can so enlarge our labor field that our own people can have a place in which to work [applause], so that they may earn their daily bread, so that there may be contentment in these homes—the homes that inspire political action and direct the fatal or the beneficent courses of the ballot? Gentlemen, that is the question for us. Its importance can not be magnified. This bill is not all that it should be. It may in instances work a hardship, but it is a step in the right direction. It will keep out of our labor field some that are not of us. It will give places to some, now unemployed and wellnigh discouraged, that are.

Sentimentalists talk about dividing the blessings of the great Republic with all the world. Ah, let us care for our own first. Let us keep these places in the American labor field for Americans to delve in. [Applause.] And if there is something to dispense afterwards, then let us be charitable. [Applause.] But let us be just to Americans. Let us preserve our labor fields for Americans. Let us see to it that American homes are homes of contentment, because American wages are ample. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Speaker, so long as that is the case, American institutions are safe. Our social order will be secure. Our rights of property will be preserved. Socialism and anarchy find no place in contented homes. They are the worst but necessary products of overcrowded labor fields. Congestion of labor breeds discussion of schemes of redistribution of the world's wealth. Give to the honest workingmen of America the contented and contenting homes that are possible when a fair day's work brings a fair wage, and the institutions the fathers gave us will endure. There will be no occupation for the pessimist or the foreboding dreamer.

Mr. Speaker, the working men and women of the country have the right to demand this legislation. This is their country. This is their labor field. You have no right to give away either. The labor field of America as much belongs to Americans as does the public domain, and is infinitely more important to them. Would gentlemen of this House give away to foreigners the public domain? Can you with more right give away the American labor field? Mr. Speaker, daily my gratitude increases because I am an American. My love is first for my countrymen and my country. I want to see them everywhere prosperous and content. I think all other gentlemen here feel as do I. Then, gentlemen, I beseech you that we legislate first for our countrymen, for their prosperity, for their homes, for the preservation to them of their labor field. This conference report is in the main right. It does not do all possible, but it accomplishes much. Let us adopt it, and if there are evils correct them some other day.

Mr. DANFORD. I now ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The House, by unanimous consent, ordered that a vote be taken at this time. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 116, noes 105.

Mr. BARTHOLDT, Mr. SULZER, and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 131, nays 117, not voting 107; as follows:

Mr. MILLIKEN with Mr. WOODMAN on this question.

Mr. COX. My colleague, Mr. RICHARDSON, is confined to his room by sickness. I ask unanimous consent that he be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. My colleague, Mr. DALZELL, is absent, sick. He is paired with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COBB]. My colleague, if present, would vote "aye."

Mr. DOCKERY. I have voted in the negative on this question; but as I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. KIEFER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. HEATWOLE, is absent in consequence of sickness, and he has instructed me to state that he would vote "no" if present.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I have a letter from my colleague on the committee from Illinois, General MARSH. He wishes me to state that he is sick, but if present, would vote "no."

Mr. MORSE. My colleague, Mr. MCCALL, is absent, and I have no doubt if he were present he would vote "aye."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. DANFORD. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It is with regard to the proposition just stated, to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will then consider that motion pending.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I make the point or the suggestion that on a question of adopting a conference report such a motion to reconsider and lay on the table is not customary. I do not remember, during my service in the House, of ever having heard it submitted.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. What difference does it make?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. None, practically; but I would like to have a ruling of the Chair upon it. It might be important hereafter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to understand why the House could not reconsider its action. Of course, a motion to suspend the rules would not be subject to reconsideration.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The objection I made was more in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry, to find out whether the motion was in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not think of any reason why it should not be made. Of course, if the gentleman has any suggestion, the Chair will hear it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I have none, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DANFORD] will be laid upon the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PACIFIC RAILROAD LIENS.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pacific Railroads be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire and report to the Senate whether the executive department has, by existing law, authority to foreclose the Government mortgage or lien on the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific railroads, or either of them, and sell the property and assets thereof, without additional legislation, and inquire and report what authority, if any, the President of the United States or the Attorney-General may possess to contract with any person or persons in advance of a foreclosure and sale of such property, or any part thereof, respecting the amount that shall be bid by contemplated purchasers, and whether it is not the duty of the President under existing law, before causing a foreclosure of such mortgage or lien, to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to "redeem or otherwise clear off all the paramount liens, mortgages, or incumbrances upon such property by paying the sums lawfully due in respect thereof, out of the Treasury;" and that in the meantime, and pending the report of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to refrain from entering into any further or additional stipulations or agreements respecting the sale of said property or any portion thereof, or any fund arising therefrom, or in any manner belonging thereto or connected therewith.

Mr. ALLEN. Before the request for present consideration is submitted to the Senate, I desire to say a few words in explanation of the resolution.

On the 23d of this month the Senate adopted a resolution calling for information from the Attorney-General respecting a stipulation he had entered into with the reorganization committee of the Union Pacific Railroad Company as to the minimum amount that should be bid by them for the Union Pacific in the event of a foreclosure and sale of that property.

The response of the Attorney-General to the resolution is found in Document No. 83, second session Fifty-fourth Congress, and I will read from it briefly. I read the letter of the Attorney-General in response to the resolution. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., January 23, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor, pursuant to the Senate resolution of this date, to say that an agreement has been made with what is commonly known as the reorganization committee of the Union Pacific Railway Company respecting the foreclosure of the Government lien on property of said company. I transmit herewith a copy of the letter of the President of the United States under authority of which the agreement was made and foreclosure proceedings have been commenced, and copies of the correspondence which embodies the agreement.

The names of the gentlemen who comprise the reorganization committee are as follows: Louis Fitzgerald, chairman; Jacob H. Schiff, T. Jefferson Coolidge, jr., Chauncey M. Depew, Marvin Hughitt, Oliver Ames, 2d.

These papers set forth all the information called for by the resolution.

After the closing of the agreement I designated the United States Trust Company of New York as the depositary, and thereupon, upon the 21st instant, the sum of $4,500,000 was deposited therein in conformity with the terms of the agreement. The certificate representing such deposit is now in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

JUDSON HARMON,
Attorney-General.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

Accompanying this is a letter from the President of the United States to the Attorney-General, as follows:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, January 12, 1897.

DEAR SIR: The bill which has been for some time pending before the Congress, providing for the adjustment and extension of the indebtedness of the Pacific railroads to the Government of the United States has been defeated in the House of Representatives.

In the case of the Union Pacific Railroad and the Kansas Pacific Railroad, a default in the payment of their indebtedness having occurred, and suits having been commenced for the foreclosure of the lien upon said roads which is paramount to the lien and security of the United States, you are hereby directed, pursuant to the provisions of an act of Congress passed March 3, 1887, after taking such precautions and perfecting such arrangements as are possible to assure as far as practicable the payment of their indebtedness to the Government as a result of the suits now pending or others to be instituted, to take such proceedings in the courts as shall be needful to protect and defend the rights and interests of the United States in respect of such indebtedness, and to take steps to foreclose the mortgages or liens of the United States upon the property of these railroad companies.

In the case of the other aided Pacific railroads as to which no foreclosure suits are pending, a different situation is presented, which requires further consideration before deciding the course to be taken by the Government.

Yours, truly,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Hon. JUDSON HARMON,
Attorney-General of the United States.

The Attorney-General sets out in a letter to Louis Fitzgerald, chairman of the reorganization committee, of No. 120 Broadway, New York, certain modifications he insists on being put in the stipulation that was subsequently entered into between the Attorney-General and the reorganization committee respecting the price that is to be paid for these properties in the event of foreclosure and sale. It is sufficient to state that the Attorney-General insisted upon $45,754,059.99 instead of $45,000,000 offered by the reorganization committee.

Mr. President, as I understand the stipulation between the Attorney-General and the reorganization committee, as far as I can gather it from this document, it embraces the subject of a sale of the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific railroads in their entirety—the roadbed, the right of way, the terminal facilities, the sinking fund, the lands granted in aid of their construction that have not yet been disposed of, and all the securities that are held for lands that have been contracted; in other words, that the reorganization committee, or those for whom they may act by virtue of the purchase to be made, will be subrogated to all the rights of the present corporations.

Without detaining the Senate any length of time on this matter, it is sufficient for me to say that the sinking fund alone amounts to $14,000,000 or $15,000,000, and that is secured, I understand, in the form of Government bonds. The lands granted in aid of the construction of these roads amount to about 18,000,000 acres. Many of them have been contracted to be sold to private individuals and corporations, but the contracts or securities for unpaid balances are yet the property of the corporation.

A dispute has arisen also respecting the terminal facilities of the roads, and especially of the Union Pacific. The Union Pacific occupies and owns a large bridge at Omaha across the Missouri River, costing many thousands of dollars to construct; it owns valuable terminal facilities at Council Bluffs, Iowa; and altogether it is highly important that Congress should know exactly what is to be conveyed by the decree of foreclosure when entered. The resolution which I have just offered calls for information through the Committee on Pacific Railroads respecting all these matters, so that Congress can act intelligently upon the subject when it comes before it.

There is another thing, Mr. President, and a very important matter, in connection with the resolution, and I desire to call particular attention to it. The President of the United States has directed the Attorney-General to foreclose and protect by legal proceedings the interests of the United States in these properties. He does that by virtue of the act of Congress of March 3, 1887, found on pages 488 to 492, inclusive, of the twenty-fourth volume of the United States Statutes at Large, as he says. The only portion of the act which bears on the question now before the Senate is found in section 4, and I will read it:

SEC. 4. That whenever, in the opinion of the President, it shall be deemed necessary to the protection of the interests and the preservation of the security of the United States in respect of its lien, mortgage, or other interest in any of the property of any or all of the several companies upon which a lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance paramount to the right, title, or interest of the United States for the same property, or any part of the same, may exist and be then lawfully liable to be enforced, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, under the direction of the President, redeem or otherwise clear off such paramount lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance by paying the sums lawfully due in respect thereof out of the Treasury; and the United States shall thereupon become and be subrogated to all rights and securities theretofore pertaining to the debt, mortgage, lien, or other incumbrance in respect of which such payment shall have been made. It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General, under the direction of the President, to take all such steps and proceedings, in the courts and otherwise, as shall be needful to redeem such lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance, and to protect and defend the rights and interests of the United States in respect of the matters in this section mentioned, and to take steps to foreclose any mortgages or liens of the United States on any such railroad property.

The important thing in this section is the first duty it imposes on the President of the United States, and that is, that whenever the lien of the United States upon any of these bond-aided roads is imperiled in any respect, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States not to direct the Attorney-General to foreclose, but to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem or clear off, to use the language of the statute, the title of the superior lien holder.

Mr. President, if you were upon the bench and the question were submitted to you, you would hold that the first duty incumbent upon the President or incumbent upon the trustee, whoever he might be, would be to protect the second lien holder by a redemption of the property from the lien of the first lien holder. You could not, in a proper construction of that statute, direct a foreclosure of the mortgage on the Government lien without taking steps to subrogate the United States or the interest of the second lien holder to the interests of the first lien holder. Has the President of the United States taken any steps to cause the first liens to be paid off? Not a thing has been done, as I understand it, and I regret the chairman of the committee is not present this morning to hear what I say. There is no pretense that the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Treasury has made any effort to redeem this property. I will not go further and say that no effort of that kind will be made, but I do say that it is the duty of the President of the United States—and he should be bound by the law as much as the humblest citizen of the land—to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem these properties strictly in accordance with section 4 of the act quoted. It is important for us to know whether that has been done. It is important for us to know whether that will be done or not.

Suppose, in a proceeding to foreclose the Government lien by the Attorney-General, parties defendant should in their answer, or in their plea, or in whatever form the question might arise, say that the power, under the statute, of the Attorney-General to foreclose was dependent upon a compliance or an attempt to comply in the first instance with the first provision of the section, would it not be a good defense, because he only has power to foreclose the lien after the Secretary of the Treasury has exhausted the duties imposed upon him or required to be performed by him under the law?

The right of the Attorney-General to foreclose is a secondary right dependent upon the fulfillment of, or at least an honest attempt to fulfill, the first provisions of the section.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether the law prescribes that specifically or whether that is his conclusion from the reading of it?

Mr. ALLEN. I will read the section again for the benefit of the Senator from Georgia, or that portion of it bearing on this question, and he can draw his own conclusion:

SEC. 4. That whenever, in the opinion of the President, it shall be deemed necessary to the protection of the interests and the preservation of the security of the United States in respect of its lien, mortgage, or other interest in any of the property of any or all of the several companies upon which a lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance paramount to the right, title, or interest of the United States for the same property, or any part of the same, may exist and be then lawfully liable to be enforced, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, under the direction of the President, redeem or otherwise clear off such paramount lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance by paying the sums lawfully due in respect thereof out of the Treasury.

The language is mandatory.

Mr. BACON. Then does the provision for foreclosure follow that?

Mr. ALLEN. The provision for foreclosure follows that, it is true, but certainly the Senator from Georgia will not claim that the President has power to direct a foreclosure by the Attorney-General without first having attempted to comply with the provisions of the statute I have just read.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will not understand me as taking issue with him from the fact that I am asking him a question.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, no; I do not.

Mr. BACON. I am asking it that I may be enlightened.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. I ask the Senator to yield simply for a question. I should like to ask the Senator if in his judgment the statute which he has just read bars the United States from the right to foreclose upon these roads without first paying off the prior liens?

Mr. ALLEN. No, Mr. President; I do not take any position of that kind. I do take the position, however, that if the President of the United States obeys the law as you and I are required to obey it, he will direct the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem the prior lien and carry out the mandatory provision of the law.

Mr. CLARK. Then I understand the Senator to take the position that no foreclosure should be attempted by the Executive of the United States until the United States has first paid in full, out of the money in the Treasury and the money of the people, the prior liens upon the road.

Mr. ALLEN. Either paid in full or made an honest attempt to pay in full. That is my position.

Mr. CLARK. We certainly could pay them if we made the attempt. I can not believe that the Senator wants the Government of the United States to pay out of the Treasury of the United States all the money that is due on the first-mortgage liens upon the road before the Government shall take action to foreclose. I can not believe that, because I know the Senator from Nebraska is an eminent jurist and a friend of the people of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish the Senator from Wyoming could believe it.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, may I——

Mr. ALLEN. Let me answer the Senator from Wyoming, and then I will yield. There is nothing, Mr. President, in this bluster that the "Senator from Nebraska" can not believe that the President ought to pay out of the money in the Treasury a sufficient amount to redeem these properties from the superior liens. Mr. President, that is the plain mandatory language of the law. It says the President of the United States shall direct the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem these properties, and it says he shall direct him to redeem the properties out of the money in the Treasury of the United States. If the policy laid down in the statute is wrong, it was for Congress to determine that fact when the statute was enacted.

The Senator from Wyoming may excuse his conscience if he desires to; he may excuse the President of the United States from a failure to comply with the law if he sees proper; he may characterize me in ironical terms if he sees fit; I care nothing for either, nor for the language he may use regarding me. I say there is no honest man on the face of the earth, not moved by personal or party motive, who can construe the language of section 4 of the statute in any other way than that it is the bounden duty of the President of the United States to cause the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem these properties out of money in the Treasury. All through the statutes, the history of these roads, from 1862 down to the present time, there runs the thought that it would be the duty and the province of the Government to take these roads and own and operate them, and I challenge the Senator from Wyoming or any other Senator to dispute that statement. I now yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT. I thought I would like to get the Senator's opinion on the true construction of the statute, because it has, I will say very plainly, troubled me. The last clause in the section, as the Senator knows, is this:

And to take steps to foreclose any mortgages or liens of the United States on any such railroad property.

What I wish to inquire of the Senator is whether he thinks or does not think that that gives the President a definite and independent power as disconnected from what has gone before it?

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Connecticut knows quite well that he can not disconnect sentences and sections of an act bearing upon a given subject; that they must be construed in pari materia. Now, look at the provisions of the act——

Mr. PLATT. It is simply the question whether he has both remedies or whether it is all one remedy.

Mr. ALLEN. That is, whether it furnishes remedies in the alternative or not?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. It is not couched in the language of the alternative. Following what I read some time ago, after the Secretary is required to redeem, the section says:

And the United States shall thereupon become and be subrogated to all rights and securities theretofore pertaining to the debt, mortgage, lien, or other incumbrance in respect of which such payment shall have been made.

The payment must be made by the Secretary of the Treasury out of money in the Treasury, and the Government by force of the fact becomes subrogated to all the rights of the prior lien holders. Suppose it should appear that the Government of the United States is not in a condition to make and can not, by force of circumstances which can not be removed, make the redemption, then I admit under such circumstances, if the Government can not comply with the first requirements of that section, independent of the statute and by force of law that exists outside of statutes, the Government would have a right to go into the courts of equity of the country and foreclose the mortgages.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator will permit me, the statute having provided for the redemption of the prior mortgage under the clause which the Senator read, then there is a period, and it proceeds to say:

It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General, under the direction of the President, to take all such steps and proceedings, in the courts and otherwise, as shall be needful to redeem such lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance, and to protect and defend the rights and interests of the United States in respect of the matters in this section mentioned, and to take steps to foreclose any mortgages or liens of the United States on any such railroad property.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. The question which I confess has troubled me is whether that authorizes the President to direct the Attorney-General to make foreclosure when there has been no prior effort to redeem the prior mortgage. I think that it does, but I am not sure about that.

Mr. ALLEN. Let me put to the Senator from Connecticut a question, and let us see if that does not come pretty nearly interpreting this statute as it ought to be interpreted. Suppose the Secretary of the Treasury should attempt to make the redemption contemplated in this act, and the holders of the first-mortgage lien refuse to receive the money in redemption, as they would clearly have a right to if they saw fit in that case, the President is given authority to direct the Attorney-General to foreclose the lien and protect the interest of the Government. But the Senator from Connecticut will not deny that the Government of the United States, through the executive department, would have that power, entirely apart from the provision of the statute. But how can the President excuse himself and how can the Senator from Connecticut excuse the President from following out the mandatory provision of this law, which says he shall direct the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem from the first liens with money in the Treasury?

Mr. PLATT. I am not trying to excuse the President. As the Senator will remember, I was simply desiring to get his opinion as to the construction of the statute, to which he has given a great deal more attention than I have. The proper construction of the statute has troubled me a good deal, and I wanted to know what the Senator thought about it.

Mr. ALLEN. I hold this to be the true construction of this statute: First, that the President of the United States shall require the redemption of these properties from the first lien holders by money out of the Treasury, if that can be done; and if it can not be done, or the holders of the first lien will not receive their money and the properties are becoming impaired in any respect, it is the duty of the President to direct the Attorney-General to foreclose the lien and preserve the properties by the appointment of receivers, or in any other usual form known to courts of equity. But he can not, Mr. President, I repeat it, justify himself in the eyes of the world if he fails to fulfill the law of the country and ignores the first provision of the statute. I understand well he may stand out doggedly and say, "I will not," and, in the language of Boss Tweed, ask, "What are you going to do about it?" I can understand that mental attitude of the President of the United States, but if he is a faithful servant of the people, if he has registered an oath to see that the laws of this country are fulfilled, he can not comply with the full requirement of that oath without causing the provision of this act, among others, to be carried into effect.

There is another important matter, and I will notice it just a moment, and that is the power of the Attorney-General to enter into a stipulation with specified persons respecting the sale of property that has not yet been foreclosed and offered for sale. Of course the Attorney-General is much more of a lawyer than I am, but I have never yet heard of a complainant, before his lien was foreclosed upon property, and where the sale by force of law must be public to all bidders who may see proper to bid, going to private individuals and entering into a stipulation for the sale of the property at marshal's sale, and, as my friend from Georgia [Mr. BACON] says, at 50 cents on the dollar, or any other sum. It is not 50 cents on the dollar in this case. If you will take the terminal facilities of these roads; if you will take their bridge privileges; if you will take the sinking fund, amounting to millions of dollars—$17,000,000, says the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]—and their equity in the 18,000,000 acres of land which were granted in aid of their construction, the bid is not 35 cents on the dollar, in my judgment. Who ever heard of the complainant, before his mortgage was foreclosed, going to a private individual or corporation and entering into a written contract, fixing the price the marshal should receive for the property? Yet that is exactly what has been done here by the Attorney-General.

Mr. President, these proposed purchasers, the reorganization committee, at the head of which Mr. Fitzgerald stands, wanted the Attorney-General to exact of any other proposed purchaser—fearing that there might be other purchasers or proposed purchasers—a stipulation to advance a certain amount in cash as a condition precedent to their right to bid. The Attorney-General could not accept that condition. That is one thing he would not do.

Here is this property that is to be put up at auction and sold according to a decree at marshal's sale, contracted in advance of the entering of the decree, contracted in advance of the making up of the issues in the case, contracted in advance of the taking of testimony in the case, to specified individuals, or to a specific organization, by the Attorney-General, and without law or authority in the Executive authorizing it.

Mr. President, Congress has jurisdiction of this matter; it belongs to the legislative department of this Government; and yet if this precedent of the President of the United States is to be followed, and his action is to go unrebuked by Congress, these properties, amounting to one hundred and thirty or one hundred and forty million dollars, will be taken completely out of the control of Congress and left with the Attorney-General and whomsoever he may see fit to dicker with on the subject, and we will have nothing to say about it. We have recently been deprived of the privilege of legislating respecting Cuba. The distinguished gentleman standing at the head of the State Department has taken that matter out of our jurisdiction; he has taken out of our jurisdiction control of our relations with Great Britain; all our foreign relations have passed from Congress to the President and Secretary of State; and now our domestic relations, our internal affairs, are to be taken away from Congress by an Executive order of the President of the United States to the Attorney-General, and seemingly without a protest.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which has been read. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. I desire to give that unanimous consent if it is the purpose of the Senator from Nebraska to have the resolution referred or disposed of without further debate, and on that condition, but I shall not give unanimous consent for the further debate of the question.

Mr. THURSTON obtained the floor.

Mr. GEAR. I wish to give notice that, at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON], I shall request that the resolution go over until to-morrow under the rule.

Mr. ALLEN. Let me suggest to the Senator, why not let the resolution be adopted and go to his committee now?

Mr. GEAR. I should prefer to examine it.

Mr. ALLEN. May it not stand so that it may come up in the morning as unfinished business?

Mr. GEAR. I should object to that. I shall ask at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska that the resolution go over.

Mr. THURSTON. I was only about to state, Mr. President, that I desire the indulgence of the Senate to ask that the resolution go over until to-morrow, as before it goes to the committee I desire to address the Senate on the subject-matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

PROPOSED RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment to the bill H. R. 7864, "An act to amend the immigration laws of the United States," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment, and agree to the House bill with amendments as follows:

Strike out in the first section all after the words "admission to the United States the following" and insert the following:

"All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read and write the English language or the language of their native or resident country; but a person not so able to read and write who is over 50 years of age and is the parent or grandparent of a qualified immigrant over 21 years of age and capable of supporting such parent or grandparent may accompany such immigrant, or such a parent or grandparent may be sent for and come to join the family of a child or grandchild over 21 years of age, similarly qualified and capable."

Strike out the present section 2 and insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. For the purpose of testing the ability of the immigrant to read and write, as required by the foregoing section, the inspection officers shall be furnished with copies of the Constitution of the United States, printed on numbered uniform pasteboard slips, each containing not less than 20 nor more than 25 words of said language, and the immigrant may designate the language in which he prefers the test shall be made. Each immigrant shall be required to draw one of said slips from the box and read, and afterwards write out, in full view of the immigration officers, the words printed thereon. Each slip shall be returned to the box immediately after the test is finished, and the contents of the box shall be shaken up by an inspection officer before another drawing is made. No immigrant failing to read and write out the slip thus drawn by him shall be admitted, but he shall be returned to the country from which he came at the expense of the steamship or railroad company which brought him, as now provided by law. The inspection officers shall keep in each box at all times a full number of said printed pasteboard slips, and in the case of each excluded immigrant shall keep a certified memorandum of the number of the slip which the said immigrant failed to read or copy out in writing. If in any case from any unavoidable cause the foregoing slips are not at hand for use, the inspection officers shall carefully and thoroughly test the ability of the immigrant to read and write, using the most appropriate and available means at their command; and shall state fully in writing the reasons why the slips are lacking, and describe the substitute method adopted for testing the ability of the immigrant."

Strike out the present section 3 and insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893, to facilitate the enforcement of the immigration and contract-labor laws, shall apply to the persons mentioned in section 1 of this act."

Strike out present sections 4, 5, and 6 and insert as follows:

"SEC. 4. That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any male alien, who has not in good faith made his declaration before the proper court of his intention to become a citizen of the United States, to be employed on any public works of the United States, or to come regularly or habitually into the United States by land or water for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor, for wages or salary, returning from time to time to a foreign country.

"SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, company, or corporation knowingly to employ any alien coming into the United States in violation of the next preceding section of this act: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the employment of sailors, deck hands, or other employees of vessels, or railroad train hands, such as conductors, engineers, brakemen, firemen, or baggagemen, whose duties require them to pass over the frontier to reach the termini of their runs, or to boatmen or guides on the lakes and rivers on the northern border of the United States.

"SEC. 6. That any violation of the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of this act by any alien or citizen shall be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $500, or by imprisonment for the term of not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That all persons convicted of a violation of section 4 of this act shall be deported to the country whence they came.

"SEC. 7. That notwithstanding the provisions of this or any other existing law, the Secretary of the Treasury may permit aliens to enter this country for the purpose of teaching new arts or industries under such rules and regulations as he may provide."

Add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 8. That this act shall not apply to persons arriving in the United States from any port or place in the Island of Cuba, during the continuance of the present disorders there, who have heretofore been inhabitants of that island."

Insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 9. That any alien who shall, in violation of this act, or any other existing law, secure entry into the United States without inspection or examination, or through mistake, misrepresentation, collusion, deception, or fraud, may be taken into custody by the properly authorized immigration officers within thirty days after the facts become known to them; and such alien, upon a special inquiry at the most convenient place, conducted according to section 5 of the immigration act of March 3, 1893, shall be dealt with as provided by law for alien immigrants upon their first arrival."

Strike out the present section 7 and insert as follows:

"SEC. 10. That this act shall take effect July 1, 1897."

HENRY CABOT LODGE,
WM. E. CHANDLER,
CHAS. J. FAULKNER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

L. DANFORD,
STANYARNE WILSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator desire to ask for the consideration of the report at this time?

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not propose to call it up at present. Let it be printed for the information of the Senate, and I shall call it up at a later time, after it shall have been printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be printed and go over.

Mr. GORMAN subsequently said: I ask consent that House bill 7864, which is the immigration bill, on which a conference report was submitted to the Senate to-day, shall be printed as it would stand if the conference report were adopted, so that we may understand the entire provisions of the bill. It has gone over until to-morrow, and the printed bill can be here by to-morrow morning.

Mr. CHANDLER. I supposed that was understood in the order which the chairman of the committee obtained.

Mr. GORMAN. I think not. I think the order embraced only the ordinary conference report, but I desire now to have the bill printed as it would stand if the conference report were adopted.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that will be done, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CONFERENCE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3547) to provide for the representation of the United States by commissioners at any international monetary conference hereafter to be called.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, this bill represents a new movement beginning in the United States for the establishment of bimetallism, the unlimited coinage of silver and gold as standard money.

The provisions of the bill are in the form desired by its friends; substantially in the language of three previous authorizations under which United States delegates were appointed to international monetary conferences, and of one under which no action was taken.

It simply authorizes the coming President to appoint delegates to any conference which may be called by the United States or any other nation, and provides for paying their expenses.

It does not compel the President to initiate an international conference, whether the time has arrived and due preparations have been made for it or not; and it is not desirable that such compulsion should be ordered. The responsibility for action or nonaction will be his, and there need be no desire to take it from him in view of his utterance upon accepting the nomination of his party, namely:

> The Republican party has declared in favor of an international agreement, and if elected President it will be my duty to employ all proper means to promote it.

The bill does not name the place where a conference must be held, but leaves that question to be settled according to the preferences of the nations which are to participate in it, and to the convenience of the greater number of the delegates. It would be exceedingly unwise to absolutely require that the conference shall be held in the United States.

The bill does not undertake to declare what the action of this Government will be in case the conference shall fail to establish bimetallism. To insert a legislative provision that in such an event the United States alone will proceed to the free coinage of silver would necessarily prevent a successful outcome of the conference if one ensues, and, moreover, would certainly defeat the passage of this bill through both Houses and its signature by the President. It would be as complete a rejection of the bill as would be a vote of the Senate to indefinitely postpone it, and the responsibility for the first defeat of the new movement for bimetallism would fatally rest upon those who claim to be the special champions of silver.

Mr. President, this bill for an international bimetallic conference has been deliberately presented in a body a majority of whose members are well known to be in favor of the free coinage of silver by the United States independently of other nations, and who believe that no successful result will come from the conference. But it is presented to them in the belief and after the assurance that they are not unwilling to allow the experiment to be again tried, under favorable auspices, and with a universal hope that it may secure the adoption of a system of bimetallism by the leading commercial nations of the world.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do.

Mr. TURPIE. I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if the bill provides for a time for the meeting of the conference?

Mr. CHANDLER. It does not provide any time for holding the conference or where the conference shall be held, or that the conference shall be held within a particular time. It leaves the whole subject in the discretion of the incoming President.

This bill is also presented, Mr. President, in the form which is preferred by the friends of the measure who have faith that it will prove useful, effective, and successful in its great purpose. It depends for its passage upon the votes of those Senators who have no such faith. They can defeat it by direct votes against it. They can defeat it by amendments destructive of any hopeful scheme for an international agreement. Such a result, Mr. President, I do not, I will not, anticipate, but will ask in the public interest for the speedy and unanimous adoption of the bill as it is now proposed for the consideration and decision of the Senate.

Mr. President, I have little more to add to what I have said, except to say that I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON], upon reflection, will withdraw his amendment and will not ask a vote of the Senate thereon. The Senator's proposition is that the conference shall be held in the United States. It is perfectly well known that the Western Hemisphere is for bimetallism; all the countries of North and South America—certainly south of Canada—are in favor of the use of silver as standard money. They all concur with the desire of the bimetallists of the United States in favor of bimetallism. What is desired is that we shall convince the great and wealthy nations of Europe that it is important to return to the free coinage of silver under a fixed ratio and in accordance with the principles of bimetallism. There are ten——

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CHANDLER. In one second. There are ten nations of Europe whom it is desirable to have participate in an international conference.

Now I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether he understands that this bill, if it shall be passed in the form introduced by him, will confer upon the President of the United States the authority to call such a conference if he decides that it is advisable to do so?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will answer the Senator by saying that the President would beyond question have that authority. The language of the act authorizing the President to appoint commissioners to any conference called by the United States or any other nation, and appropriating $100,000 for the expenses of the conference, gives the authority to the President of the United States, which he will not hesitate for a moment to exert if he believes that the conference ought to be called.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator—as it might be a question upon which lawyers might differ, as to whether or not that power is conferred under the present language—if there is any objection to specifically saying that "the President of the United States is hereby clothed with authority, in his discretion, to call such a conference?"

Mr. CHANDLER. If there is any need of that I should have no objection; but I say the friends of this movement have conned the language of this bill with the utmost care, and they have sought to avoid all just criticism. We might have said, "at any conference called by the President of the United States," but we understood for this purpose, with this amount of money, and with this authority to appoint commissioners, the President of the United States by absolutely necessary implication has the power to call the conference.

Mr. BACON. I desire to say, Mr. President, that I am of the opinion that the measure proposed should not be hampered in any way and that those who are moving in it should not be embarrassed by the incorporation in this bill of any provision which is not agreeable to them. In other words, I desire that they shall have full opportunity to carry out the programme which they have endeavored to inaugurate. At the same time I am anxious that this bill, if it passes, shall be in such language that there shall be no doubt about the fact that the President of the United States is clothed specifically by the bill with the power to call this conference in Europe, if you please, but with power to call it, so that if it is not called there will be no doubt as to where the responsibility for nonaction rests.

Mr. CHANDLER. There can be no possible objection to having that fact appear distinctly if it is not now a necessary implication of the bill. The President not only has this money to expend and the power to appoint commissioners, but he has the power to initiate a conference.

Now, I revert, Mr. President, to the suggestion I was making in reference to the amendment of the Senator from Utah, in order to say that I do not think, under the circumstances I have suggested, it would be wise for us to ask six or ten nations of Europe to send commissioners to the United States, when it is so much more easy and more appropriate for us to send commissioners to them. I therefore hope the Senator, to whose remarks I have listened with attention, will withdraw his amendment.

I also earnestly ask my friend of a lifetime [Mr. STEWART] not to precipitate upon this bill a proposition that, if an international conference is held, it shall then be the law of the land that the free coinage of silver by the United States alone shall take place. I ask that of the Senator from Nevada, knowing that he is sincere in his advocacy of free coinage, believes it ought to be adopted for the interests of the country and the interests of mankind, and does not wish to embarrass or defeat any honest effort to accomplish the result he has so much at heart.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I have no disposition to embarrass or hinder the passage of this bill. I observed in the public press that our English friends were suggesting to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] that it would be proper and necessary for the United States to first adopt free coinage in this country, and that if we did so England would enter into a negotiation with us in regard to our tariff, requiring a reduction of only 10 per cent, and then they would consider the question. It was for the purpose of bringing that suggestion to my honorable friend here, thinking perhaps he would be willing to conform to this English view of the question, that I offered the amendment; but if he does not so desire, I shall not press it.

I wish to say a word or two about the humiliating position in which this bill places the United States. My honorable friend speaks of it as a new movement, and then tells us that it is in the precise language of three other bills which have been passed. It seems to me that his own statement robs his other statement of much force. We know very well that we have been making efforts for about twenty years to secure the cooperation of Europe in establishing bimetallism. As for myself and many others, we do not believe we need their cooperation. I have never heard a reason assigned which has any foundation in fact why we do need it.

It is said that we want the money of the world; that we must have the same financial system that other countries have in order to settle financial balances. Those who make this argument ignore the fact that financial balances are never settled with money; that international trade consists of the interchange of commodities; that we buy European money with our commodities and pay them for what we buy and what we owe with European money. We do not buy French goods with American money, but we send our commodities to France and sell them for French money and with it buy French goods. France sends her commodities to this country and sells them for American money and with it buys American goods. But you say we have to send our gold. Yes; we send our gold; but we send it as a commodity, not as money. It goes there by weight; it has no function as money in Europe any more than our wheat has.

There are many grave objections to international money which ought to make us hesitate before we enter into any compact with the world to have international money. In the first place, if we had an international money that was legal tender throughout the world our business would be subject to the fluctuations and changes of every country of the world. A business man would not only have to calculate about the business of his own country, but he would have to know the world in order to guard himself against fluctuations and disturbances which might occur anywhere. The idea that commerce can not be carried on without international money is against the experience of mankind. International money never has existed, to my knowledge, except in one instance. The Latin Union in 1865 formed a compact whereby the money of France, Italy, Greece, Belgium, and Switzerland should be a legal tender throughout that combination. But those were small countries, dependent upon France and under France's protection at the time. That is the only instance I know of international money.

Money is essentially domestic. It is a great misfortune if it has to be exported and sold in other countries. We do not want to export our money. We should not make an effort to have a kind of money that can be exported as such. When we export our money we disturb our own business. We might as well export our tools and attempt to carry on farming and other vocations. If you export money you take away the tools of commerce and destroy the prosperity of our country.

The idea of an international conference to establish an international money is against experience, and will cause great inconvenience to every nation involved in the complication. We should avoid entangling alliances, if possible. This would be the worst; and we see what grows out of it. The London press say, "If we make a bargain with you in regard to finances, you must make a bargain with us in regard to the tariff." Thereby they assume to have jurisdiction in this country, to control our domestic affairs. Shall we surrender it? Shall we surrender to other countries that jurisdiction which we think so important? The Constitution enjoins upon Congress the duty "to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin." Shall we give that up and say we have no right to coin money according to the Constitution? We exercised that right for over seventy years with great benefit to our country, and no inconvenience to anybody.

So I am opposed to international money. I am opposed to allowing any other country to participate in our domestic affairs. I am in favor of the United States furnishing to the people an adequate supply of money. Individuals can not supply money. If they attempt it it is a criminal offense. The Government has a complete monopoly. It is a part of the sovereignty of the Government to exercise that monopoly; and here we are going to Europe to ascertain whether we can legislate for the people of the United States. We are going to Europe, to our creditors, to the creditor nations of Europe, to the money powers of Europe, to see what measure they will mete out to us—what amount of money it is to their interest for us to have. The influence of Europe has brought this country to a sad condition.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada a question, if he will allow me.

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I agree myself with a good deal that the Senator from Nevada has said about fixing our own money; but I should like to ask the Senator whether, after we have fixed our own money, and concluded that it is for our interest to have gold and silver at a certain ratio, and to have all that is brought to our mints coined at that ratio, it would not be a good thing if we could persuade the other nations of the world to adopt the same policy in regard to it?

Mr. STEWART. I think not.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator thinks not?

Mr. STEWART. I think not.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; there is where we differ.

Mr. STEWART. I think it would be a very bad thing. In the first place, it would rob us of the advantage of acquiring silver. Let them stick to gold. Every country on earth which now uses silver is more prosperous than it ever was in its history by reason of the abundant supply, the United States and Europe not taking it. Already Japan is threatening the markets of New England, and the reason assigned by the Japanese is cheap silver. They boast, and truthfully, that the world can not compete with them.

Take the article of coal. Thirty years ago coal was discovered there. The two metals were then at a parity. They attempted to mine it, but they could not compete with English coal sold at about $6 a ton. When, however, the divergence came between the moneys of the two countries, the Japanese reopened their coal mines, and the English were compelled to sell their coal in Japan at a higher price in silver—first $8 per ton, then nine, and finally ten and twelve dollars a ton—to get the $6 in gold. Japan was able to mine and sell her coal for a little over $6 in her own money. Her money had remained stable. She opened her coal mines; she established a line of steamers to Bombay and another to Australia, and now she is establishing one to the United States. She reports that she can and will and is driving out English coal and all other coal from the Pacific on account of the difference of exchange. You may attempt to keep out that coal by a tariff. Suppose you put a tariff of $2 a ton on coal. How would you stand then? England could not sell any coal in the Pacific, because she could not sell it there for $4 a ton. Japan and China could sell it. Why? They would have to pay $4 in tariff duties, if the duties were paid in gold, and that would leave them $3. They can deliver it all along there for about $7 in their money.

Recently a cargo of coal came from China. It was assorted coal, different qualities—anthracite, bituminous, and other kinds of coal. It was there tested by scientists, and they reported that the anthracite coal contained as much heating power as the best anthracite that Pennsylvania produces, and that the bituminous coal was of high quality. The report is that there are unlimited coal fields in China. Wages in China and the difference in exchange will enable her to drive out entirely from the Pacific—she will compete with Japan—the gold-standard countries as to that trade.

Japan, in discussing her possible rivals, says she has none but China. No rivals in the world can compete with her in any kind of manufacturing but China. That is the only rival she has. India is put on the road to a gold standard, and her manufactures have fallen off. She is no longer supplying the East. Already Japan is invading your markets. Her wares are in every city in the Union. She can sell her wares for less than the cost of production here and make money at it, after paying the freight, which on dry goods is merely nominal in the great tramp steamers. The universal prosperity of silver-standard countries, by reason of the difference of exchange, leads me to wish that the United States could have like opportunities. I might trace the facts as to all other manufactured articles, for I have followed up their trade reports, among others, and show the advantage they have over this country, but I will not do it.

I wish to state, however, that although the pending bill places the United States in a most humiliating position, although it delegates to foreign countries control over our domestic affairs, although it proposes to deprive the United States of the power to make her own laws, I shall not oppose its passage, for the reason that a great many people in the United States have been deceived and have been made to believe that this country is dependent upon foreign countries for its legislation. You made them believe that we were in a helpless condition, and secured many votes by such arguments. Although we have tried it for twenty years, and have been sent home humiliated and ridiculed, let us try it again. But I want the time to come when the sending of ambassadors to Europe to supplicate the crowned heads to allow us to legislate for our own country shall stop. It has to be repeated. Let it be repeated. Let us have humiliation. Let it come. They say that if it does not come they must stand the responsibility. Have they not tried it for twenty years, and it has not come? They want to try it again. Is it in good faith or is it for the purpose of keeping the attention of the American people on the other side of the Atlantic while they starve and freeze here in this cold winter? Is it for the purpose of diverting their attention and keeping them on the hope of relief in some other way, to prevent them from taking the business in their own hands and conducting it as they did in the better days of the Republic? Do the Republican party mean ever to bring this fake—I call it a fake, an old fake—to an end? Will they keep the American people starving and looking to Europe for relief? Do they intend to make this perpetual? Do they expect—they fix no time in this measure—that they can keep it going until another election, and another, and another, and keep the minds of the people diverted from the real cause of the evils which affect them? I do not know but that with the press, with the railroads, with the banks, with Great Britain, with the power of money, they can keep the people perpetually looking to Europe for relief until they are prostrated and enslaved. It is possible.

It is said that this was a verdict of the people. If it was a verdict of the people, why did it cost millions? Does it cost millions to get an expression of the free will of the people of the United States? Ah, it savors of the verdict of money. It reflects on free institutions that millions should be required to obtain a verdict of the people, and it may be possible that those—not my honorable friend—who are manipulating to carry the next election want this same thing, this same fake with which to deceive the people, so as to secure enough money to get another victory. Of course I reflect upon no Senator; but that seems to be the movement, because the gold press almost universally since the election have ridiculed the idea of an international agreement and have rather apologized to their gold associates in Europe for going through this old pantomime again; that they have to do it in pursuance of the promise which they made. The New York Tribune explains from day to day that they must go through this process because they put the promise in the St. Louis platform; that they must carry out their pledges to the people; that they will make another trial; that Europe must not be offended if we supplicate them again to be our masters. That is the tone of the gold press of the United States. There ought to be a time fixed when this particular movement, this new movement, as it is called, this old-new movement, shall be carried into effect. There should be a limit some time in the future, so that the people can know when the relief by foreign aid is to come.

The Government has a monopoly of creating money. The business of this country is prostrated for want of money. The manufacturers' doors are closed because the people are too poor to buy. Hundreds of thousands of people are suffering to-day for clothing. It is not because the people do not want clothing that the mills are stopped; it is because they can not buy it; and so in every other walk of life, there are abundant consumers if they had the money to buy. Everybody knows that that is true. But without money business is prostrated and the country is suffering. Is that to be perpetual? Are we to stand by always under the flimsy plea that the United States has no power to carry out the provisions of the Constitution and create money in some form, to supply the necessities of the people? In the great emergencies of war all civilized nations have found a way to create money to relieve distress, and more people are losing their lives to-day from hunger and cold than in the same period lost their lives in battle during the war. They are looked upon, I know, by the rich with contempt. They are asked to postpone, to wait—the time will come—until they get favors from Europe; but in the meantime, while they are waiting, they are suffering and dying.

Now, it does seem to me that there ought to be as much power in a government in time of peace as there is in time of war. No government on earth has ever preserved its existence in emergencies of war by the use of either gold or silver as money, except in one instance. Germany when she fought the French war remained on the silver basis. She was on the silver basis. Gold never carried any nation through war; and if we can not relieve the extremities now, which are greater than the distress of war, if we have no power to do it, then peace is more horrible than war.

Look. Every nation in Europe has resorted to the power of the government to issue legal-tender money in emergencies. England did it in the Napoleonic wars for twenty-two years. During that period she prospered in her commerce and in her trade, and increased her wealth more than in any century. The United States during the great war partially used her power to make legal-tender money. She issued first full-fledged greenbacks to the extent of $60,000,000, which remained at par with gold during the war. They never failed. She then issued a large amount of paper, partly legal tender, repudiated for certain kinds of taxes. It was not receivable for customs dues or interest on the public debt. We did that. It was admitted by all that it was the instrumentality which carried us through the war, because it gave the people money with which to do business and develop the country, and it supplied the sinews of war. If a government can meet an emergency of that kind, why can it not meet the emergencies which have come upon the American people. Never in the history of this country was there such suffering, such death, and destruction as now, inflicted by this terrible scourge, want of money.

They say we must have the commodity gold, whether or not we can get any of it. Does civilization depend upon any one commodity. Does the Government of the United States depend upon any single commodity? A commodity is not money. If you would take from gold the stamp of every government of the world, with fifty years' supply on hand, it would not be worth 10 cents a pound. The same would be true of silver if the silver countries would treat it as we have. It is the fiat of government that makes money. The material upon which it is stamped designates what law has declared. The only function that either gold or silver performs independent of the power of the fiat of government is the regulation of quantity. The value of money depends upon the quantity, upon the volume as compared with population and business. The two metals are sufficient limitations. The trouble with them through all the ages has been that the quantity has been too small. When the mines were productive, civilization came into existence. When the mines failed, civilization has disappeared and barbarism has come as regularly as the sun rises and sets.

Now, we discard one of the metals, and take the one the less regular in production, which the arts and sciences are consuming with a rapidity never before known, and say civilization must cease if that commodity gives out. The speculators and the manipulators of money have seized upon the situation and bought up the commodity. More than half of all the gold in the world is now hoarded by the governments of Europe under the pretext that they need it in the emergency of war. The balance, nearly all of it, all or a sufficient amount to do any good, is held by a great money combination as a monopoly. If they have a monopoly of the money, they have a monopoly of liberty, of justice, and civilization. Those who hold this commodity also hold in their keeping the destiny of mankind, and civilization must perish. Avarice will never lose its grip. It has the gold, and civilization must cease unless something else is adopted upon which the sovereign will of the Government can be stamped. In the midst of such a condition we are asked to wait until the hoarders of gold will relent. When did avarice ever relent to suffering humanity? This proposed conference will be as idle as the preceding conferences. If any result is arrived at, it will be some entanglement that will make conditions worse.

I do not believe that President McKinley will appoint men who will betray this country. If he does not appoint men that the money powers can use, there will be no agreement. They boast of the great commercial power of England, of her supremacy over all countries, and she has supremacy because she has monopolized this commodity, gold. We can not get it except upon her terms. Her terms are starvation and want. We see her terms in every city in the Union. Her terms are advertised in the pulpit, her terms are advertised through the press, calling upon the citizens to contribute to save the starving multitude who are deprived of work from immediate death. There were 40,000 in the city of Chicago at one time sheltered by the public. How many other thousands were without shelter nobody knows. That is the condition.

Here are 5,000,000 willing hands excluded from the possibility of getting a living in this country. They have to subsist upon the charity of those who have something. See the loss, the waste, that this is entailing. There is a loss to this Government of thousands of millions a year by enforced idleness in attempting to use the commodity gold and nothing else, because the enemies of the human race, as are the usurers, have bought up this commodity and hold it where we can not have it. Men are going into bankruptcy every day, losing the accumulations of a lifetime, because they can not convert their property into money and pay their debts. That is the situation which confronts us here. With our fine salaries we can live, and see the country mourn, and see the distress; we know that the commodity gold is hoarded and we can not reach it. And this is called sound money, a safe currency. Safe for whom? For the men who can not get it or the men who have hoarded it?

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Nevada permit me to interrupt him simply to the extent of having an amendment read?

Mr. STEWART. With pleasure.

Mr. BACON. I will not consume more of the Senator's time. I send the proposed amendment to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill the following as an additional section:

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized, in the name of the Government of the United States, to call, in his discretion, such international conference to assemble at such point as may be agreed upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Nevada allow me to say that while I do not think that amendment is necessary, yet, after consulting with the Senator from Iowa now by my side [Mr. ALLISON], I see no objection to it, and therefore I am entirely willing that it should be adopted. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Nevada for his willingness not to embarrass the bill.

Mr. STEWART. I am not willing, while I am occupying the floor——

Mr. CHANDLER. I want to thank the Senator for making so brief a speech, that is all, and to express my gratitude to him for what is to happen after he finishes.

Mr. STEWART. There is one other thought to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate, and that is the progress which has been made in the last year in this great war for liberty. Heretofore the friends of honest money, the friends of prosperity, have been intermixed with the advocates of the commodity gold as the only material out of which money can be made. They are separated now. Six and a half million American people declared for free silver. The line is drawn, and on the goldbug side of the line there are hundreds and hundreds of thousands who have been deceived and have been running after false gods on the other side of the Atlantic, and they will come to us. The line of demarcation has been drawn between those who favor country, and this country, first, last, and all the time and those who willingly or unwillingly do the bidding of the money powers of Europe.

They say they gained a victory. We know we would have had a large majority notwithstanding, if money had not voted. But it will take a large amount of money to outvote us the next time. I say to them, "You have the press, most of it; you have the corporations, nearly all of them; you have the banks, nearly all of them; you have the money powers of Europe behind you; you have every means of subverting the will of the people, but we have now a solid phalanx in battle array." In the last campaign we were forced to organize our forces in the face of the enemy. Every effort was made by the Republicans and the gold Democrats to distract and divide the American people who believe in restoring the laws of the better days of the Republic. Under all those difficulties, without money, without a press, without corporations, without banks, against all that combination we polled, as I believe, more than half of the American vote. We did not get the colored vote, it is true. We did not get the foreign vote that congregates in the cities, because when they come from foreign lands and go into American factories and workshops they do not become Americans, as they did of old when they went upon the broad fields and breathed the fresh air. In a single generation—yea, in six months—we could convert a European to American institutions. But what do foreigners learn of American institutions in the fetid air of cities, where their surroundings are as dictatorial and oppressive as they were in the land from which they came? You got them; we got the independent American voters who——

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. When the Senator says "You have got them," does he impute all these things to the Vice-President?

Mr. STEWART. When I say "you," I mean every servant of British power. I mean every man who likes to see the people miserable and the rich happy——

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, my point——

Mr. STEWART. Every man who dislikes American institutions, every man who says we want a stronger Government to keep down the rabble, every man who calls six and a half million American people anarchists.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. STEWART. I mean them when I say "you."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada will suspend. The Senator from Massachusetts rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order, that under the rules of the Senate the word "you," used by a Senator on the floor, means the Vice-President, and that it is out of order to attribute all these disgraceful things to him. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART. I will talk in order, and I will say "the Senator from Massachusetts and all who cooperate with him in robbing the people of their money." He is the person I meant by "you." I mean those who smile when the people suffer. I mean those who call the masses of the American people anarchists, those who deride them, those who want stronger governments to oppress them, those who are opposed to free institutions and ape foreign manners, those who make England their homes, those who spend a hundred million dollars a year to learn the ways of monarchy and oppression, those who admire the poverty of the peasant in Europe and desire to place American citizens upon the same level, those who call it anarchy to discuss economic questions, those who call the rule of gold kings supreme and sacred, those who call it the government who have confounded the Government of the United States with foreign influence and are not American in sentiment. Those are the men I mean. They had all the classes to which I have alluded. They had the votes of the cities, where ignorance and squalor prevail. They had the colored vote where the colored people have not had an opportunity to understand economic questions. We had the votes of independent Americans, and now we are arrayed against the forces of monopoly. We have the lines drawn, and I do not wonder that you want a bill to apply to Europe to get this question away. Take it away from the American people. Pass your bill. Show your fidelity to the opinions and wishes of foreign potentates. I think the people will begin to see it. They will see it more plainly in the next campaign. You who are engaged in this scheme know very well that you must have a new pretext; that you have not money and influence enough without some new device to avoid an overwhelming defeat at the next election. It is staring you in the face, if you will not give relief, and I see no movement in that direction. Everything has been tried by other countries to get relief under like circumstances. It is true onerous taxation is to be levied to oppress the people, but it is the first time in history. It is a new proposition that relief can come for want of money from more taxation. Your plan is more taxation and less money to pay it with. That is the only thing you propose. Go on with your bill for more taxation. Go on with more revenue. Pile it up. You have now $225,000,000 in the Treasury. Put more there. Take it away from the people, and see if you can produce good times by such a process.

I say, without fear of contradiction, that history does not furnish an instance in this or any other country where a depressed condition of things was ever mitigated or prosperity restored without more money. There has never been an instance. We are pointed by the press to the act for the resumption of specie payments. Prosperity came after that. It came in spite of that act, by reason of the Bland Act, which furnished more money.

We are told by the New York Tribune and other papers that we had prosperity in 1892 after the passage of the McKinley Act. The McKinley Act did not give that prosperity, but an additional supply of money which was put out under the Sherman Act to relieve business, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] at the extra session of 1893 said that that additional supply saved this country from panic when the Barings failed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada will suspend. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3247) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," approved February 20, 1889.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the pending bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside for the time——

Mr. WHITE. Temporarily, I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That it may be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the bill which has been under discussion. Is there objection?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he intends to dispose of the bill. Is that the purpose?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do. The Senator from Nevada informs me that he does not want to talk much longer. I do not know of any other Senator who wants to speak, and I expect to dispose of the bill very promptly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to be heard briefly upon the bill, but I do not wish to speak until to-morrow. Probably I shall not want to speak for over half an hour.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I will only ask that the consideration be deferred until the Senator from Nevada has finished. Then the bill may go over and be taken up after the routine business to-morrow morning, when I hope it will be finished.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire as modified? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEWART. I am about through. I wish to speak only a minute longer.

Mr. President, I had about concluded what I had to say. I simply want to warn the Republican party that their movements are now watched; that the people are aroused on this question; that there is no other relief in my belief from the distress that now afflicts the country for more money. I want to tell them what they undoubtedly understand themselves, that they will be overthrown by the American people as surely as they do not give relief, and if they can give relief by any legislation other than a greater volume of money it will be something that has never been accomplished on earth before. I do not believe they can.

I shall not offer the amendment which I proposed, but I shall allow the bill to pass in any form that its friends desire; but I may be allowed to make this prediction, that it will do no good, but will do a great deal of harm in humiliating the people of the United States. It is so unpatriotic, so un-American to go to Europe to get legislation for this country that I can not look upon it with any favor. I can not look upon it but as a calamity. Still, it is a calamity which we must have in order to afford another object lesson, if the people have not had enough. I think they will have enough before this object lesson is concluded, so that they can see.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now make the request that the bill may go over and be taken up after the conclusion of the routine business to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submitted to the Senate the request of the Senator from New Hampshire. There is no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise now to suggest that there is not a quorum of the Senate present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Burrows,	Cockrell,	Hawley,
Allen,	Call,	Cullom,	Hoar,
Bacon,	Cameron,	Faulkner,	Jones, Ark.
Bate,	Cannon,	Frye,	Lodge,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and eighteen minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3247) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," approved February 20, 1889.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside in order that the bankruptcy bill may be laid before the Senate for the purpose of being read.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to that request, on condition that it does not displace the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts precisely what is his request in connection with the bill.

Mr. HOAR. The request which the Senate granted was that the formal reading of the bill might take place now, it being understood that no votes were to be had. The bill has to be read some time. The reading is a tedious affair, but it has to be done under the rule.

Mr. MORGAN. In order to preserve the regularity of the proceeding, I ask to have the regular order laid before the Senate, and then it can be informally laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3247) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," approved February 20, 1889.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to offer an amendment which I ask to have printed and substituted for the amendment offered yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed.

Mr. MORGAN. I also present and ask that the Secretary may read a resolution of the National Board of Trade, now in session in this city, which sent the resolution to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the National Board of Trade reiterates its deep conviction that the construction of the Nicaragua Canal is of the highest importance to the commercial interests of the United States; that such a waterway will stimulate and encourage commerce, both between parts of our country remote from each other and with foreign countries, and will afford incalculable advantages to the Government in the event of a foreign war.

DAVID McMENAMIN.
H. H. POPPLETON.
JAMES T. HOOKER.
E. G. PRESTON.

THE BANKRUPTCY BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be laid aside informally and without prejudice to enable the Senator from Massachusetts to have the bankruptcy bill read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be the order. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts if he desires that the portion of the bill proposed to be stricken out shall be read?

Mr. HOAR. I do not think it is necessary.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill (H. R. 8110) to establish a uniform law on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States.

Mr. GORMAN. If I understand the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, it is that the bill will merely be read; that no amendments will be considered this afternoon.

Mr. HOAR. That is all. No amendments whatever will be acted upon.

Mr. GORMAN. So that after the reading of the bill is concluded we will adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir; that is it.

Mr. HALE. I do not want any consent——

Mr. HOAR. It has been consented.

Mr. HALE. What is the proposition?

Mr. HOAR. Let me state again. Some time or other the text of the bill has to be read. It will take a half or three-quarters of an hour. The Senate has already given unanimous consent, before the Senator from Maine came in, that that might now be done, the Nicaragua Canal bill being laid aside informally for that purpose. No vote, however, is to be taken and no action had upon it. It is merely the technical reading.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the bankruptcy bill being taken up for the purpose of being read.

Mr. HOAR. That is all that is to be done.

Mr. HALE. I have understood that that is all that has been consented to heretofore. I am told that it is claimed by some parties, I do not know who, that the bankruptcy bill is the unfinished business after the Nicaragua Canal bill. I certainly have never agreed to that. It has undoubtedly been made a special order, but that it ever has been made the unfinished business after the consideration of the Nicaragua Canal bill is terminated is not within my knowledge. I have never consented to that.

Mr. CHILTON. That was done the other afternoon.

Mr. HOAR. It was done in a very full Senate.

Mr. STEWART. I understood the bill was to be taken up to be read, not to be considered.

Mr. HOAR. It is to be taken up to-day to be read.

Mr. HALE. I never understood that it was made the unfinished business.

Mr. STEWART. I would not have consented to that.

Mr. HALE. I should doubt—I may not have been here—whether the RECORD will show that the bankruptcy bill has been made the unfinished business. It has been made a special order; it has been consented that it may be taken up and read, but the only thing that gives right of way against all other measures is the consent given that it shall be made the unfinished business. I do not understand that that has ever been done.

Mr. HOAR. Let the question come up now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the clerks at the desk that it is their recollection such an order was made.

Mr. HALE. The RECORD will show.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The RECORD will show. The RECORD will be consulted as soon as possible.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Maine will look at the RECORD, he will see what has been done.

Mr. FRYE. There is no objection to the reading of the bill?

Mr. HOAR. There is no objection to reading it?

Mr. HALE. None at all. I do not say that I am opposed to the bankruptcy bill, but it is understood that upon both sides of the Chamber there is a committee on the order of business, which considers subject-matters that are to come up one after another. The Nicaraguan Canal bill was made the unfinished business in terms because it was agreed by the committees upon both sides that it should so be done. The committee upon neither side has taken up the question whether the bankruptcy bill should come in next. There are a dozen important matters that will take but little time, which will be pushed absolutely out of consideration after the bankruptcy bill is taken up. That bill, if it is taken up in connection with the appropriation bills, will absorb all the rest of the time. It will drive to the wall, unless the Senator from Massachusetts will agree that some other matters which will take but little time may be taken up, and let his measure——

Mr. HOAR. I do not think there will be anything that the Senator from Maine will object to when the matter comes up. I state very frankly that my expectation about the bankruptcy bill is that there will be a substantial agreement between the friends and the gentlemen who have been quite antagonistic to it. It has been modified, as the Senator will recollect, and it will not take a great deal of the time of the Senate.

I am aware of the suggestions that the Senator makes. I expect that this bill, if it gets through at all, will get through by a pretty general understanding in the Senate that it will not take up a great deal of time. The arrangement which has just been made, before the Senator from Maine came in, that we might spend this odd hour in the afternoon in the formal reading of the bill, was in furtherance of that idea. But I am not prepared now to make any absolute bargain, and the Senator, I suppose, is not. For instance, the Senator from Iowa has a short matter, and it was understood that the bankruptcy bill would be laid aside in its favor, and I have no doubt that that will be done as to any bill which the Senator from Maine asks to have considered.

Mr. STEWART. What have we agreed to?

Mr. HALE. On the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, having no doubt that when he finds that the bankruptcy bill is going to sequestrate the time of the Senate, other matters will be allowed to come in, temporarily laying it aside, I will withdraw any objection.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to state with respect to the bankruptcy bill, in reply to the remarks of the Senator from Maine, that there is no bill on the Calendar of the Senate for the passage of which there is such an urgent demand as there is for the passage of the bankruptcy bill.

Mr. HALE. Which bill?

Mr. NELSON. The bankruptcy bill.

Mr. HALE. The Torrey bill?

Mr. NELSON. For a bankruptcy bill.

Mr. HALE. Or the House bill?

Mr. NELSON. Some kind of a bankruptcy bill.

Mr. HALE. I am in favor of a bankruptcy bill.

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to state what some people think (they can state it a great deal better), but I will say to the Senator from Maine, as showing the reasons for my thinking what I said, that the Judiciary Committee preferred a bill reported by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]—a House bill—and authorized that report. Three of the number who so voted in the committee (there was a bare majority, I think, of one or two that way) have come to me within a few days and said that in looking over the Torrey bill, and seeing how it has been modified, they are now in favor of that bill; and I confidently hope and expect that the Senator from Colorado himself will give his assent, perhaps, to that bill, with some modification. I expect (however, I may be mistaken) that it will go through by a pretty general consent.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator is correct, and I shall join with him, because I believe that one of the necessities, in the present condition of almost suspended animation in the industries of the country, is to wipe the slate clean in many respects. I am for that. I do not have so much confidence that the Senator can do it, but I am willing that he shall try it.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has the floor and would like to be heard.

Mr. NELSON. I was under the impression that I had the floor.

Mr. ALDRICH. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island will state his question of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understood that consent was given to have the bill taken up for the purpose of being read, and not for the purpose of general discussion.

Mr. CHILTON. That was its purpose.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the regular order may be proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that the Chair does not understand that consent has yet been given.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not to have the bill read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not even to have it read.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Chair's pardon, then.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to ask which one of the many bankruptcy bills it is proposed to have read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again put the request submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], that the bill be now read for information.

Mr. BROWN. Which bill, Mr. President?

Mr. STEWART. Evidently it is the purpose to occupy the time of the Senate with that bill, and it contains anything but the voluntary provisions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada will suspend. The Senator from Utah had addressed the Chair and will be recognized.

Mr. BROWN. There is a majority report of one bill. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], from the minority, has reported another bill. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has reported a third bill. Now, which bill of the three is it that it is asked to have read?

Mr. HOAR. I have not reported a third bill.

Mr. BROWN. There are three reports here, one with the name of Senator HOAR, one with the name of Senator MITCHELL, and one with the name of Senator TELLER.

Mr. HOAR. Those are Senate bills. The one which is before the Senate is House bill 8110.

Mr. BROWN. Then, laying aside the Senate bill, the Senator asks to have the House bill read?

Mr. HOAR. It does not require the Senate bill to be laid aside, because it is not before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; there is objection.

Mr. HOAR. That unanimous consent was given some time ago. It is merely to read the House bill, which has to be read at some time. It is to have the drudgery of reading it, without any vote whatever to be taken upon it. It is only to devote this end of the afternoon to its reading, when I suppose no one wishes to make a long speech on the Nicaragua Canal bill. It has to be read at some time.

Mr. BROWN. Why should the House bill be read, when we have three Senate bills to be taken up in their order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again submit the request. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BROWN. There is objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made by the Senator from Utah. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. MORGAN. The regular order, Mr. President.

W. H. WADE.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator from Alabama will permit, I should like to call up and have considered at this time the bill (H. R. 9593) for the relief of W. H. Wade, late captain and acting regimental quartermaster Thirty-first Ohio Volunteers. The bill was reported favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs, and there can be no objection to it.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Senator make that request without prejudice to the regular order?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. That is understood, then.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to credit the account of W. H. Wade on the books of the Department, as captain and acting regimental quartermaster of the Thirty-first Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, with $420.15, received by him as such captain and acting regimental quartermaster and disbursed by him to extra-duty men for extra duty.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COGSWELL & CO.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill (H. R. 939) for the relief of Cogswell & Co. It is a very short bill which has been passed by the House and is now pending here upon a favorable report from the Committee on Claims. It will only take a moment.

Mr. MORGAN. Without any prejudice to the regular order?

Mr. COCKRELL. Without any prejudice to the regular order, as a matter of course.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to reopen the refunding claim of Cogswell & Co., of St. Louis, Mo., for $1,306, and allow so much thereof as he may find to have been paid in excess of the amount required by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION AT POINT ARENA, CAL.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3320) to provide a life-saving station at or near Point Arena, Mendocino County, in the State of California.

Mr. MORGAN. I have a proposition which I desire to submit to the Senate. I wish to ask unanimous consent that bills on the Calendar may be taken up and considered in such order as they may be presented here without prejudice to the regular order, and that the regular order may be considered as still pending before the Senate at the close of this proceeding.

Mr. PERKINS. Do I understand the Senator to object to the consideration of the bill I wish to call up?

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, no; I was trying to make a way for you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama requests that the regular order shall be laid aside temporarily for the consideration of these bills. Without objection, that will be the understanding. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from California?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME AND BELT RAILWAYS.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senate to consider the joint resolution (H. Res. 215) extending time for compliance by Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company and the Belt Railway Company with provisions of section 1 of an act entitled an act to extend the routes of said railway companies, etc., approved June 10, 1896.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read for information.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY A. WEBB.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 1256) for the relief of Henry A. Webb be taken up for present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to redeem in favor of Harriet W. Greenwood and Amey W. Wheeler, heirs of Henry A. Webb, of Providence, R. I., the following-described bonds of the United States, issued under acts of Congress approved July 17, 1861, and August 5, 1861, namely: Bonds Nos. 30049 to 30051, inclusive, for $500 each; bond No. 5497, for $100; bonds Nos. 18436 and 18437, for $100 each; bonds Nos. 4345 to 4350, inclusive, for $50 each; amounting to $2,100, together with unpaid coupons thereof to the amount of 33, covering interest for sixteen and one-half years, namely, $2,079, said bonds and interest amounting in all to $4,179, the said heirs claiming that the estate of said Henry A. Webb owned said bonds on February 11, 1865, when, it is alleged, they were stolen from the estate, and were afterwards destroyed by the thief or thieves: Provided, That before the redemption of said bonds the said heirs of Henry A. Webb shall execute or cause to be executed and deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury a bond of indemnity, with good and sufficient surety, subject to the approval of the said Secretary, to secure the United States against loss or damage in consequence of the redemption of said bonds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BARGE BLACK DIAMOND.

Mr. McBRIDE. I ask the consent of the Senate to call up the bill (H. R. 7781) to grant an American register for the barge Black Diamond.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MORTGAGES IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is an important bill, the bill (H. R. 8298) relating to mortgages in the Indian Territory, reported by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] from the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is exceedingly important that the bill should be passed, and it is a very short bill. I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered. It is not even one page in length.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 4742 of Mansfield's Digest of the Laws of Arkansas, heretofore put in force in the Indian Territory, by adding the following:

Provided, That if the mortgagor is a nonresident of the Indian Territory the mortgage shall be recorded in the judicial district in which the property is situated at the time the mortgage is executed. All mortgages of personal property in the Indian Territory heretofore executed and recorded in the judicial district thereof in which the property was situated at the time they were executed are hereby validated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. PLATT. I am not going to interpose any objection to the bill; I did not know it had been reported, but it seemed to me very strange when it was in committee, and it seems to me very strange here that the Congress of the United States should attempt to amend the statutes of Arkansas.

Mr. CHILTON. I can explain the bill in a moment. I did not introduce the bill, but it is simply one of this sort: Under the laws now prevailing in the Indian Territory a nonresident can not give a mortgage without delivering possession of the property. The record of the mortgage is ineffectual. The bill simply proposes to make a record effectual, so that the mortgages will be valid without an actual delivery of possession to the mortgagee. That is all there is in the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I am not complaining at all of the character of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. The point the Senator from Connecticut makes is that we are amending a State law. We have by our laws made the statute of Arkansas referred to the law in the Indian Territory; now it is proposed to amend that statute. That is all.

Mr. PLATT. I think the bill ought to be in a different shape, and not attempt to amend the laws of the State of Arkansas. I am quite in sympathy with the object of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is because we have made those laws the laws of the Indian Territory.

Mr. CHILTON. I will state further to the Senator from Connecticut that the same idea presented itself to me, but the bill passed the House in that shape. It did not occur to me that the objection was too serious. It was so desirable that the bill should get through without having to go back to the House and into conference that we allowed it to remain in that language.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OFFICIAL TITLE OF EX OFFICERS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask consent to call up the bill (H. R. 9710) to authorize officers who served during the war of the rebellion in the Regular Army to bear the title and, on occasions of ceremony, wear the uniform of their highest rank.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE LA ABRA AND WEIL CASES.

Mr. HOAR. The bill (S. 3588) to insure a full bench in the Court of Claims for the hearing of the cases entitled The United States against La Abra Silver Mining Company and others and The United States against Alice Weil and others, was reported the other day and was taken up and read, but was postponed because the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] desired to examine it further. He tells me that he has examined it further and is entirely content with it. I desire that the bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that while I am entirely in accord with him on the bill, one of the counsel engaged in the La Abra case asked me the privilege of making some suggestions about it, which I have not yet been able to hear.

Mr. HOAR. I will explain the request. I desire to say that that gentleman has spoken to me, and his suggestions are that the Chief Justice ought not to be the person to designate the judge to sit in case of inability to preside, but that the power ought to be lodged in the President of the United States, first, because the case will come before the Chief Justice afterwards, and next, because Mexico may consider that doing it by the Chief Justice, the United States being a quasi party, is not the proper thing.

I first had a conversation with that gentleman and then read something he had written, and it seems to me on full reflection that there is nothing in either of these objections, unless it be that any government would be better satisfied to have the Chief Justice of the United States perform such a duty than for the President of the United States, the political agent of the Government, to do so, who may select the person to appear to represent our Government before the court, and next that the mere designating of the judge to go into an inferior court and sit, in order that there may be a quorum, would hardly be supposed to bias the judgment of the Chief Justice of the United States in the matter of a decision of the case if it should go up on appeal. Still, if the Senator from Wisconsin thinks it best, I will not press the bill now.

Mr. VILAS. I feel just as the Senator from Massachusetts does about it; still I wish the Senator would give me the privilege of seeing the gentleman I have referred to in relation to the matter.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. HOAR. I will substitute another request for the one which I just made. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the next case on the Calendar, which is the bill (S. 3524) to remove doubts concerning the jurisdiction of district judges.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which provides that a district judge shall have all the powers of a circuit judge within his own district, and also within any district in which he shall be designated to hold court during the time limited by such designation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 4853) for the relief of John Duncan;

A bill (H. R. 4863) to increase the pension of Joseph J. Hudson;

A bill (H. R. 4872) to correct the military record of Homer C. McCuskey;

A bill (H. R. 6143) for the relief of Peter Young; and

A bill (H. R. 6947) to grant a pension to Miss Jennie E. Moore.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 684) granting a pension to Marion McKibben, agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. THOMAS, Mr. CROWTHER, and Mr. LAYTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendment of the bill (S. 757) granting an increase of pension to Adelaide Morris, agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. THOMAS, Mr. CROWTHER, and Mr. LAYTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 905) granting a pension to Mary W. Keefe, agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. THOMAS, Mr. CROWTHER, and Mr. LAYTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 1732) to approve and ratify the construction of a bridge across the Sulphur River, in the State of Arkansas, by the Texarkana and Fort Smith Railway Company, agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HEPBURN, Mr. BARTLETT of New York, and Mr. PRICE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

AUGUSTUS P. BURDITT.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 130) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Augustus P. Burditt.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Augustus P. Burditt, of Boston, Mass., surviving partner of the late firm of Burditt & Fisk, $5,130 for the services of the steamboat Mattie, owned by the firm of Burditt & Fisk, and used in the military service of the United States from the 5th of January, 1865, to the 31st of January, 1865, both days inclusive, at the rate of $190 a day, as found by the Court of Claims in its finding of facts dated the 9th of June, 1890.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN Y. WILLIAMS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (H. R. 3500) to authorize the adjustment and settlement of accounts of John Y. Williams.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust and settle the accounts of John Y. Williams, late superintendent of Indian school at Fort Hall and special disbursing agent, and to give him credit for such disbursements as shall be shown to have been actually and honestly made and have accrued to the benefit of the Government or the Indians; but the total credits allowed under the provisions of this act shall not be more than $900 in excess of the balance now standing against him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY M. MACAULEY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I reported this morning the bill (S. 3613) granting a pension to Mary Macauley, widow of the late Brig. Gen. Daniel Macauley, United States Volunteers. I ask unanimous consent for its consideration at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 4, after the name "Mary," to insert "M.;" and in line 8, after the word "month," to strike out "from and after the passage of this act;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Mary M. Macauley, widow of the late Brig. Gen. Daniel Macauley, United States Volunteers, upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and pay her a pension of $30 per month.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Mary M. Macauley, widow of the late Brig. Gen. Daniel Macauley, United States Volunteers."

ESTATE OF GEORGE M'DOUGAL.

Mr. STEWART. At the earnest request of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], I ask for the present consideration of Senate bill 621.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a bill which has been passed over on account of being objected to, and I do not think it ought to be called up at this time.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think it was objected to.

Mr. COCKRELL. All the orders of business at that place on the Calendar have been objected to.

Mr. STEWART. I was not here when the bill was before called up, but I do not think it was objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 621) for the relief of the legal representatives of George McDougal, deceased.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the bill be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PLATT. It hardly seems to me that we ought to pass a bill appropriating for a claim of $81,000 which has been once objected to and has gone over into the Calendar of objected cases.

Mr. STEWART. I will not press the bill now, but I will say that the claim is a meritorious one. I have examined it with great care. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] asked me the other day to call the attention of the Senate to the bill, and I told him I would do so if there was an opportunity. I do not wish in a thin Senate to have the bill passed upon, but I give notice that if an opportunity shall present I shall call it up when there is a larger attendance.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to move that the Senate adjourn, but will withhold the motion until the unfinished business can be laid before the Senate, so that it will not lose its place.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 3247) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," approved February 20, 1889.

Mr. CULLOM. Now I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 29, 1897, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 28, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WEAR CRAWFORD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 514) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Wear Crawford.

The amendments were read at length.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments just read by the Clerk.

Mr. STEELE. Is that motion privileged now?

The SPEAKER. It is a House bill with Senate amendments, and is laid before the House under the rule.

Mr. STEELE. I move its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Subsequently,

Mr. STEELE said: Mr. Speaker, the bill which I asked to have referred to the Committee on Military Affairs a little while ago is the bill of my colleague [Mr. JOHNSON], and he is ill. Therefore I should like to have the bill remain on the Speaker's table until he arrives, and to have my former motion reconsidered.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEELE. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] asks unanimous consent that the action of the House on the bill H. R. 514 be vacated, and that the bill return to the Speaker's table until his colleague returns.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. What was the action that is sought to be set aside?

The SPEAKER. The action was reference to a committee. If there be no objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

HOMER C. M'CUSKEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4872) to correct the military record of Homer C. McCuskey.

The Senate amendments were read at length.

Mr. HAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

PETER YOUNG.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6143) for the relief of Peter Young.

The amendments were read at length.

Mr. CROWTHER. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

JENNIE E. MOORE.

The Senate amendments were read, and concurred in.

JOSEPH J. HUDSON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4363) to increase the pension of Joseph J. Hudson.

The Senate amendment was read at length.

Mr. BURRELL. I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to make that motion? This is a proposition that would seem to require its consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It has been already considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BAILEY. My understanding is that any Senate amendment to a bill which would require consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is subject to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. But the rule of the House is where the Senate has presented an amendment which requires consideration in Committee of the Whole; but this is merely a difference in amount on a question that has already been considered in Committee of the Whole. It is not a new proposition, and that has been held not to send it to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BAILEY. Whether the amount has been increased or reduced could make no difference. Suppose the Senate amendment had greatly increased the amount; it seems to me that the bill ought to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that that would not affect it. Such has been the ruling ever since the twenty-first rule was adopted. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the Senate.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

JOHN DUNCAN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 4853) for the relief of John Duncan, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read, and concurred in.

MARY W. KEEFFE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 905) granting a pension to Mary W. Keeffe, with an amendment of the House thereto, to which the Senate disagreed and asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. THOMAS, Mr. CROWTHER, and Mr. LAYTON.

ADELAIDE MORRIS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 757) granting an increase of pension to Adelaide Morris, with House amendments thereto, to which the Senate disagreed and asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CROWTHER. I move that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees Mr. THOMAS, Mr. CROWTHER, and Mr. LAYTON.

BRIDGE ACROSS SULPHUR RIVER, ARKANSAS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1722) to approve and ratify the construction of a bridge across the Sulphur River in the State of Arkansas by the Texarkana and Fort Smith Railway Company, with an amendment of the House thereto, to which the Senate disagreed and asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HEPBURN, Mr. BARTLETT of New York, and Mr. PRICE.

ANNIE E. NOLAN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2129) granting an increase of pension to Annie E. Nolan, with a House amendment thereto, to which the Senate disagreed and asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. What action does the House propose?

Mr. McMILLIN. I suppose, if there is no motion to the contrary, that the bill will go to the committee for their recommendation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions for their action.

The motion was agreed to.

MARION M'KIBBEN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 684) granting an increase of pension to Marion McKibben, with House amendment, on which the Senate insisted on its disagreement to the House amendment and asked for a conference.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the conference requested.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as conferees on the part of the House the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. THOMAS, the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. CROWTHER, and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. LAYTON.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ERDMAN. Has this bill been considered at a Friday night session, and is it on the Calendar now? It is apparently not on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that it has not been considered.

Mr. ERDMAN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ELNORA SHUMAN.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10085) for the relief of Elnora Shuman, widow of John Shuman, deceased, and foster mother of W. E. Shuman and James F. Shuman, both deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elnora Shuman, widow of John Shuman, deceased, and foster mother of W. E. Shuman, late of Company K, One hundred and seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, and James F. Shuman, late of Company D, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, both killed in service during the late war, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. MAHON. I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire about this bill.

Mr. MAHON. If the gentleman will listen to the report, I do not think he will object.

The report (by Mr. POOLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10085) for the relief of Elnora Shuman, widow of John Shuman, deceased, and foster mother of W. E. Shuman and James F. Shuman, both deceased, submit the following report:

The claimant asks to be placed on the pension roll at $12 per month. Her case is a sad one and her cause meritorious, the history of which shall be briefly recited.

John Shuman was father of James F. Shuman, of Company D, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, and W. E. Shuman, late of Company H, One hundred and seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, both of whom served in the Army during the war of the rebellion. W. E. Shuman died from the effect of wounds received in the battle of Gettysburg, Pa., and James F. Shuman was killed at Gettzs Station, Va., April 25, 1864.

John Shuman was dependent on said sons at time of their enlistment and death and drew a father's pension (certificate 23091). He died June 22, 1895, and left surviving him a widow (Elnora Shuman), who married him March 2, 1848. She is stepmother of James F. Shuman, and was to all intents and purposes a mother to him from the time he was 12 years old up to the time he was killed. She was also stepmother to W. E. Shuman, another son of John Shuman, from the time he was 8 years old until he died from the wound received at Gettysburg, July 2, 1863. She was in all respects (excepting birth) a mother of these two boys killed.

John Shuman and Elnora Shuman, father and stepmother, were dependent on these boys until they were killed, and after their death they lived on pension granted John Shuman. Mrs. Shuman is now without any property whatever.

The proof shows that Elnora Shuman had a paralytic stroke, which has rendered her helpless; that she needs constant care of an attendant; that she is now 74 years of age.

The bill will continue to her the same pension granted her husband. Your committee believe that this is a proper case in which to grant a pension, and report back the bill recommending its passage with an amendment striking out the clause, in lines 10 and 11, "both killed in service during the late war;" also amending title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Elnora Shuman."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. As I said, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire why this lady would not get a pension in the regular way?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

JOHN N. QUACKENBUSH.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9483) for the relief of John N. Quackenbush.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOUD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH THE OMAHA AND WINNEBAGO INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3555) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to the Eastern Nebraska and Gulf Railway Company right of way through the Omaha and Winnebago Indian reservations, in the State of Nebraska," by extending the time for the construction of said railway.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time prescribed by an act of Congress approved the 27th day of June, 1894, entitled "An act granting to the Eastern Nebraska and Gulf Railway Company right of way through the Omaha and Winnebago Indian reservations, in the State of Nebraska," for the construction of such railway, be, and the same is hereby, extended for a period of four years from the 27th day of June, 1897.

SEC. 2. That all other provisions of said act are hereby continued in full force and effect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that "four years" be stricken out and "three years" inserted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to amend by striking out the word "four" and inserting the word "three."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MEIKLEJOHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NAVAL RESERVE BATTALION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10066) to provide for organizing a naval reserve battalion in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

MRS. MARY A. VIEL.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6902) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. Viel.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Mrs. Mary A. Viel, formerly widow of Maj. W. D. Sanger, of the Fifty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TALBERT. I would just like to ask if that bill has been considered at the regular Friday night sessions?

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. It has, and reported unanimously.

Mr. HITT. It has been reported unanimously.

Mr. TALBERT. Has it been considered at a Friday night session? Reserving the right to object, I ask that the report be read.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that it has not been considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TALBERT. Then I would like to have the report read. I I do not wish to object if it is a meritorious case.

The report (by Mr. WOOD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6902) granting a pension to Mary A. Viel, submit the following report:

The claimant, Mary A. Viel, was married to Maj. W. D. Sanger August 27, 1862, while he was in the service. They lived together as husband and wife until November, 1872, when Major Sanger died. Claimant in 1875 remarried. Her second husband, Paul Viel, died September 23, 1883. Claimant had no children by either marriage. She is now 63 years of age. She is living in destitution at Galveston, Tex., without home or means of support, and entirely dependent on her own labor, as a servant, doing kitchen and household work.

W. D. Sanger was major of the Fifty-fifth Illinois Volunteers, and served with his regiment from its organization until March, 1862, when he was detailed as a member of the staff of Gen. W. T. Sherman. He was in the battles of Shiloh, Russell's House, Chickasaw Bayou, and Arkansas Post. In the latter part of 1862 he was mustered out of the service by order, for "physical disability." This order seems to have been made on a mistake of the adjutant of the Fifty-fifth Regiment, who had reported him absent on account of "physical disability" instead of "absent, detached on staff of General Sherman."

On request of Col. David Stuart, commanding the regiment, Governor Yates commissioned him as lieutenant-colonel of the Fifty-fifth Regiment. This commission Major Sanger, on February 9, 1863 (not having then been relieved from duty), declined on the very honorable ground that his own record had been made while serving on General Sherman's staff; that General Sherman had recommended him for promotion to the rank of lieutenant-colonel on his staff; that the officers of the regiment in line of promotion had rendered meritorious service, and that his promotion would be a great injustice to them.

The order mustering him out was revoked, but for the reason alone set forth he was not commissioned as an officer of the regiment, and for some unexplained reason he was not appointed on General Sherman's recommendation, and thus he was forced out of the service.

A large number of the survivors of his regiment have petitioned Congress to grant claimant a pension. They strongly urge that the wife of so honorable a soldier should not be compelled, in her old age, to go into service as a cook or bend over the washtub to obtain a support.

The pension asked for is a modest one, $25 per month, and the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the Indian Department.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to withhold that motion for a moment that I may make a report.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GROUT, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 10167) making appropriations for the District of Columbia; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, is this the proper time to reserve points of order on that bill?

The SPEAKER. This is the time.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. All points of order are reserved.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HOPKINS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DOCKERY. At what point in the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose, we were at the foot of page 50, considering the first paragraph under the head of "Miscellaneous," and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] had made a point of order against one or two provisions in the paragraph. Since that time I have drawn an amendment to meet the gentleman's objections, which I have submitted to him, and which I now offer, understanding that it meets his approval.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out lines 22, 23, 24, and 25 on page 50, and all of page 51 down to line 17, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For salaries of the commissioners appointed under the acts of Congress approved March 3, 1893, and March 2, 1895, to negotiate with the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, $25,000; for expenses of commissioners and necessary expenses of employees, $10,000: Provided, That $2 per diem for expenses of special disbursing agent from date of original detail by Interior Department, while on duty with the commission, shall be paid therefrom; for clerical help, including the secretary of the commission, $5,000; for contingent expenses of the commission, $1,400; in all, $43,000: Provided, That out of the appropriations for salaries and expenses of said commissioners for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and prior years, there shall be paid for services heretofore performed, to F. E. Willie, $27; A. W. Dickey, $30; W. H. McClendon, $33; Henry Stroup, $90; N. L. Steele, $100: And provided further, The disbursing agent of said commission may reimburse himself out of said fund $50, heretofore paid by him to W. S. Olive for services."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman from Illinois that since submitting the amendment to him I have added a clause providing that a per diem shall be paid to the special disbursing agent. I have done this upon a letter received from the Dawes Commission, signed by Senator Dawes himself, in which he states that this officer was detailed from the Geological Survey to act with the Commission; that he has so acted since the 30th of August last; that while an employee of the Geological Survey his expenses were paid, but that when he came to the Commission they had no provision for the payment of his expenses, and therefore they ask that this allowance of $2 per diem from August 31 be allowed to meet that charge. Otherwise the amendment is precisely as it was when I showed it to the gentleman a while ago.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For operating two portable steam sawmills on the Nez Perce Indian Reservation, Idaho, and for necessary repairs to the same, $3,000.

Mr. STEWART of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend the printed bill as follows: At the foot of page 51, after line 24, add the following words: "For the purchase of an electric dynamo and placing the same in position for electric lighting of the public buildings at the Oneida Industrial School, in Wisconsin, $1,000."

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that amendment, if it is to come in at all, ought not to come in at this point. It properly belongs in the paragraph providing for schools. However, I will not make the point of order against it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after the word "dollars," in line 24, page 51, the following:
"For the survey of lands in the Indian reservations in South Dakota, the sum of $30,000, to be immediately available; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby directed to survey the lands embraced in said reservations."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the point of order against that amendment until I hear an explanation of it.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the amendment just proposed by me, I will say that it embodies the same provision that was contained in the bill of last year. There are a large number of reservations in the State. The allotments have not been fully made. There is great necessity for the adoption of this amendment, so that the allotments may be made to the Indians and carried out as originally intended. The amendment is identical in its terms with a provision embodied in the bill of last year, except that in this amendment I have dropped the names of the reservations—the Cheyenne River and Rosebud Indian reservations—named in the bill of last year, and I make the amendment apply generally to all the reservations in the State.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the amount of appropriation proposed?

Mr. GAMBLE. Thirty thousand dollars. The provision of the last appropriation bill will be found at the foot of page 24 of the act as passed last year. I have conferred with the Indian Office on this subject, and I learned there that all of the appropriation made last year has been exhausted and that this appropriation is greatly needed to carry out the work in hand.

Mr. McMILLIN. This does not pertain to Indians in the Indian Territory, as I understand?

Mr. GAMBLE. It applies simply to South Dakota.

Mr. McMILLIN. To the South Dakota reservations.

Mr. GAMBLE. I had prepared my amendment before the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin was offered, and possibly the references in my amendment to the numbering of the lines ought to be somewhat changed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why does not the provision embraced in lines 8 to 13, on page 52, cover the matter?

Mr. GAMBLE. Simply because it is inadequate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then why not change the amount and leave the other language of the text as it is?

Mr. GAMBLE. Because in the State of South Dakota there are a number of these reservations; and I have followed the language of the law of last year, so as to make the provision specially applicable to that State, the object being that the money should not be diverted to other localities.

Mr. FOOTE. Was this amount appropriated last year for this purpose?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOOTE. And it is proposed that we appropriate again this year $30,000?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOOTE. How long at this rate will it take to complete this survey?

Mr. GAMBLE. Well, as I have said, there are a number of these reservations, some of them of large area, and the object of this appropriation is to carry out the provisions of law and treaty stipulations in regard to the allotment of lands to the Indians, so that they can be separated from their tribal relations and move ahead in the bettering of their condition in all respects.

Mr. FOOTE. It seems to me the House should know something more about this matter. I am free to confess my own ignorance in respect to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to ask the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] whether this provision meets with the approval of the Indian Office?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir. I called yesterday at that office and conferred with Mr. Slayton, to whom I submitted this matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has the gentleman any report from the office on this subject?

Mr. GAMBLE. No, sir. But when I was in the Indian Office yesterday I was informed that all of the appropriation of $30,000 made last year had been exhausted and that this appropriation will be necessary to carry on the work for the coming year. I supposed then the bill would come up for consideration yesterday, and I did not have time to secure a formal report in writing from the Indian Office. Had I understood it would have gone over until to-day, I would have asked for a report in line with the suggestions I have made.

Mr. FOOTE. Has the gentleman any report as to how much work has been accomplished by the expenditure of the $30,000 appropriated last year, how much is yet to be done, and how many years it will probably take to complete the work?

Mr. GAMBLE. I do not know that I can intelligently answer that question.

Mr. FOOTE. It seems to me that the House should be informed on that point.

Mr. GAMBLE. There is a large area of land in these various reservations, of which there are a number in the State. It will take some time to carry out all the allotments under the treaty.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why does not the provision in the bill, so far as it goes, reach South Dakota as well as any other State?

Mr. GAMBLE. Because, as I have already stated, the amount provided in the bill is entirely inadequate for the State of South Dakota alone.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, Mr. Chairman, while, in view of the gentleman's statement, a point of order would not probably be sustained on this amendment, I really think the amendment ought not to be adopted. I regret very much to oppose any proposition offered by the gentleman from South Dakota, but I can not allow such an amendment as this to pass without opposing it. I think this amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. GAMBLE. In reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], I will say—not that I would accuse him of bad faith or anything of that kind, because I believe he has the good of the service entirely at heart—that I suggested this matter to him yesterday, and I understood I had his permission to bring up the amendment, he believing, as I thought, that it was necessary that this work be carried out. If these Indians are to be advanced in civilization, if they are to be put on their allotments and separated from their tribal relations in conformity to the provision of the treaties with the different tribes, this appropriation ought to be made in conformity with treaty stipulations as well as the law by which they were ratified. I insist that the amount is not too large. In fact, it is really insufficient to do the necessary work in hand. But although I think a larger amount ought to be provided than this amendment proposes, I am willing to modify the amendment and reduce the amount of the proposed appropriation.

Mr. FOOTE. I should like to know whether attention is called to this matter in the report of the Indian Commissioner. Has the gentleman any report in favor of the proposition?

Mr. GAMBLE. No, sir; I can not refer to any such report. I can only answer the gentleman generally that these reservations are very large; all the allotments have not been made; it is absolutely necessary in carrying out the provisions of the treaties that the allotments should be made so that in addition to the school, industrial, and other facilities the Indians may have the advantages of the influences of civilization to the fullest extent.

Mr. FOOTE. I did not wish to appear as opposing the amendment of the gentleman, but only wanted to obtain some information before voting upon the expenditure of so large a sum.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I very much regret that there seems to be a misunderstanding between the gentleman and myself. I certainly did not mean to be understood as assenting to the amendment. I know, of course, that the gentleman must have supposed I assented to it, or that he would not have so stated. But it was a mistake. I had no such thing in my mind during the conferences we had on the subject.

I do not think, I repeat, that the amendment ought to be adopted. We have provided $30,000 in the next item in the general fund for the purpose for which the gentleman now asks the same sum to be used in South Dakota alone; and I think the amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. GAMBLE. I think the gentleman from New York is in error, Mr. Chairman. There is a provision at the bottom of page 52 for the amount of $20,000 for the general surveys of allotments——

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman is correct; $20,000. I said thirty, but twenty is the correct amount.

Mr. GAMBLE. And I clearly understood the gentleman from New York that I had the right to offer the amendment, as I suggested it to him. It was embodied in the law of last year; and, upon the further fact that I have the assurance of the Indian Bureau, and my own knowledge of the conditions prevailing, that this is necessary. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in order to determine my vote on the amendment.

On page 52, line 13, about the middle of the page, I see that $30,000 is appropriated for surveys of allotments, and at the bottom of the page I see a sum of $20,000 is provided for the same purpose. It seems to me to be two substantially similar items, making a total of $50,000. Do I understand the gentleman from New York—that this was not estimated for?

Mr. SHERMAN. Of course the items in the bill were estimated for. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota was not estimated for.

Mr. CANNON. It is clearly outside of the estimate?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAMBLE. I would say, in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, that when the estimates were made up in September last the amount provided by the bill last year had not been exhausted and very little had been paid out at that time; but since then it has been entirely exhausted.

Mr. CANNON. Is there any communication, transmitted in the regular way, from the Interior Department regarding this appropriation?

Mr. GAMBLE. No, sir; as I have already stated, there is no such communication. That is to say, there is no formal communication, only to me, personally, when I called yesterday at the Indian Office upon this subject.

Mr. CANNON. Do I understand the gentleman from New York to antagonize the provision?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of physician, New York Agency, $600.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to reserve the right to submit a point of order on that provision long enough to ask a question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the same provision was in the last appropriation bill, identical in language and amount.

Mr. CANNON. It is marked "new" here.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is an error. It is precisely the same provision.

Mr. CANNON. Has the gentleman got the last year's bill before him?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say to the gentleman that he falls into an error because this item appears in another part of last year's bill. It was transposed here to make the bill more homogeneous.

Mr. CANNON. Is it in pursuance of a treaty?

Mr. SHERMAN. Only in a way, I suppose; in fact, it is a gratuity.

By our treaty with the New York Indians it was provided that we should furnish medicines, calicoes, and so on, and we have furnished a physician for many years; but up to last year he had been paid out of some general fund, what it is I can not say; but last year for the first time it was put in as a specific item in the appropriation bill in this form. In fact, this physician attends to some 2,500 Indians. He spends one day each week on the reservation, and goes there at any other time that his services may be required.

Mr. CANNON. This, I believe, is a wealthy class of Indians up in New York.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I do not think so. They have lands, but as a tribe there is but little wealth amongst them. The land on which the Indians live, I will say, is the land the title to which was claimed by the Ogden Land Company. They have a right of tenure forever, and there is some question about the ownership of the land, some claim that affects the title.

Mr. CANNON. It is allotted. They are living there on their allotments, are they not?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not allotted. They are living there in tribal relations. There has been no allotment whatever.

Mr. CANNON. If it is a treaty obligation, I am willing to pay. If it is not——

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not in terms a treaty stipulation, and yet it takes the place of a treaty provision that we shall furnish them so much medicine, and all that sort of thing. We furnish them a physician who does all this instead. I think it is entirely proper.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

For irrigation, Southern Ute allotments, including labor and material, to be immediately available, $25,000.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order on lines 18, 19, and 20, that that is an appropriation not authorized by existing law.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the gentleman make the point, or simply reserve it?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will reserve it if the gentleman desires to say something.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Clerk to read what is said on this subject in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It is found on pages 94 and 95 of his report. I am not contending that the gentleman's point of order is not correct, but I ask him to hear these facts before he insists upon his point.

The Clerk read as follows:

SOUTHERN UTES IN COLORADO.

It was stated in my last annual report that the commission which was appointed under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 20, 1895 (28 Stat. L., 677), was engaged in allotting lands in severalty to such members of the Southern Ute tribe as had elected to take them. November 30, 1896, the commission transmitted schedules showing allotments to 332 Indians, the quantity of land alloted being 65,450.33.

While these schedules were before the Department for approval, Agent Day, of the Southern Ute Agency, who was also a member of the commission, reported that the few Indians who had wanted their improvements appraised and sold with the intention of removing to the diminished reserve to live in common with those members of the tribe who had decided not to take allotments had reconsidered their determination and wanted allotted to them the land upon which their improvements were located. Agent Day, in his capacity as commissioner, was accordingly directed March 27, 1896, to prepare a supplemental schedule showing the additional allotments.

April 14 he transmitted a supplemental schedule showing 39 allotments aggregating 7,360.81 acres, which, added to the original schedule, makes a total of 371 allotments, covering 72,811.15 acres. June 12 the Department approved the two schedules of allotments and directed the Commissioners of the General Land Office to issue the patents therefor.

The surplus or unallotted lands of that portion of the reservation lying east of range 14 have not yet been opened to settlement, and they probably will not be until the east boundary line shall have been properly located. It is said now to be located about 5 miles too far west.

A matter of much importance to the allottees on the Southern Ute Reservation is that of irrigation. Agent Day has had surveys and the necessary filings made for five ditches, and he was directed September 1 to submit estimates of cost of putting in the head gate for each of the ditches and for doing a limited amount of additional work on two of them, the idea being to prosecute the work with "due diligence," as required by the laws of Colorado. The office is delayed in the proper prosecution of this work by lack of funds. For the completion of the ditches a special appropriation will have to be asked, the regular appropriation of $30,000 for irrigation generally on Indian reservations being entirely too small to provide for payment of the total cost of irrigation for the Southern Utes. It is proposed, however, to use about $5,000 thereof in making the start, and to depend upon Congress for the remaining funds necessary to complete the work.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, these Indians are the Indians who have been moved, or whom we have attempted to move, from Colorado over into Utah, and, as the portion of the report which the Clerk has read shows, some 70,000 acres of land have been allotted to some 370 Indians. As the report further shows, these lands, as they are now conditioned, without water, are practically valueless, and before these Indians can possibly maintain their existence there it is necessary to irrigate these lands. That work, as the report shows, is under way, and it will require, as is believed by the Commissioner, $25,000 more to finish it. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. How many of these Indians are there?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will have to refer to my friend from Colorado [Mr. BELL]. I can not recall how many there are, all told.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. About a thousand.

Mr. CANNON. About a thousand, my friend says.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. I find, on page 34, that the appropriation for substantial assistance to these Indians aggregates $83,740 for 1,000 Indians.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; that is right.

Mr. CANNON. Then they are beneficiaries under the general appropriation, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the construction of schools for education?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is right.

Mr. CANNON. And so on. Then, in addition to that, my recollection is that these Indians are very well off. And still, in addition to that, I find under the treaty of 1874 they are entitled to receive in perpetuity $25,000 a year, to be expended for their benefit within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, I do insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For survey and subdivision of Indian reservations and of lands to be allotted to Indians, and to make allotments in severalty, to be expended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 25, page 52, the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. SHERMAN] a question. I understand this is the amount estimated for by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I should like to ask if the Commissioner of Indian Affairs considered this amount sufficient for the survey and allotment of lands?

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, it is what he has asked for, and I assume that he considered that sufficient.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this question has already been raised by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], who wished an appropriation of $30,000 for his State alone, for surveys and allotments. The bill carries appropriations of only $20,000 for the surveys and allotments in all portions of the Union. Last year the appropriation, I believe, was about this amount, and I am of the opinion that this was not enough.

There are a number of reservations in the country where surveys and allotments are needed, and I have specially in mind a large reservation in my State where about two-thirds of the Indians have received their lands in severalty. The allotting agent has been unable to carry on allotments this entire winter for the reason that the appropriation for further surveys was exhausted; and I fear, with an appropriation of only $20,000 for the entire country for this very important branch of the work of the Department, that the same condition of affairs will exist in the coming year that has existed the past year. I believe that the Shoshone and Arapahoe Reservation alone in the State of Wyoming requires an appropriation of $8,000 or $9,000 to complete the surveys so that allotments can be made to all the Indians of that reservation in severalty. It is certainly highly important that these allotments should be made. The Department has already started in on this work of giving to every Indian his land in severalty, and the lack of sufficient funds for the survey operates against this very laudable work. It is highly important for the good of the Indians that the land shall be surveyed immediately in order that the allotments can be made at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, while I do not wish to set up my opinion against the knowledge of the gentleman so far as his own locality is concerned, I do think it is fair to assume that the Secretary has asked us for all that he deems sufficient for this year; and in the absence of any subsequent report or more definite report from him, I do think we should grant only such amount as the Secretary has asked for in the Book of Estimates; and therefore I trust that the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation made last year was much short of the amount needed, and it is barely possible that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs did ask for a larger appropriation for this purpose than the Secretary of the Interior finally submitted, and no doubt the Commissioner endeavored to keep estimates as low as possible.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For completion of the survey of the lands in the Indian Territory, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available: Provided, That the surveys herein authorized, or any part of them in the Indian Territory, shall be made under the supervision of the Director of the Geological Survey by such persons as may be employed by or under him for that purpose; and such surveys shall be executed under instructions to be issued by the Secretary of the Interior, and subdivisional surveys shall be executed under the rectangular system, as now provided by law: Provided further, That when any surveys shall have been so made and plats and field notes thereof prepared, they shall be approved and certified by the Director of the Geological Survey, and two copies thereof shall be returned, one for filing in the Indian Office and one in the General Land Office; and such surveys, field notes, and plats shall have the same legal force and effect as heretofore given to the acts of surveyors-general: Provided further, That all laws inconsistent with the provisions hereof are hereby declared to be inoperative as respects such surveys.

Mr. KIEFER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

On page 53 insert, after line 20, the words:

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay to the scouts and soldiers and their descendants of the Sisseton, Wahpeton, Medawaukanton, and Wapkoota bands of Sioux Indians residing off of the Sisseton Reservation and not parties to the agreement, who were duly enrolled and received their proportion of the annuities on the pay roll of said scouts and soldiers for the years 1893 and 1894, and whose names were omitted from the pay roll of the year 1895, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the amendment until I have heard further in reference to it.

Mr. KIEFER. Mr. Chairman, I desire now that the Clerk may read the statement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs touching this matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, January 19, 1897.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter dated the 15th instant, inclosing copy of an amendment which your colleague, Mr. KIEFER, proposes to introduce to the Indian appropriation bill when it is considered. You ask to be advised whether or not the amendment should be incorporated in the bill.

In reply, I return the amendment with advice that the same should be incorporated in the bill. The amount named, $10,000, will pay twenty-five scouts and soldiers omitted from the pay roll of 1895, if that number were omitted.

Very respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

Hon. J. S. SHERMAN,
House of Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to say anything on the point of order made by the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not insist on the point of order, in view of the statement made by the Commissioner.

Mr. CANNON. I will reserve it.

Mr. KIEFER. May I be heard?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Minnesota on the point of order, if he desires to be heard.

Mr. KIEFER. Yes, sir. The amendment, in the first place, asks for $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay a number of soldiers and scouts of the Sioux, as they are named in the amendment. They were left off the pay roll by an oversight for the year 1895. They were paid for 1893 and 1894. They are entitled to that pay. Now, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs acquiesces in the request that they should be so paid.

Mr. CANNON. Let me read:

In reply I return the amendment with the advice that the same be incorporated in the bill. The amount named, $10,000, will pay twenty-five scouts and soldiers omitted from the pay roll of 1895, if that number were omitted.

Very respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

Mr. KIEFER. That is the number that he refers to. Not knowing exactly how many there were omitted, he qualified it by stating if that number had been omitted; being the number of twenty-five, that would be the amount.

Mr. CANNON. Is that a treaty obligation?

Mr. KIEFER. I so understand it.

Mr. CANNON. What treaty?

Mr. KIEFER. I can not state. The gentleman must understand that these scouts and soldiers were scouts and soldiers during the Sioux outbreak of 1862, and payment authorized by act approved March 2, 1895.

Mr. CANNON. Then this runs back to 1862?

Mr. KIEFER. This is a claim by soldiers and scouts who served as such during the Sioux war for 1862, as I understand, and their names were left off the pay roll for the year 1895.

Mr. CANNON. Then I insist on the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope you will. If that is so, that is a claim.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to reimburse the confederated Kaskaskia, Peoria, Piankeshaw, and Wea tribes of Indians the amount due them under the treaty of May 30, 1854, $12,123.93, to be immediately available, and to be in full for all money claimed by said Indians, both principal and interest, under and by virtue of said treaty; said sum to be paid per capita to said Indians by the Secretary of the Interior or expended for their benefit in such manner and for such objects and purposes as he may see fit, and when so paid or expended to be in full payment of all claim and demand against the Government of the United States under said treaty.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph.

Mr. CANNON. Before the amendment is offered, I desire to make the point of order upon the paragraph, beginning at line 21, page 53, and extending down to line 8, page 54.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend by adding after the word "treaty," on page 54——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask to have the point of order disposed of first.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be reserved.

Mr. CANNON. What is the use of amending the paragraph if it is subject to the point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. Then, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] will withhold his amendment for a moment and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will reserve his point of order, I will make a brief explanation of this paragraph. Back in the fifties certain treaties were made with these tribes of Indians relating to the sale of their lands, and they thereafter claimed that the United States had erroneously charged against their fund certain items of overpayments to allotting agents, payments to certain counsel that were employed in the business, and other matters of that kind which the Indians claimed should not under the treaty have been charged against them. In 1867 Congress passed an act which provided that "an examination shall be made of the books of the Indian Office and an account current prepared stating the condition of their funds, and the representation of these Indians for overcharges for the sale of their lands in 1857 and 1858 shall be examined and reported to Congress."

Mr. CANNON. What was the date of that?

Mr. SHERMAN. That was in 1867. It will be found on page 515 of 15 Statutes at Large. That examination took place and, as long ago as 1877, a bill was favorably reported in the Senate covering not only the amount included in this amendment, but also interest on various items, making a total of twenty-five thousand and some odd hundred dollars. That was in 1877, twenty years ago.

Mr. CANNON. That is, it was reported in the Senate as a claim for consideration?

Mr. SHERMAN. It was reported favorably as a separate bill.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask the gentleman, is this an appropriation for the service of the Indian Office for the coming fiscal year?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not.

Mr. CANNON. But it is in satisfaction of a claim that dates away back in the fifties?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. Then I must insist on the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Notwithstanding the absolute virtue of the claim as demonstrated by the gentleman from New York? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. It has no place in this bill. It is a mere claim.

Mr. SHERMAN. I assume, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman's point of order is good if it is insisted upon.

Mr. CANNON. I insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will offer my amendment, to come in before line 9 on page 54.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Before line 9 on page 54 insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to pay to G. H. Kitson, or his legal representatives, the sum of $1,000 due said Kitson for money advanced to the Menominee tribe of Indians of Wisconsin, out of any money due said tribe from the United States not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon that amendment, but will hear an explanation.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, this carries no appropriation at all. These Indians are very wealthy. They have no annuities, but they have a large amount of money to their credit in the Treasury, the interest of which is paid to them every year without appropriation. They have also a large income from the sale of lumber. A few years ago a member of the tribe loaned them $1,000 in connection with a mission to Washington. He is a one-armed Indian. He mortgaged his farm to obtain the money, and they gave him a note for it. I have a letter here, written by the agent in 1892, in which he makes the request that $600 of this amount should be paid, and this amendment provides for the payment of the note without interest. There is no reason why it should not be paid. It takes nothing from the Treasury. This Indian has lost his farm. The tribe is perfectly able to pay the money they owe this man, and the only way he can be paid is for us to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay him.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CANNON. I renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the erection of a bridge, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, across Big Wind River, on the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation in Wyoming, at or near the Kinnear crossing of that river, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on this paragraph until I hear an explanation of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the Shoshone Reservation in Wyoming is about 75 miles square. The Big Wind River runs east and west through that reservation, nearly through the center of it. The Shoshone and Arapahoe Indians—about 1,900 of them—have their allotments south of the Big Wind River, and they use the northern half of the reservation, on the north side of the Big Wind River, as grazing grounds. From the Owl Creek Mountains, in the northern part of the reservation, they obtain timber, logs, poles, fence posts, etc. The Big Wind River is not fordable during the months of April, May, and June, and generally not until the middle of July. Therefore during that part of the year it is impossible for the Indians to cross back and forth between their grazing and timber grounds and their farms.

Further, this reservation lies between two well-settled portions of the State of Wyoming—the Lander Valley and the Big Horn Basin country. All the travel from the Union Pacific Railroad to the southern portion of the last-named country is obliged to cross this reservation; there is no other way in which that region can be reached from the south. Settlers traveling in that country are compelled to cross the Big Wind River, and under existing conditions it is impossible for them to do so until after midsummer. Further, this reservation is southeast of the National Park and the Jacksons Hole country, and Fort Washakie, on this reservation, is the only place where there are any troops adjacent to these regions. During the early part of the year it would be impossible, without the construction of this bridge, to transfer these troops, if it should be necessary, without great delay. I think this bridge is needed by the Indians, by the settlers, and by the military.

Mr. CANNON. Is this appropriation estimated for?

Mr. MONDELL. It is not.

Mr. CANNON. Is there anything to prevent the State of Wyoming from erecting a bridge within her borders?

Mr. MONDELL. In reply to the gentleman's question, I will say that if the State of Wyoming or its citizens were in possession of the Shoshone and Arapahoe Reservation, one of the fairest portions of our State, we should be only too happy to bridge the Big Wind River. But unfortunately for us that great reservation lying in the center of the State belongs to the Government and the Indians. It is surrounded east and west by mountain ranges. There is a vast tract in the northern part of my State, as large as the State of Massachusetts, which it is impossible to reach from the south without crossing this reservation. If the reservation were turned over to the State of Wyoming, we should be very happy to make appropriations for bridging the river; but so long as the reservation remains in the hands of the Indians and the National Government our State has no authority to go upon the reservation for the purpose of building bridges. We therefore ask that this bridge be provided for by an appropriation through the only channel in which an appropriation can be made for its erection.

Mr. CANNON. In the absence of any estimate and of any official information from the Executive Department in reference to this matter, I am compelled to insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all restrictions existing against the leasing, sale, or conveyance of the allotted lands of the Puyallup Indians, situate in Pierce County, State of Washington, in so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, are hereby removed.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. I reserve a point of order against the paragraph just read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DOOLITTLE] to explain this provision, as it has been inserted in the bill upon his suggestion.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, this matter has been up during every session of Congress during the last four years. There are only something like five or six hundred of these Puyallup Indians. These lands, lands which have been allotted to them for a long period of time, are a much larger body of land than they will require, or even be able to clear, for purposes of cultivation. The allotted lands abut against the city limits of the city of Tacoma, in the State of Washington, a place of fifty-two or fifty-three thousand inhabitants. Some time since a treaty was made with these Puyallup Indians, and afterwards the lands were allotted to them, with the exception of about 600 acres, which were retained for school, church, and cemetery purposes. Some time since a commission was appointed to superintend the sale of these allotted lands and the reservation lands proper. The provision of law under which this commission was appointed provided for the payment of the salaries and expenses of the commissioners out of the proceeds of the sale of these allotted lands. The commissioners went on and sold certain of the lands—a much smaller quantity, as we believe, than should have been sold in view of the expense incurred. About $90,000 was expended in the sale of a portion of these lands.

On the 1st day of December, 1896, this commission, under an act of the last Congress, came to an end. I had a talk with the Secretary of the Interior, during the last session, on this subject while the Indian appropriation bill was pending, and when he requested that a further appropriation be made to pay the expenses of this commission. He told me that he desired the commission to proceed with the work till the 1st of December last, but he was satisfied that if they continued to work up to that time they would have sold all the lands which the Indians would consent to sell under that limitation, and therefore he would not care to insist on the further prosecution of that business under the supervision of a commission.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the fact is that these Indians are very largely of white blood; they are educated Indians, amply able to take care of their business; and, as I have stated repeatedly here on this floor, they are constituents of mine. I am here to represent them as any other member on this floor represents his constituents, and they desire that this limitation shall be now removed. They are just as competent to transact their own business as any agricultural community in the limits of the United States. What they desire to do is to sell portions of the allotted lands and use the moneys received from the sale for the purpose of clearing up the balance of the property. Large portions of their lands are covered very heavily with timber, and will require an expenditure of $100 or $125 and in some cases even as much as two or even three hundred dollars an acre to clear them up. Once cleared, however, it is the most productive land in the United States. It is so fertile that a farm of 8 or 10 acres is sufficient to produce everything required for the consumption and to supply the wants of a family of six or eight persons. We have gotten these Indians in such a condition—they are so well educated—that they are perfectly competent to manage their own business affairs and do not longer need this commission.

We wanted, therefore, the supervision of these commissioners to come to an end, for they added no value whatever to the property rights of my constituents.

I am asking only that which is fair and just and proper, and it seems to me that there ought to be no objection, in common fairness on the part of any Representative on this floor, to this proposition.

Mr. BRODERICK. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Do I understand that this commission went on and sold lands after allotments had been made to the individual Indians?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRODERICK. Sold the allotted lands?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes, sir; which, in my judgment, was a bad policy always. The Indians ought not to have been compelled to bear the burden of this commission. It is all wrong.

And another thing: If an investigation were had, it would be shown conclusively to any unprejudiced mind that the lands were sold to no better advantage than if they had been sold directly by the Indian allottees themselves. And in 9 cases out of 10 the sale was made by an arrangement with the individual allottee, and was simply confirmed by this commission.

I have no complaint or criticism to make so far as the commission itself is concerned, but their effort has come to an end, as Congress wisely determined, on the 1st of December last.

Mr. BRODERICK. The commissioners, as I understand it, had supervision over the lands in the matter of leasing, and sometimes collected the money under the leases, but I have never known that they had any right, or that they ever undertook to interfere with the title of the Indians.

Was that provided for by the act appointing the commission; that these commissioners should sell the lands of the individual allottees?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Assuredly.

Mr. BRODERICK. I did not so understand.

Mr. DOOLITTLE (continuing). And they went and sold all the lands they could sell under the consent of the Indians.

A good many of the Indians possess the pride to manage their own affairs, and naturally would not consent to the sale of their lands under the supervision of any commission.

Mr. BRODERICK. To whom did the commission report?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. To the Secretary of the Interior. And the arrangement was further made that the moneys proceeding from the sale should be turned over to the Indians directly without being covered into the Treasury. This is a further fact that the intelligence of these Indians is recognized in every possible way.

Now, an effort is claimed to have been made all the time to educate Indians to be competent to manage their own affairs. Here are five or six hundred people who have acquired sufficient intelligence and business capacity to do that very thing.

Mr. BRODERICK. What became of the moneys received that were turned over from the lands sold?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Why, they took the money and improved the balance of the lands, so that they are now living as white people, educating their children, and voting the Populist ticket in a good many cases, I am sorry to say.

Mr. BRODERICK. I mean with reference to the lands sold by the commission. Did those persons whose lands were sold become paupers?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Not at all. They did not sell all of their lands. They took the money received from the sale of a portion of the land and improved the balance, on which they live and retain the title.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Will the gentlemen allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Certainly.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. I notice you take away, by the amendment, the prohibition against the conveyance of the land. When would that time expire?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. In about four years from the present time. The twenty-year limitation was done away with by the act of a former Congress, and was cut down to ten years. About six years of that time have expired, and no one expects these Indians to be more competent than they are now, during the four years remaining, to manage their own property.

Mr. BRODERICK. I desire to ask the gentleman if this statute authorizing the appointment of a commission authorized that commission to sell all the allotted lands of any individual Indian?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Such portion of the alloted lands as they do not require for their own use was the provision.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. I am very reluctant to make the point of order against my friend.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I assure the gentleman that I am very reluctant to have it come from that source.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. I have no doubt the gentleman knows a great deal more about it than I do.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am glad that is admitted also.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. But we have to treat these Indians with reference to our general policy, and it seems to me this is an infraction of the general principles upon which we treat all Indians. They are considered as under the special guardianship of the nation. There is a way in which anyone who wants to buy these lands can get them.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Not now.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. That is, by getting the consent of the Government, which acts as a trustee; but I am especially moved to make the point of order from the statement made in the report of the Indian Commissioner, in which he says, with reference to this very proposition:

It is believed by this office——

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. Let me just read this report.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the gentleman will allow me, I should like to ask him when that report was made by the Indian Commissioner?

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. It was in reference to the last Indian bill, in which there was a similar provision to this one. The date is February 21, 1886. The Indian Commissioner then said:

It is believed by this office that if the clause contained in the pending Indian appropriation bill—

Which I understand is substantially identical with this very clause—

should become a law it would result in robbing the Puyallup Indians of their homes and lands, in bringing them to early poverty, and in making them dependent upon the generosity of the Government. Not only would it result in their financial ruin, but tend to their moral destruction. It would, in my opinion, be a discredit to the Government and a fraud upon Indian legislation to allow these Indians to dispose of their lands—as they certainly would do—worth many thousands of dollars, for a mere pittance.

It seems to me that these Indians who own lands in the vicinity of a large city should especially receive the guardianship of the Government, if Indians anywhere should receive that guardianship. And in view of that statement of the Indian Commissioner, I very reluctantly—because I regret to object to anything my friend wishes—feel called upon to make the point of order that this changes existing law.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move to strike out the last word.

So far as the possibility of these Indians becoming a charge on the General Government is concerned, I wish to reply to the gentleman. These Indians are citizens of the State of Washington just as much as I am a citizen, and whenever an Indian has fallen into indigent circumstances he has been taken care of by the authorities just as a white man is taken care of. These Indians are recognized in every way as citizens of that State, voting at all of our elections, and subject to all of our laws. They have the right, under the decisions of the Federal courts in that State and under the decisions of the State courts, to purchase liquor and to exercise all of the rights of citizens. [Laughter.] They have at all times done so, and I desire to say to this House, that there is as much sobriety among these Puyallup Indians as there is in any community in your State or my State; that these Indians are sober, upright, self-respecting people.

Now, so far as the observation of the Commissioner is concerned, he never has seen these Indians, he never has been with them, and knows nothing about them, and when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] visited the State of Washington a short time since I think it was pointed out to him where this reservation lay, stretched out in the Puyallup Valley, covered with timber in the main. The gentleman should know how important it is to the interests of that city that these lands be opened up, and how important it is to the interests of those who now hold the lands under this little four years' restriction, and I ask him, in common fairness as between men representing constituencies here on this floor, to withdraw this point of order. He says he is reluctant in making it. I assure him that no harm whatever can come to these Indians through the passage of this provision in this bill. I am speaking earnestly, Mr. Chairman. This is the last opportunity I shall have on this floor to plead in behalf of the rights of these constituents of mine. Another man will soon take my place, residing in a more remote portion of the State, and I ask this on behalf of these Indians, on behalf of the citizens of the State of Washington, and on behalf of the fairness which I believe he possesses and that I simply invoke in asking the withdrawal of this point of order. I hope no point of order will prevail against this amendment, but that it will be allowed to come to a vote here in the House, so that we may ascertain what the sentiment of the House is in regard to a matter of this kind, that is asked in all candor by the representative of a constituency who ought to know what his people want and what is best for them.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon his point?

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if this can be reserved, and this section passed over, I would be very glad to further look into the matter; but we have the positive statement of the Indian Commissioner, and if we are compelled to act upon it now, I shall have to insist upon the point of order. I ask that this paragraph be temporarily passed over.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will consent to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the paragraph under consideration be temporarily passed over. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 18, page 54, insert the following:

"That from and after the passage of this act all Indians tried within the Territories of the United States for any of the offenses enumerated in section 9, 23 Statutes, page 384, shall be tried exclusively by the United States courts within said Territories."

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point of order against the amendment. I reserve it temporarily.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that upon the Indian appropriation bill of 1891 certain offenses were enumerated in which an Indian could be tried in the United States Territories where the United States held exclusive jurisdiction, so that in the Territories these Indians shall be tried within the United States courts; but in the Territories of the United States there are courts with dual jurisdiction. The United States courts also sit as district courts, Territorial district courts, and confusion arises in regard to the trial of these Indians. In many cases they were tried in the Territorial district courts. It then became necessary on an Indian appropriation bill, approved March 2, 1889, to provide that—

SEC. 11. That hereafter the costs of the trial of the cases in the courts of the several Territories tried pursuant to and for the offenses named in section 9 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes," shall be audited by the accounting officers of the Treasury and paid out of money for similar expenses in the trial of criminal cases in the courts of the United States.

Notwithstanding that provision, confusion still arose, and many counties having claims against the General Government found that they could not collect them, and it became necessary in 1895 for a joint resolution to be passed, as follows:

That the First Auditor and the First Comptroller of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized to examine all claims which may be presented in proper form by the different counties in Arizona Territory, and to ascertain the amount due to each of said counties on account of legal costs and expenses incurred from March 3, 1889, to June 30, 1893, in the prosecution of Indians under the act of March 3, 1885, for which the United States is liable under act of March 3, 1889, Statutes at Large, volume 25, page 1004, and which have been paid by said counties, and the amounts so found due shall be certified by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Speaker of the House of Representatives for a deficiency appropriation.

Now, I wish to say that these Indians are tried by the same men, in the same courts, at the same time, and this only involves the machinery by which they shall be paid. Under the law as it now stands it is very ambiguous, and they must present their claims to the Treasury, and they have to be certified to the Appropriations Committee to provide for their payment in the deficiency bill one year after the trials have been had. It was never contemplated they should be tried by those courts. The object of the amendment is simply to remove the ambiguity and hasten the collection of these amounts from the Department of Justice instead of through Congressional action.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is purely legislative action, and I assure my friend that the Committee on Indian Affairs, except its chairman, is a very active committee, and very energetic in taking action upon matters submitted to it; and if its attention is called to the matters it is prompt in disposing of them. If the gentleman will present the measure to the committee he can get it through, can get it reported from our committee, and it can be passed in the morning hours.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I offer the following amendment.

Insert after the word "removed," in line 18, page 54, the following:

"That the settlers who purchased with the condition annexed of actual settlement on all ceded Indian reservations be, and they are hereby, granted an extension of one year in which to make payment as now provided by law."

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask my friend if this is the same provision we incorporated in the bill last year?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. It is not the same provision as incorporated last year, but substantially the same.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is the same in effect.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. No, not exactly. That only referred to homesteads, and this refers to the ceded lands on the Indian reservations with the condition annexed. It is substantially the same. It is to carry out the same purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. I make no point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless objection be made, the amendment will be considered as adopted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I wish to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 18, page 54, insert the following:
"For repair of present bridge across Big Wind River, on the Shoshone Reservation, in the State of Wyoming, the sum of $3,000."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the provision for the construction of a new bridge across the Big Wind River has been stricken out on a point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on this amendment until I hear the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MONDELL. The provision for the new bridge having been stricken out, I now offer this amendment. I have already explained to the House the necessity for some such provision in view of the geography of this reservation. Quite a number of years ago the Government erected a bridge across the Big Wind River. Last year one end of the bridge was washed out. It had been in use for many years, and it is the only means of communication across that stream for at least half the summer. Unless a new bridge shall be erected, or the old one repaired, neither the Indians, the military, nor the settlers can cross the river for a number of months during the year. The reason for asking for a new bridge was that the old one was too high up the river for general convenience; but as the paragraph providing for the new bridge has gone out on the point of order, I am anxious that at least the old one shall be repaired, so as to accommodate the travel.

The bridge is a piece of Government property, and it ought to be put in good order. I would say in connection with this matter that when the bill was under consideration in the committee I went to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and asked him if the Indian agent on the Shoshone and Arapahoe Reservation had communicated with him in regard to this bridge, and he said the agent had called his attention to the fact that a portion of the bridge had been washed out, but had made no further suggestion. I then requested the Commissioner to telegraph to Captain Wilson, asking that he give his opinion as to whether there should be a new bridge erected or whether the old one should be repaired. This morning I stopped in the Commissioner's office and saw a letter from Captain Wilson stating that in his opinion it would be better to repair the old bridge, and that it could be repaired for the sum of $3,000. We can get a recommendation from the Commissioner, if necessary, for an appropriation for that purpose to that amount. I trust, therefore, that the House will see fit to give us this small appropriation for the purpose of bridging that river, so as to provide the Indians on the reservation, as well as the settlers in a large portion of my State, the means of intercommunication and travel across the reservation.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman if there is anything in the estimates covering this item?

Mr. MONDELL. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that there is nothing in the estimates covering the item; but the Commissioner of Indian Affairs favors this appropriation and the Indian agent has recommended it.

Mr. CANNON. Has the statute been in any sense complied with which requires estimates to be sent from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Speaker of the House? Is there anything in writing in the shape of an estimate for this expenditure?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know that there is.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask my friend further if it is not a fact that these Indians have a trust fund which the Secretary of the Interior administers, and out of which he can repair this bridge, if it is necessary?

Mr. MONDELL. I understand that there is no trust fund that can be so drawn upon.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I am very sorry, but I shall have to insist upon the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hold that the point of order is not well taken. This is an appropriation simply for the repair of a piece of Government property that has been in use for a number of years past.

Mr. CANNON. Who built that bridge?

Mr. MONDELL. The Government of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. Can the gentleman show me any law under which it was built?

Mr. MONDELL. There was an appropriation for its construction and it was erected at the expense of the Government, and this amendment simply proposes an appropriation to repair it.

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if we appropriate for our great territory and our extended service in pursuance of estimates, and with official knowledge of Government property and Government improvements, we shall be meeting the situation fairly well. I know that it is ungracious to make the point of order, but I do not very well see how I can avoid it in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois hold that it is necessary to have estimates submitted and recommendations made before it will be in order to put in the bill an appropriation of the kind contemplated in this amendment?

Mr. CANNON. I think that an expenditure made under law for a public work would be competent without an estimate, but I do not think this is such a public work in progress as is contemplated by the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Even if the construction of the bridge was authorized by law?

Mr. CANNON. What information has the Chair upon that point?

The CHAIRMAN. Only the statements of the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if I had the time to look the matter up I could cite the gentleman to the appropriation as made. I do not know just when it was made, but we all know that the bridge was built at Government expense.

Mr. SHERMAN. In justice to the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, I ask unanimous consent that this item be passed over, so that information may be furnished to him on which he can rule intelligently.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. FLYNN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the last amendment insert:
"That any sums of money hereafter to be paid per capita to individual Indians, including those belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes, shall be paid to said Indians by an officer of the Government designated by the Secretary of the Interior; and any provisions of law contrary hereto are hereby repealed."

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I reserve a point of order against this amendment.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the amendment is subject to a point of order. The last Indian appropriation bill contained the following clause:

That any sums of money hereafter to be paid per capita to individual Indians shall be paid to such Indians by an officer of the Government designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

In the Indian Committee it was well known that that amendment was offered by me at the last session in order to protect the individual Indians, especially in the Five Civilized Tribes. There has never been a payment made, to my knowledge, of any public funds to the treasurers of those Five Tribes in connection with which there has not been more or less scandal.

The difference between the present amendment and the provision adopted last year is just this: The amendment was put upon the last bill with the understanding that it included the Five Civilized Tribes. Later the Indian Office found that it did not. I brought this matter up in the Committee on Indian Affairs in the presence of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and other members. They sanctioned the proposition, and I was instructed to confer with the chief of the finance division in the Indian Office and have him draft an amendment which would cover the case. The amendment which has just been read was drafted by that gentleman in the Indian Office.

As to the merits of this amendment, all I have to say is this: If you want the Indians to obtain the money you appropriate for them, then you should see to it that the money is paid by an officer of the United States.

Mr. DOCKERY. In what other way has this money been paid heretofore?

Mr. FLYNN. It has been sent to the treasurers of the various tribes. If any individual Indian "coughed up" enough to the officers of the tribe, probably he would get all that was coming to him, or probably he would not.

This amendment is offered solely in the interest of the individual Indian. I am frank to acknowledge that it is against the monopoly now existing. As I stated when the amendment was offered and adopted last year, the governor of the Seminole tribe is named Brown, and the treasurer is his brother. They run the only stores in the Seminole Nation. When the money is paid from the Treasury of the United States to the treasurer of the Seminole Nation, the individual Indian never gets a single dollar, but is given a due-bill, upon which he can obtain goods to a particular amount at Brown's store.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am not sure that I am correct; but I have the impression that there may be some provision of law requiring moneys of this character to be paid to the treasurer of the particular tribe.

Mr. FLYNN. There is no such provision. There has simply been a custom of that kind. As I have said, I do not believe the amendment is subject to a point of order, because a similar provision will be found in the last Indian appropriation bill; and while the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] has reserved such a point, I fail to see how he, having been present when I was instructed by the committee to have the Indian Office draft the amendment, can now raise the point.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has this proposition been submitted to the Indian Office and been approved?

Mr. FLYNN. It was drawn in the Indian Office.

Mr. DOCKERY. With the knowledge of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. FLYNN. I presume so; for, as I have stated, it was drawn by the chief of the finance division upon a request of the Indian Committee, which I was instructed to submit.

Mr. DOCKERY. I had the impression that possibly the Commissioner was opposed to the proposition.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to be compelled to insist on a point of order against the proposition of my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN]; but in view of the fact that we are now negotiating with these Five Tribes, I believe it would be unwise to make any change at the present time in the manner of making the payments to them. I know nothing as to the manner in which these payments are made, as related by the gentleman from Oklahoma; but I do want to say, in justice to the committee, that when the gentleman was authorized to confer with the Indian Office, it was expected that he would come before the committee with the amendment suggested by the Indian Office. But no such amendment was submitted to the committee. Had the gentleman presented an amendment with a letter from the Indian Office recommending it, I should have raised no objection.

Now, sir, this proposed amendment must change existing law; otherwise the provision contained in the Indian appropriation of last year would be sufficient to authorize the Indian Office to pay out the money in the manner the gentleman desires. But the Secretary of the Interior has held that the provision is not sufficient. I have his letter in my hand. The truth is that the law provides as follows—I read from page 448 of the eighteenth volume of the Statutes at Large:

That the United States assistant treasurer at St. Louis, Mo., be, and he hereby is, authorized to open and keep accounts with the duly constituted treasurers of the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, and Chickasaw nations of Indians the same as with the Government against the disbursing officer.

This amendment changes that law.

Then, in reference to the Seminole tribe, I find the following provision for making payments under the treaty of 1856 (see 11 Statutes at Large, page 702):

That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the sanction of the Secretary of the Interior and the President, shall have authority to—expend the same for such objects as will best promote the comfort, civilization, and improvement of the Seminole Indians; or, in his discretion, with the sanction of the Secretary and the President aforesaid, shall be authorized to pay such annuities, or any part thereof, into the treasury of the Seminole nation, to be used as the council of the same shall provide, instead of paying the same per capita according to the terms of said treaty.

(See 18 Statutes, page 29.)

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Kansas forgets what occurred in the committee room. I was instructed, if he will remember, to draft the amendment to cover the point suggested in the amendment, and to offer it as I now offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman if this is new legislation?

Mr. FLYNN. Well, I think the whole bill is new legislation, as a matter of fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to know whether the amendment in its present form changes existing law?

Mr. FLYNN. This provision was in the last Indian appropriation bill:

And any sums of money to be paid per capita to the individual Indians shall be paid to such Indians by an officer of the Government designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this is obnoxious to the rule, and will sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the clause in section 3 of the act approved February 28, 1891 (United States Statutes at Large, volume 26, page 795), which provides as follows: "That where lands are occupied by Indians who have bought and paid for the same, and which lands are not needed for farming or agricultural purposes, and are not desired for individual allotments, the same may be leased by the authority of the council speaking for such Indians, for a period not to exceed five years for grazing or ten years for mining purposes, in such quantities and upon such terms and conditions as the agent in charge of such reservation may recommend, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior," be, and the same is hereby, extended, so far as the same relates to leasing for mining purposes, to the lands embraced in that part of the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, not restored to the public domain by the act of June 20, 1892 (United States Statutes at Large, volume 27, page 62), and still reserved by the Government for the use and occupancy of the Indians thereon, to take effect immediately.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

After line 13, page 55, insert:

"To reimburse John T. Oglesby, special United States Indian agent, for traveling expenses incurred by him and per diem suspension made by the Treasury Department in his accounts while engaged in accompanying the remains of Paul F. Faison, late United States Indian inspector, from Shawnee, Okla., to Raleigh, N. C.: Provided, however, That the total amount paid under this authority shall not exceed the sum of $106.

"To reimburse the estate of Paul F. Faison, late United States Indian inspector, for the amount paid on account of board, etc., of said Faison during his illness at Shawnee, Okla., and for transportation of his remains from that point to Raleigh, N. C.: Provided, however, That the total amount to be paid under this authority shall not exceed the sum of $75."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, although the amount involved here is quite small, for the present I will reserve the point of order with a view to asking my friend about the precedents for such legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. The facts are that this Indian agent while in the service was taken sick in Oklahoma Territory and there died, and the Commissioner directed these gentlemen to proceed with his remains to his home in North Carolina. We have the report of the Secretary of the Interior in reference to the matter. The services were performed as directed; but the allowance passed by the Indian Office for the expense incurred in the performance of this duty was disallowed by the accounting officer of the Treasury, and therefore this provision is necessary to secure the payment of that sum to the parties who paid the money.

As the gentleman from Illinois says, it is not a large sum, and it seems to be an entirely just one. I have the letter of the Secretary if the gentleman cares to see it.

Mr. CANNON. I do not care about that. The only thing involved is the question of principle that it establishes. It is not the amount involved. I am speaking to my friend now about the matter of policy. It is some 3,000 miles across the continent, and I do not know how many, probably 300,000, United States officials are employed all through the country. Under the circumstances we ought to hesitate very long, it seems to me, before we enter upon a class of expenditures like this, that would involve unknown amounts. We have not been accustomed to paying the burial expenses, and all that, of the various officials of the Government who have died in its service heretofore, and this seems to be a new departure.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is a sum of money that was paid out, unfortunately for him, not by the dead man, but by one of his friends who conveyed his remains to North Carolina, under the orders of the Department; and naturally it was supposed they would be refunded by the Government, when acting under such orders.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose these gentlemen had not been in the Government service; would you have paid them for their services?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Secretary, I assume, would not have attempted to regulate the matter if it was somebody outside of the service of the Interior Department.

Mr. CANNON. But there is no more reason for entering upon this class of expenditure for an official of the Indian service than for any other of the two hundred or three hundred thousand employees of the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. But this gentleman acted under an order of the Department.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say to the gentleman that I care nothing except as to the fact of establishing a precedent. If there was some way to do it—to pay out this $200, or any other like sum—without establishing such a precedent, there would be little objection to adopting the course the gentleman suggests. I would say, let it go.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman has been as watchful in past years as he has during the past two days, he certainly ought to know whether there is a precedent or not. I admit that I do not know whether there is a precedent or not.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I think it is my duty——

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not criticising the gentleman. I do not want him to so understand.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest the question whether under this precedent the Government would be liable for similar expenses of the 302 inspectors from the Pension Office now in the field? There are also more than 100 post-office inspectors. Every Department, so far as I know, has inspectors. I think my memory is good on this point, and my recollection is that there is not a single precedent upon which to hang these claims. I should prefer to pass around the hat and take up a private collection rather than to establish this precedent and subject the Government to this expenditure.

Mr. SHERMAN. Shall we suspend operations until the gentleman does that? [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, I will contribute, if the gentleman will pass the hat around, rather than involve the Government in this expenditure.

Mr. MEREDITH. How much is the amount involved?

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, something over $100.

Mr. MEREDITH. Oh, I thought it was a hundred millions, or I would have paid it myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I think it is a most dangerous precedent to establish, and I must insist.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to sustain the point of order, unless the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] has something to say.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have nothing further to say than I have said.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer the following amendment.

After line 13, page 55, insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay the claims of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company for transportation of Indian pupils in September and October, 1889, to and from Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, amounting to $990.60, out of the unexpended balance of appropriations for the support of Indian day and industrial schools for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895."

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Clerk to read the following statement——

Mr. CANNON. I suggest that that is not an appropriation for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. DOCKERY. Let that item go into the deficiency bill.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that its proper place, under the rules, if it goes at all, is on the deficiency bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman, but if he does not object to having the statement read, I should be glad to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 19, 1897.

SIR: The Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company, under orders from this office, transported Indian pupils in 1889 to and from Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, the claims for which amount to $990.60.

The claims were allowed by this office and forwarded to the Treasury for settlement; but owing to the fact that the balance of appropriation out of which the claims were payable had been covered into the Treasury under the surplus-fund act, the same were disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

As there is an unexpended balance—$60,000—on the books of the Treasury for the support of Indian day and industrial schools for the fiscal year 1896, I recommend that the claim be paid from said balance, and I inclose draft of an amendment to the Indian bill for 1898, with the request that it be incorporated therein.

Very respectfully,
D. M. BROWNING,
Commissioner.

Hon. JAMES S. SHERMAN,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope after that statement the gentleman will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. CANNON. The item does not belong on this bill. If there is an estimate, it goes on the deficiency bill under the rules of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suspect that the gentleman is literally correct about that; but if it is put in here it will be paid out of an existing appropriation, and will require no new appropriation. The gentleman, of course, does not question the validity of the claim?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. This seems to me a good place to put it.

Mr. CANNON. If it is an audited claim, then it would go in as a matter of right——

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it would go in as a matter of right.

Mr. CANNON. But not in this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Into the deficiency bill.

Mr. CANNON. There is perfect propriety in keeping these bills separate.

Mr. DOCKERY. And the rules so provide.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 55, after line 13, insert the following:

"For completion of the digest now being prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior of the decisions of the courts and the Indian Department, and of the opinions of the Attorney-General relating to Indian Affairs, as authorized by a clause in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, $2,000."

Mr. CANNON. I am compelled to make a point of order on that. It belongs in the sundry civil bill, if it belongs anywhere.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman will reserve it for half a minute, Mr. Chairman, I will be obliged to him. I doubt whether the point is good anyway, because this is simply a continuation of what was begun by last year's Indian appropriation bill. I will say to the gentleman that the Secretary of the Interior then estimated that it would cost $5,000 to do this work. The committee, in its desire to be as economical as possible, called upon the Secretary, who appeared before the subcommittee and made a statement as to these various items. Amongst other things, this item of the digest was discussed, and the Commissioner stated that he would undertake to do the thing, if possible, for $3,000. He has found it impossible to complete the work for that amount, and now recommends an additional appropriation of $3,000 to complete that work.

Mr. CANNON. Is there anything in the estimates?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not in the Book of Estimates; no.

Mr. CANNON. This is a mere communication from the Indian Office, from the head of the Bureau.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in the usual form. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs writes the first letter, and it is submitted to us through the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CANNON. Well, the usual form would be through the Secretary of the Treasury, and then it would come through the Speaker to the appropriate committee and the appropriate bill. I do not think it has any place in the bill; but I will say to my friend that, as he has looked into this matter and we have entered upon the work, I will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have looked into the work; I believe it is a valuable work, and I think that $2,000 is none too much to complete it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw the point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. He does.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 55, after line 13, insert:

"Any person who shall destroy or injure or carry away without authority from the Secretary of the Interior any aboriginal antiquity on the public lands of the United States shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment of not more than ninety days."

Mr. SHERMAN. I will reserve the point of order until I hear some statement from the gentleman in reference to the matter.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. I wish to say that this amendment is offered because of a letter from the Bureau of Ethnology, claiming that the antiquities and ruins of the Western Territories are being despoiled and carried away; that later they will be of great interest and value to this country, and particularly to that Bureau. The matter went to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and, as I understand it, the amendment is offered as a committee amendment, with the instructions of the committee. I am simply acting in the matter in the interest of the Bureau of Ethnology, and I believe that these antiquities will some day be of great value to this country and should be preserved.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Seneca Indians in council, January 3, 1893, duly entered into an agreement with William B. Barker whereby said nation leased to said Barker the Oil Springs, the Cattaraugus, and Allegany reservations, situate in western New York, for the purpose of boring and testing said territory for gas and oil, under certain conditions therein stated, said agreement having been ratified and confirmed by act of Congress; and

Whereas a renewal of said lease having been effected by the assignee of said lessee, the Seneca Nation of Indians, as to the reservation situate in Cattaraugus County, in the State of New York: Therefore

The renewal of the lease of that portion relative to the reservation in Cattaraugus County above recited be, and the same hereby is, in all things ratified, accepted, and confirmed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer the following amendment, which is to simply change the phraseology.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20 and insert in lieu thereof:

"Whereas the assignee of said lease has released to the Seneca Indians certain portions of the lands and reservations included or referred to in said lease, and the council of the Seneca Nation of Indians, by a resolution adopted by said council on or about the 3d day of December, 1896, in all things ratified, confirmed, and extended as to the lessees thereof and as to the assignees thereof the said lease, and empowered and authorized them to fulfill the said lease, the same and to the same extent as the original lessee might or could have done when said lease was executed: Now, therefore

"The action aforesaid of the lessee of said lease and of the council of the Seneca Nation is hereby ratified and confirmed, as the same has been sanctioned and ratified by the said resolution of said Seneca Nation."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter, where funds appropriated in specific terms for a particular object are not sufficient for the object named, any other appropriation, general in its terms, which otherwise would be available may be used to accomplish the object for which the specific appropriation was made.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order upon that paragraph. It changes existing law, and is bad legislation.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I offer an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not contend against the point of order made by the gentleman if he insists on it. If he is subject to conviction, I should like to talk to him, but if he is not, I would not wish to consume the time of the committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. This is a departure from the policy of the Government which has obtained for more than sixty years. For the first forty years in the history of the Government it was a payment made in a lump appropriation. Since that time the policy has grown from year to year to segregate the appropriations and make them specific. I would like to accommodate the gentleman, but must insist upon the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not waste my weak eloquence upon the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter not more than $10,000 shall be paid in any one year for salaries or compensation of employees regularly employed at any one agency, for its conduct and management, and the number and kind of employees at each agency shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and none other shall be employed: Provided, That where two or more Indian agencies have been or may hereafter be consolidated, the expenditure of such consolidated agencies for regular employees shall not exceed $15,000: Provided further, That salaries or compensation of agents, Indians, school employees of every description, and persons temporarily employed, in case of emergency, to prevent loss of life and property, in the erection of buildings, the work of irrigation, and making other permanent improvements, shall not be construed as coming within the limitations fixed by the foregoing paragraphs.

Mr. BRODERICK. I desire to offer the following amendment.

After line 16, on page 57:

"Every Indian agent shall render to the Secretary of the Interior semi-annually a detailed statement under oath of all moneys received by him from all sources for the use of the tribe or for individual members of the tribe, and he shall place on file at the agency a true copy of such statement, which copy shall be open to the inspection of all persons interested: Provided, That all moneys received by the agent and belonging to the tribe shall be remitted by him to the Secretary of the Interior as required by the rules of the Department, and all moneys received for individual Indians shall be promptly paid by the agent to the respective persons entitled thereto."

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point of order against that amendment, but I am prepared to hear an explanation of it.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Chairman, since the grazing lands have been largely taken up in the West, the Indian agents have been leasing the tribal lands upon the reservations and have also been superintending the leasing of the allotted lands. They receive large sums of money every year, and there is no statutory law directing how that money shall be disposed of. There is a rule of the Department which requires that the agent shall remit the money to the Secretary of the Interior, but there is no law or rule requiring that he shall make a detailed statement as to the amount of money that he receives. There is no check anywhere upon the agent; the Department simply receives the money that he sends.

Now, this amendment requires the agent in each case to make a detailed statement under oath of the amount of money received, and to file a copy of the statement with the clerk of the agency, so that anyone who is interested may go and examine that statement and see whether the agent has reported all the money he has received. It is intended simply as a check upon the agent, to compel him to deal honestly in these transactions. The agent receives not only the money derived from the leased lands that are held in common, but in most instances he receives the money derived from the leasing of the allotted lands. That money he pays over or should pay over to the individual Indians, and this amendment will require him to make a report and to place a copy of that report on file, so that anyone can inspect it and ascertain whether he has made an honest return.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the gentleman consider that an additional oath will be a guaranty of the honesty of the Indian agent? The agent performs his duties now, I believe, under an oath of office.

Mr. BRODERICK. Well, it is thought that this will be an additional check. This will require him to make his statement under oath, and if he makes a false statement he can be indicted and convicted. It may not make all Indian agents honest, but it may prevent some from acting dishonestly. I trust the gentleman will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not make the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter not more than $10,000 shall be paid in any one year for salaries or compensation of employees regularly employed at any one agency, for its conduct and management, and the number and kind of employees at each agency shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and none other shall be employed: Provided, That where two or more Indian agencies have been or may hereafter be consolidated, the expenditure of such consolidated agencies for regular employees shall not exceed $15,000: Provided further, That salaries or compensation of agents, Indians, school employees of every description, and persons temporarily employed, in case of emergency, to prevent loss of life and property, in the erection of buildings, the work of irrigation, and making other permanent improvements, shall not be construed as coming within the limitations fixed by the foregoing paragraphs.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, to come in after the paragraph just read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, from year to year, under such regulations as he may prescribe, authorize the Indians residing on any Indian reservation in the State of Minnesota, whether the same has been allotted in severalty or is still unallotted, to fell, cut, remove, sell, or otherwise dispose of the dead timber, standing or fallen, on such reservation, or any part thereof, for the sole benefit of such Indians; and he may also in like manner authorize the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota who have any interest or right in the proceeds derived from the sales of ceded Indian lands, or the timber growing thereon, whereof the fee is still in the United States, to fell, cut, remove, sell, or otherwise dispose of the dead timber, standing or fallen, on such ceded land. But whenever there is reason to believe that such dead timber, in either case, has been killed, burnt, girdled, or otherwise injured for the purpose of securing its sale under this act, then in that case such authority shall not be granted.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will reserve the point of order for a moment till I ask the gentleman whether this is the proposition that was submitted by my colleague and his, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TOWNE], to the Secretary of the Interior and received his approval.

Mr. HARTMAN. It is. I have here the letter of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office approving it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I will not make the point of order against it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I merely wish to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this provision in the bill will very largely promote the growth of dead timber. [Laughter.]

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment at this point.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 57, after line 16, add:

"That all children born of a marriage between a white man and an Indian woman shall have the same rights and privileges to the property of the tribe to which the mother belongs, either by blood or descent, as any other member of the tribe, and no prior act of Congress shall be so construed as to debar such children of such right."

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman wherein this amendment would change the law as it now is?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. In 1888 a law was passed which virtually disinherits the children of an Indian woman who marries a white man, while it does not change the condition of the children of an Indian man who marries a white woman, and I think, and the committee thought, that there was an unjust discrimination. This amendment was authorized by a unanimous vote of the Committee on Indian Affairs and was directed to be placed in the Indian appropriation bill, but by an oversight it was omitted, and I now offer it as an amendment by direction of the committee.

Mr. CANNON. How does it affect property rights?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Only in this way. In 1888, after the act to which I have referred was passed, for three or four years the Department was undecided as to what construction should be placed upon it. About two or three years ago the Department ordered that all children who were the result of a marriage between an Indian woman and a white man be stricken from the rolls and no further payments be made to them; and of course the effect of this amendment, if adopted, will be to restore them to the roll. Since the decision of the Supreme Court in the Cherokee case, holding that the rights of the children of an Indian woman married to a white man are the same as those of an Indian man married to a white woman, I think the House will be fully justified in adopting this amendment. That discrimination against the Indian woman and her children is very unjust. We think that the children of Indian women should be treated the same as the children of Indian men. The effect of this amendment will be simply to put both classes in the same position.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior, under the direction of the President, may use any surplus that may remain in any of the said appropriations herein made for the purchase of subsistence for the several Indian tribes, to an amount not exceeding $25,000 in the aggregate, to supply any subsistence deficiency that may occur: Provided, That funds appropriated to fulfill treaty obligations shall not be used: Provided further, That any diversions which shall be made under authority of this section shall be reported in detail, and the reason therefor, to Congress, at the session of Congress next succeeding such diversion: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior, under the direction of the President, may use any sums appropriated in this act for subsistence, and not absolutely necessary for that purpose, for the purchase of stock cattle for the benefit of the tribe for which such appropriation is made, or for the assistance of such Indians to become farmers, and in aiding such Indians as have taken allotments to build houses and other buildings for residence or improvement of such allotments, and shall report to Congress, at its next session thereafter, an account of his action under this provision.

Mr. CANNON. For temporary purposes, I make the point of order against the matter from line 23, on page 58, down to line 7, page 59, inclusive.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is not new matter. It was in last year's bill.

Mr. CANNON. Then you have rearranged it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think it has been rearranged.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman will find that this is new. Whether it is or not, I should like to ask him a question. Under the treaty with the Sioux Indians we appropriate in round numbers, if I recollect aright, a million dollars for subsistence. The cost of supplies varies. I suppose that this year they can probably be bought for $100,000 or $200,000 less than they could two or three years ago. Now, I will ask the gentleman whether, under this provision, whatever amount may be saved in the purchase of those supplies can be applied toward the purchase of stock cattle, etc.

Mr. SHERMAN. I presume it could.

Mr. CANNON. Well, then, I must insist on the point of order, because our treaties with the Sioux especially are very liberal—I might say extravagant; and when we supply them with subsistence, I think we ought not to go beyond that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman that the language here used would not apply to funds appropriated under treaty stipulations. I think I am safe in saying that a provision of this kind was in last year's bill, although I have not been able to find it.

Mr. CANNON. This language is pretty broad:

May use any sums appropriated in this act for subsistence and not absolutely necessary for that purpose for the purchase of stock cattle, etc.

Mr. SHERMAN. But the gentleman will find in lines 18 and 19, on page 58, this proviso:

That funds appropriated to fulfill treaty obligations shall not be used.

That proviso, it seems to me, would meet the gentleman's point.

Mr. CANNON. No. I think the language here is broader than the gentleman realizes. This section provides in the beginning—

That the Secretary of the Interior, under the direction of the President, may use any surplus that may remain in any of the said appropriations herein made for the purchase of subsistence for the several Indian tribes, to an amount not exceeding $25,000 in the aggregate, to supply any subsistence deficiency that may occur.

That covers one thing. Then we have the proviso:

Provided, That funds appropriated to fulfill treaty obligations shall not be used.

Mr. SHERMAN. If we transfer that proviso to the end of the paragraph, will not that meet the gentleman's objection?

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me not.

Mr. SHERMAN. If that language be transferred in the manner I suggested it would certainly prevent any money appropriated for the fulfillment of treaty obligations from being used for any other purpose. I am perfectly willing that the proviso be transferred to the end of the section, which, it seems to me, would surely cover the point which the gentleman desires to cover.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will transfer the proviso in the manner he suggests, I think that will be satisfactory.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; I ask unanimous consent that the bill be amended so as to strike out, in lines 18 and 19, the words "Provided, That funds appropriated to fulfill treaty obligations shall not be used" and insert the same words after line 7 on page 59.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the transposition asked by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] will be made. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk (resuming the reading of the bill) read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall report annually to Congress, specifically showing the number of employees at each agency, industrial, and boarding school, which are supported in whole or in part out of the appropriations in this act, giving name, when employed, in what capacity employed, male or female, whether white or Indian, amount of compensation paid, and out of what appropriation paid; also the number of employees in the Indian Bureau in Washington, when employed, in what capacity employed, male or female, full name, amount of compensation paid and out of what fund paid, and under what law employed.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 61, after line 18, add "and whether, in the opinion of such Commissioner, any of such employees are unnecessary."

Mr. SHERMAN. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I submit that we should have the opinion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs periodically stated to this House as to whether the services of any of these numerous employees are necessary or not, that being a fact peculiarly within his knowledge. I think the amendment ought to go through, and the gentleman from New York should not reserve a point of order upon it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask that the Clerk report the amendment again.

Mr. DOCKERY. Before that is done, I wish to offer an amendment to the text of the section as it stands; and I will ask my friend from New Jersey [Mr. STEWART] to withhold his amendment for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey will be withheld for the present.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether there is any necessity for requiring the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to report "the number of employees in the Indian Bureau in Washington, when employed, in what capacity employed, male or female, full name, amount of compensation paid and out of what fund paid, and under what law employed." I know that a provision of this kind has been carried in this bill for a number of years; but I think that has been done merely from force of habit, and not because of any public necessity. This provision was doubtless inserted originally when there were employees in that Bureau paid out of a "lump sum." As I understand it, there are now no such employees in that office. Am I correct in that?

Mr. SHERMAN. That, as the gentleman from Missouri knows, does not come under the provisions of this bill. That would be in the legislative bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I know; and that brings me to this point: It was found in examining the working of the Departments a few years since that an old statute existed which required each head of a Department to report to Congress every year the names of the employees and the compensation paid to them. That statute was enacted doubtless at a time early in the history of the Government, when it was the policy of Congress to appropriate for the clerical force in "bulk." But that policy having been abandoned, and specific appropriations being now made and the clerks provided for by classes, of course that requirement, as provided in the latter requirement of section 8 of this bill, only involves the Government in an unnecessary expense. It is a useless expenditure, in my judgment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I doubt not that the gentleman is entirely correct in that.

Mr. SAYERS. Allow me to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he is quite sure that there are no employees in that Bureau except such as are specifically named?

Mr. DOCKERY. My impression, Mr. Chairman, I will say in response to the gentleman from Texas, is that there are none in the Indian Bureau who are paid out of a lump sum.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt of that fact; but, as the gentleman is aware, it is regulated by the legislative appropriation bill, and not in this bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I know; and therefore it seems to me somewhat unnecessary to require a report of the number of employees and the compensation paid them in the Indian Bureau, when the same information is found in the legislative bill, and is open to the examination of all.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. DOCKERY. We repealed in the Fifty-third Congress the general provision requiring the heads of each Department to report the number of employees and the compensation paid them, and I suggest that unless there are employees in the Indian Bureau paid from a "lump sum," the concluding part of this paragraph, after the word "paid," in line 14, down to and including the word "employed," in line 18, be stricken out, for it is an unnecessary expense to prepare and report this information to Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman is undoubtedly correct. Will the gentleman place his suggestion in the form of an amendment?

Mr. DOCKERY. I merely suggest the matter to the gentleman, as to whether it would not be proper to amend the bill in that way, and would be glad to have him offer the amendment himself.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman offers the amendment, I shall not antagonize it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then I offer the amendment, after the word "paid," in line 14, on page 61, to strike out the remainder of the paragraph down to and including the word "employed," in line 18.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless objection be made, the amendment will be regarded as adopted.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I now ask, Mr. Chairman, that my amendment be put to the committee, and that it be so changed as to follow the word "paid" in line 14.

Mr. SHERMAN. I reserve the point of order, Mr. Chairman, until I can hear the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 61, in line 14, after the word "paid," add:
"And whether in the opinion of such Commissioner any of such employees are unnecessary."

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. It is simply to get the opinion of the Commissioner.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the point of order.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the office of Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs are hereby abolished.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I raise the question of order on the paragraph just read, and in order to save time it is my purpose, I will state to the gentleman from New York, to raise the same point of order on the remainder of this section, including the last paragraph, beginning with line 7 and ending with line 11 on page 62, and I suggest, in order to expedite matters, that the point of order be considered as applicable to the entire section, and that the section be considered as having been read.

The remainder of the section is as follows:

That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint from civil life two Indian commissioners, who shall hold their office for the period of four years, unless sooner removed for cause, and shall be from different political parties. He shall also detail an officer of the Army for service in the Indian Bureau, and who, with the two commissioners appointed as above provided, shall be and constitute a board of Indian commissioners. They shall have and exercise such rights and power as are now exercised by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs under the provisions of law.

That each of the commissioners appointed from civil life, as above provided, shall receive an annual compensation of $5,000, and the officer detailed, as provided herein, shall receive the pay of his rank with commutation of quarters.

Mr. SHERMAN. Of course I can not maintain that the point of order is not well taken, Mr. Chairman; but I believe it to be good legislation and in the interest of good government for the management of Indian affairs. I can not maintain, however, that the point of order is not applicable, and therefore, if the gentleman insists on making the point of order, I shall not consume the time of the committee in discussing it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I must insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk (resuming the reading of the bill) read as follows:

SEC. 1. That the following agreement with the Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians in the State of Wyoming is hereby accepted, ratified, and confirmed, viz:

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, that "section 1" on page 66, line 17, should be "section 11." It is a misprint.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve a point of order against the whole of section 11, and also pages 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, and 72.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the point of order is good at all, it is good against all the rest of the bill, and so, perhaps, it would be well to dispose of the point of order before going any further.

Mr. CANNON. There are two agreements.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are two agreements. My idea is that the point of order is not good against the agreements, because they are both of them agreements made in pursuance of prior acts of Congress. They are simply the completion of a chain which was begun by the act of a former Congress. I can not, at this minute, refer to the particular act, but the gentleman will not question that statement, I think. These are agreements made in the ordinary way that Indian agreements are made, pursuant to a statutory regulation that they be submitted to Congress for its approval or disapproval. Last year's Indian bill ratified certain agreements, and, if my recollection serves me aright, certain agreements were also ratified in the appropriation bill passed in the Fifty-third Congress.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I want to say in reply to the gentleman that this legislation on its face is new legislation. It reads as follows:

That the following agreement with the Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians in the State of Wyoming is hereby accepted, ratified, and confirmed.

Then, if the Chair cares to examine the bill, there are seven or eight pages following which contain legislation about almost every conceivable matter. The agreements are set out in full, and then follows the legislation establishing a reservation, and so forth.

Mr. SHERMAN. All according to the agreement.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no. It is legislation independent of the agreement; but this is a general appropriation bill, and this is clearly subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] wish to be heard further on that point?

Mr. SHERMAN. I can say nothing further than I have said, that these agreements are made in pursuance of former acts of Congress, and that therefore, in my judgment, this is not new legislation. It has been the custom of Congress heretofore to ratify such agreements upon appropriation bills. The agreements on their face carry appropriations necessary to be made in order that they be fulfilled if agreed to. Therefore I think they are proper on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] that, in his opinion, while they may be authorized under existing law, they are not germane to an appropriation bill. If the gentleman has some authorities there, the Chair will be glad to hear them.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not looked the matter up especially, but my recollection is that rulings have come from that chair both ways on this same proposition. I can not refer to them at this minute, but that is my impression, that different occupants of the chair, not the present occupant, when such matters have been under consideration, have ruled that they were in order, and that other occupants have ruled that they were not in order.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. It is true that many agreements have been ratified on the Indian appropriation bill, but generally by Senate amendments that can not be gotten rid of on points of order. Of course, if no point of order was made, why, it would be in order to put the Bible or a whole library on this bill or any other bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The opinion of the present occupant of the chair is that these sections are not germane to this appropriation bill, and so the Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. That applies, as I understand it, to the balance of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; that covers the balance of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. No; not the balance of the bill. That goes only up to section 12, as I understand.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it covers both agreements. They are identical. If one goes out on a point of order, the other does. If one remains, the other must, I assume, and I understand that the ruling covers the two agreements.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the present opinion of the Chair. The Chair will say that if there are any rulings that conflict with the present opinion of the Chair, he would be very glad to have any gentleman call his attention to them.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I would ask permission to offer an amendment. I had a sort of understanding, Mr. Chairman, with the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs that when we reached section 12 there would be an opportunity to offer an amendment. I am willing to have section 12 stricken out. I am opposed to the ratification of that treaty with the Turtle Mountain Indians.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then offer your amendment on page 66, after line 16.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I will therefore send up an amendment, to insert the following, on page 66, after line 16.

Insert on page 66, after line 16, the following:

"For support and maintenance of the Turtle Mountain Indians there is hereby appropriated and placed to their credit $10,000, and, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, such parts thereof as he may deem just shall be used to pay expenses incurred by them and their delegation to Washington in attending to the prosecution of their claim for unceded lands, and said $10,000 shall be deducted from any sum hereafter agreed upon or found to be due them for said lands."

Mr. SHERMAN. I reserve the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I will make a short explanation of the amendment. The bill before us proposes to ratify a treaty with the Turtle Mountain Indians and pay them a million dollars for their unceded lands, and the committee appropriates in this bill $50,000 as the first installment. We have stricken out on a point of order the part proposing a ratification of the treaty, to which I have no objection. The bill carries $50,000 for this year's payment. That also goes out on the point of order. But I hope that the House will grant at least $10,000, which is $40,000 less than proposed in the bill, to pay certain expenses that are necessarily involved in the prosecution of this claim, and for subsistence. These Indians are very poor. They have a valid claim. Our Commission that made this purported treaty states in its report that they have as good a right to that land as any tribe of Indians ever had to any lands. There are 9,000,000 acres involved. The Indians have rejected this treaty, claiming that it was not fairly procured. As a matter of fact, none of the chiefs or members of the chiefs' council subscribed to the treaty, and the lawyers that the Indians invited to assist them in the preparation of the treaty were ordered from the reservation at the time the purported treaty was made. On the part of the Indians it was only signed by unofficial and irresponsible Indians; and the tribe in regular council assembled voted to repudiate that treaty. Now, then, I simply ask this small pittance of $10,000 to be advanced to them on a claim where we admit that we are owing them a million dollars. They have rejected the treaty, for the very good reason that if we owe them anything we owe them from $4,000,000 to $10,000,000, and the amendment simply provides to pay them, as alimony, if I may so term it, for expenses of the further prosecution of the claim, the $10,000 to be deducted finally from the amount to be paid them.

Mr. SHERMAN. Are they all squaws?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on the point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I must, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I believe under the unanimous consent granted a while ago that we may return to page 54, to the provision in lines 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] who raised the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington at that point, and afterwards reserved the point, has come to me with the gentleman from Washington who so vigorously contested the point of order made by the gentleman. The gentleman from Massachusetts has been called over to the Senate, and he asked me to present this amendment, which was satisfactory to him and to the gentleman from Washington. I now present the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I will reserve the point of order and hear the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all restrictions existing against the leasing, sale, or conveyance of the allotted lands of the Puyallup Indians, situate in Pierce County, State of Washington, in so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, be, and are hereby, so modified that such leasing, sale, or conveyance may be made, subject in each case, to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CANNON. If it is satisfactory to the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from New York, I will not press the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Then, Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand that the gentleman from North Dakota is not strenuous in his opposition to this particular amendment, but does believe it is not fair to allow this amendment to prevail and not his.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. That is it.

Mr. SHERMAN. In view of that, I will withdraw my point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BAILEY. I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already sustained the point. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] raises the point of order. The Chair will sustain the point of order upon the original text and the amendment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Is that upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN]?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts raised the point of order against the text, and that point is sustained by the Chair. Now an amendment is offered by the gentleman from New York, and the point of order has been raised against that by the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The point of order was withdrawn.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I understood my colleague [Mr. BAILEY] to renew the point of order.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] renew the point of order upon the matter on page 54, from line 14 to line 18, inclusive, as amended by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. BAILEY. I renewed the point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota which the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs had made and had withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that point of order has been sustained, and the question now is upon the amendment agreed upon by the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Washington and offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], regarding the Indians in the State of Washington.

Mr. BAILEY. I understood that the gentleman from North Dakota made the point of order against that, saying that if his amendment could not be entertained he would make the point of order against the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that the gentleman from North Dakota withdrew that point of order.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I renew that point, too.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. The next proposition that was passed over is the one in relation to repairing the bridge over the Big Wind River, in relation to which the gentleman from Wyoming was to furnish the Chair some information.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the Chair that I have not yet been able to find the appropriation under which the bridge was constructed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we pass this item again for the time being and go to the Sioux proposition, which was temporarily passed over the day before yesterday, and which is found on pages 31 and 32. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] objected to the increase of the appropriation for the pay of additional employees at the several agencies for the Sioux, Nebraska, and Dakota Indians from $20,000 to $80,000. In reference to that I desire to say that last year there were at these several agencies 498 employees, at a total expense of $97,880; that there was appropriated for that purpose specifically only $20,000, and that the difference was made up out of the next item, which last year was $1,000,000, whereas now it is only $900,000. The Treasury Department has made a ruling bearing upon this matter, which I will read:

When a specific appropriation has been made for a particular object, a general appropriation which otherwise might have been available can not be legally used for that object.

So that, there being a specific appropriation for this purpose of $20,000, the Department holds that the balance necessary can not be used out of the surplus of the $1,000,000 appropriated. Now, as I before said, this is not really an increase of expenditure, because last year at these agencies, seven in number (at which agencies the affairs of over a hundred thousand Indians are attended to), ninety-seven thousand dollars and some odd hundreds was expended; and, in view of the ruling of the auditing officers, it is absolutely essential that this amount, which has been heretofore $20,000, shall be increased.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion? Would it not be well to pay these employees from the proceeds of the trust fund? It seems to me it can be done.

Mr. SHERMAN. It can not be done, Mr. Chairman, for the reason that under the treaty a certain proportion of the trust fund must be used for specific purposes. For instance, one-half of the trust fund must be expended for educational purposes. I had the treaty here a while ago, containing that provision.

Mr. GAMBLE. I have the treaty here, and with the gentleman's permission, I will read the language:

One-half of such interest shall be so expended for the promotion of industrial and other suitable education among said Indians, and the other half thereof in such manner and for such purpose, including a reasonable cash payment per capita, as, in the judgment of said Secretary, shall from time to time most contribute to the advancement of said Indians in civilization and self-support.

Mr. CANNON. Now, is it not entirely competent to adopt an amendment making this expenditure payable from that "other half" of the trust fund?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not, Mr. Chairman, because the terms of the treaty of 1867 have been confirmed by the act of 1889. I have said "treaty," but agreement would be a better word, for literally, of course there can be no treaty except with an independent nation, and we do not recognize these people as such. These provisions of the agreement were confirmed by Congress as late as 1889 by the act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux nations in Dakota, and by the act of March 2, 1889, which obligates the United States to carry out the specific provisions of that treaty. I think this provision is absolutely essential in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. What are these employees for?

Mr. SHERMAN. I can give the gentleman a detailed statement, if he desires it.

Mr. CANNON. No; a general statement will do. What are they?

Mr. SHERMAN. They are physicians, clerks, farmers, butchers, laborers, stable men—all sorts of employees.

Mr. CANNON. Would not they come under the head of this language in the treaty: "For the promotion of industrial and other suitable education among the said Indians?"

Mr. SHERMAN. Possibly a few of them might, but the majority probably would not.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I hope that when the gentleman comes to prepare this bill next year, or at such time as may be convenient for him, he will take into consideration the idea of utilizing, in the case of these particular Indians, a considerable portion of the trust fund for such purposes. I do not want to embarrass the gentleman's bill in any way, but I have an impression, which almost amounts to a conviction, that the Sioux Indians are getting a great deal of support out of the United States under treaty, and are also getting a good deal otherwise than by treaty, some of which might well be cut off.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman's impression is quite correct. They are getting a good deal. We tried for a time to get along with these same Indians by violating our obligations to them, and as a result there came uprisings and fighting and Indian wars, so it seems after all that we can get along cheaper with them on a peaceful basis than on the basis of war.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that the "warfare" came when we undertook to take the Black Hills country to suit the wishes of the white constituents of my friend over there.

Mr. GAMBLE. Not at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. It came as a result of our failure to carry out our treaty obligations to those Indians.

Mr. GAMBLE. Let me add that the next item of appropriation is absolutely provided for under the treaty of 1877. These Indians ask only what is actually provided for by treaty.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the question to be taken, as I understand, is on the proposition contained in lines 7, 8, and 9 of page 31.

Mr. CANNON. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then that is considered agreed to, as I understand.

Mr. CANNON. That, I believe, finishes the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Except the provision making an increase of $200,000 in reference to schools for the Sioux Indians. That appropriation in this bill is $225,000, as compared with an appropriation of $25,000 for the same purpose in the bill of last year. Prior to last year the appropriation for several successive years was $75,000. As it took some little time to get the machinery connected with those schools in working order, there accumulated from year to year something of a surplus, which last year amounted to somewhere between $50,000 and $75,000. Because of this surplus which had accumulated and which remained unused, we reduced the appropriation last year from $75,000, which it had been the year before, to $25,000, in consequence of which the Indian Office has not had sufficient money with which to run the schools during the last year.

There is a treaty obligation to educate these Indian children. There are upon the Sioux reservations some 8 day schools and 5 boarding schools, at which there were educated last year 750 pupils at the boarding schools and 2,080 at the day schools. In addition to those schools, there have been erected during the last year at the Pine Ridge Agency and at the Rosebud Agency large schools to accommodate over 400 pupils. If we take the number of pupils educated last year at the boarding schools, and assume the expense to be what we have been paying at all our boarding schools, $167 per pupil, the aggregate needed for this purpose, supposing the number of pupils should not increase, will be something over $125,000.

Now, suppose we figure the cost of educating the day-school pupils at $50 apiece, which is but $10 more than we pay the district schools in the States where we educate Indian children. In point of fact, it costs the Government more to educate Indian children at its own day schools, because it gives a better education and because it gives other things than education—it furnishes a lunch, a midday meal for the children. Therefore, adopting $50 per pupil as a basis, which is not too much, the education of the day-school children would amount to $104,000—assuming the number of such pupils would be no greater during the coming year than during the past. So that the actual cost would be in excess of the amount of the appropriation here proposed.

But attention has been called very correctly to the fact that one-half of the interest on treaty funds may be used for educational purposes. This would amount to $75,000. It would require more than this amount to educate even the same number of pupils that we have been educating in the boarding schools. So that, counting the $225,000 which this bill proposes to appropriate, together with the $75,000 which will be derived from the trust funds for the purpose of education, the aggregate, $300,000, is none too much for the purpose contemplated. In fact it is, in my judgment, too small to educate these three or four thousand children of the Sioux Nation which we are under treaty to educate. That is all I have to say on this subject.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me the gentleman from New York has covered the ground, but I do not want his statement to go upon record without a further statement. The great bulk of these children, as I understand him, are instructed at the day schools.

Mr. SHERMAN. Two-thirds of them.

Mr. CANNON. Now, the tuition in those schools amounts to $50 a year for each child?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have figured it at that.

Mr. CANNON. That the gentleman estimates as the cost to the Government for the education of each child?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Now, it seems to me that if the cost of providing instruction in these day schools be $50 for each child, it is rather expensive, especially when it is considered that this expense does not include clothing and subsistence. The children are subsisted and clothed at home.

Mr. SHERMAN. With the money of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. With the money of the United States. But under this bill they get, it seems to me, more food and clothing than they can eat or wear; and in my judgment $50 per pupil for bare tuition is too much.

Mr. SHERMAN. We are under an agreement, I will say to the gentleman, to educate all of these children.

Mr. CANNON. Then the fault is in the administration. For instance, take the schools generally throughout the country—well, let the gentleman make his own calculation about the average expense.

Mr. SHERMAN. Where there is not a very large number of children, as in many of these schools, as my friend knows, they can not be educated at a less price than that. There is hardly any school in the land, unless Illinois is an exception, and I think it is not, where it can be done at a less price. I think the sum is none too large for the service of the Government for the coming year.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no amendment, the paragraph will be considered as adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN. That ends, I believe, the provisions of the bill which were passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. All except the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The Chair will overrule the objection to the amendment, and allow the gentleman to take the sense of the committee as to the propriety of its adoption.

The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 18, page 54, insert:
"For repair of the present bridge across Big Wind River, in the Shoshone Reservation, in the State of Wyoming, the sum of $3,000."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have already addressed the committee on this question, and I do not wish now to detain the House any longer. Gentlemen understand this matter. It is simply an appropriation to repair the Government bridge so that it can be used. It is absolutely of no avail at the present time, and hence the appropriation is necessary.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MONDELL, it was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, that completes the reading of the bill.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from New York in charge of this bill to the phraseology of a part of a subdivision of one of the sections, on page 66, which may possibly be misleading.

It provides, beginning with line 5 on that page—

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay over to the said Chippewa and Munsee or Christian Indians, per capita, the remainder of said funds—

And so on; and then in line 9 it provides that—he may, in his discretion, pay to said Indians, per capita, the sum of $42,560.36.

I will ask if the words "per capita" may not be misleading in that connection? It may be construed to mean that that sum shall be paid to each one of these Indians.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is what it is intended to mean, that the money is to be divided among them per capita.

Mr. TALBERT. I know; but it may be misunderstood. I would ask if the gentleman had not better change the phraseology, so that it will not be misleading?

Mr. SHERMAN. We might put in different words to express the same meaning.

Mr. TALBERT. I only ask the attention of the gentleman to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman's suggestion is, as I understand it, to strike out the words "per capita" in line 10?

Mr. TALBERT. Yes, sir; that will make it more specific and definite. It might be construed, as it now stands, to mean that he is to pay $42,000 and upward to each one of these Indians.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to strike out the words "per capita" in line 10, page 66.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TALBERT. The same amendment should also be made in line 7.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will make the same motion in reference to that line. Strike out the words "per capita" in line 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill as amended to the House with favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOPKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Indian appropriation bill, had directed him to report the same to the House with amendments, and with the recommendation that as so amended it do pass.

The SPEAKER. If there be no demand for a separate vote, the question will be taken on the amendments all together.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report on the bill (S. 1832) to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, and to have it printed in the RECORD; and I give notice that I will call it up to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents a conference report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk began the reading of the conference report.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire the report printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman desires the report printed in the RECORD, and gives notice that he will call it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the request of the gentleman from Vermont so modified as to have the report printed in document form, rather than in the RECORD. It is more convenient for the members. The RECORD type is very small, and if we are to get any benefit from this print, so as to see what the amendments are, we should have the report in bill form.

Mr. POWERS. If we can have it printed by to-morrow morning, I have no objection.

Mr. MCRAE. Oh, that can be done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies his request, and asks that the report be printed in bill form.

Mr. POWERS. The report and the statement.

Mr. TERRY. In the same form in which we had the immigration bill the other day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be acceded to.

There was no objection.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—CORNETT VS. SWANSON, FIFTH DISTRICT, VIRGINIA.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that on Wednesday next I shall call up for consideration the contested-election case of Cornett vs. Swanson, from the Fifth Congressional district of Virginia.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3523) to provide for further proving the genuineness of handwriting by comparison; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bill was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 3523) to provide for further proving the genuineness of handwriting by comparison—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill; and, pending that, I move that general debate be limited to one hour, if that is satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill, and, pending that motion, he moves that general debate be limited to one hour.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9961) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, with Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, under ordinary circumstances I should not occupy the time of the House to make reply to an attack aimed against the loyalty, honor, and integrity of the State of Ohio; but the circumstances surrounding the matter to which I shall directly refer seem to me to justify a deviation from my ordinary course and a reference to a matter of some public concern, not alone to the people of the State of Ohio, without regard to party, but to the people of the entire country.

On last Sunday morning there appeared what purported to be a speech delivered by the ex-governor of the State of Illinois. The speech was delivered at a dinner or celebration of the distinguished services of that gentleman, and in responding to the sentiment in his honor, he proceeded to make sundry and divers remarks reviewing the recent election campaign in the United States, to all of which I answer by silence, excepting as to a single paragraph of that speech. The paragraph is as follows:

> For example, in Ohio there were nearly 200,000 more votes counted in 1896 than there were in 1892, which would indicate an increase of population in that State during four years of very nearly 1,000,000 of people, whereas in reality there has not been an increase of a third of a million in that time. In other words, it is clear that in Ohio over 94,000 fraudulent votes were counted, and, as the returns show that Mr. McKinley had only a majority of 49,000 in that State, it is certain that Mr. Bryan carried Ohio by over 40,000.

The matter of inducement surrounding this special utterance was a broad and sweeping declaration that Bryan had been elected President and had been wrongfully defrauded of his office. Details are given in which other States are assailed, notably his own State, and with some little knowledge of the figures of the Illinois elections for the past three or four years, I do not wonder that a gentleman who led a victorious majority in the city of Chicago very recently, and then was absolutely overwhelmed in almost all the counties and voting precincts of Illinois, should select his own State as an illustration of the quality of unfairness which had been the measure and index of this election.

Ex-Governor Altgeld is the last person, in my judgment, who ought to drag from under the rapidly closing waves of oblivion the history and detail of the recent election in the United States of America. Whatever happened in the State of Ohio was due to a large number of factors, no one of which was more powerful and potential in giving victory to the Republican party in that State than was the existence as a leader of the Democratic party of Governor Altgeld, of Illinois. There is no place in all the broad domain of that magnificent State where appeals were made to the conscience and judgment, decency and patriotism, and law-abiding sentiment in the State of Ohio where the least difficulty was experienced in creating great interest by giving assurance of the defeat, then hoped for, of Altgeld. The most popular speeches were always decorated with the awful example of the then governor of the State of Illinois.

I was present at more than one vast assemblage of the people of Illinois during the campaign, and when all else failed to arouse an outburst of tremendous enthusiasm it always followed the declaration that one of the things that we were aiming at was to purge the fair record of Illinois of the name in office of Altgeld. He it was who in the Chicago convention demanded, as we all understood—as was published and declared everywhere—the introduction of those planks of the platform that arrayed hundreds of thousands of Democrats, independent of the question of the tariff and of the currency, against the Democratic party. Why, it is not very strange, Mr. Chairman, that that gentleman should feel some degree of responsibility for the results and some degree of soreness as he looks back over the miserable record in politics which he himself has made.

The people of the State of Ohio are thus arraigned, and my speech shall be directed to a vindication of the people of Ohio, without regard to party. There has been no dishonest election in the State of Ohio for a great many years. The condition of the law of that State and its administration, and the absolute immunity of the people there from a foul ballot box, are due to the joint efforts of the leading men of both political parties. The last trouble that we had was that which related to certain poll-book difficulties in the city of Columbus and in the city of Cincinnati. No party justified the wrongs that took place there. They were simply vulgar, contemptible, penitentiary offenses that were committed, and the prosecuting officers, without regard to party, pursued every man implicated. Some of them were arrested and tried, others fled from the State, others removed out of the State, and there is nothing left of those old, ancient, disreputable matters, long since gone by, except a treasury of recollections, in which all the facts and incidents are treasured up ready for use if the men who perpetrated these crimes shall ever again dare to become prominent in the politics of the State of Ohio. They are well known and thoroughly marked, distinctly condemned by the men of all parties, justified by nobody, and the wrongs were righted and no harm was done.

Shortly after that a new election law was passed in the State of Ohio. It was passed by the joint cooperation of Democrats and Republicans. The ballot is the Australian ballot. The system is the best developed, probably, of the study of pure elections that we have had in any of the States, and at least as good as that of any State in the Union. There was some objection to the Australian ballot because of certain unnecessary complications in regard to it. They were thoroughly and promptly rectified by the cooperation of men of all parties. The ballot is a blanket ballot, as it is called, upon which the ticket of each party is printed. We have progressed beyond any other State in the Union in the direction of suppressing frauds in the nomination of candidates by putting a provision into our statute, the first of any State in the Union, now being rapidly followed by the State of Indiana and possibly other States, forbidding the putting of the name of any one man upon any two ballots contained in the blanket ballot. This has operated in the greatest degree in the purification of the matter of nominations and in getting rid of the trading incident to that sort of business.

Now, let me give to gentlemen who have done me the honor to listen a simple outline of our system. In the first place, we have at the capital the secretary of state, who is chief of the board of elections. The law directs him to appoint four men in every county of the State, two of the men to belong to one of the leading two parties and two to another. So that the practical operation of it in Ohio is to give two Republicans and two Democrats. What may happen next year I do not know. The complication that may possibly grow out of the divided Democratic party will probably be solved by the adoption of the decision that the party polling the greatest number of votes will be entitled to have the election board. Now, these four election officers, two Democrats and two Republicans, are appointed upon the recommendation of the committees of the two parties. That is to say, the county committee of the Republican party names two men, the county committee of the Democratic party names two men, and they are appointed, unless there is some objection made as to their fitness or integrity, or something of that character.

Now, you will see the propriety of this feature of our statute. The Democratic committee knows who the Republican committee has recommended, and vice versa; and if there is a dishonest man recommended they have their right of protest. Then it is made the duty of the secretary of state, as the head of this board, to appoint these four men. Now these four men elect a clerk; and that clerk is usually elected from outside of the board. But there can not be a very bad man elected clerk, because he has to have either two Republican votes and one Democratic vote or else he must have one Republican vote and two Democratic votes. Now, this board, thus constituted, appoints in every voting place in the county four judges, two to be Democrats and two to be Republicans; and, in that same connection, each one of these judges must have at least one vote of the opposite party from which he belongs. Then there is one Democratic clerk and one Republican clerk; and that board, thus constituted, under a law that limits the voters of a precinct to a small number, carries on the election.

There are six members of that board. They know everybody in the district. We have a registration law which applies to the cities, and there the registration boards—that is, the boards of election—are created in the same manner as are the county boards of election, and there also the machinery of registration is absolutely in the hands of both parties equally balanced, so that there can be no election of even a minor officer and no action by any board that is not consented to by at least one of the minority party. That is our system in the State of Ohio. It has worked well. There are divers restrictions in regard to the distance from the polls that everybody is compelled to keep, and then, under the Australian ballot law, step by step various amendments and improvements have come in, until, I say here, in the presence of distinguished Democrats of my own State, that the law has reached substantially perfection in administration.

Now, we find an ex-governor of a great State, in a public speech, apparently without any knowledge of this entire system or of any prominent part of it to which I have referred, making a wholesale charge of corruption and dishonesty and dishonor against the State, and in doing that he involves necessarily an equal number of Democrats with an equal number of Republicans; for there can be no dishonesty either in the registration, in the voting, in the machinery of the election, or in the certification of the returns, that is not participated in by men of both parties. Now, what has this ready maligner of other people to go upon when he makes this false charge that has been heralded all over the United States, and is being constantly repeated in the press when somebody happens to want to vilify a great State? What has he to go upon? A largely increased vote in the State of Ohio.

Well, Mr. Chairman, there was at the last election an enormously large increase of the vote in the United States of America. I have not the precise figures, but I think my recollection is not wrong when I say that the total increase in the vote was nearly two millions above any vote ever before cast for a President of the United States. I hold in my hand and will incorporate in my remarks a statement of the vote of Ohio from 1803, when she became a State, down to 1896, when she voted to put at end, for the time being at least, to the domination in politics of the party of the gentleman who was recently governor of Illinois. Among other things shown by that table is the fact that the vote of Ohio has fluctuated greatly. In the first place, going back only to 1888, the Republican vote was 416,054 and the Democratic vote was 396,455. The Democratic vote fell off in the next year to 379,423, and in the next year to 352,579. The next year it rallied to 365,228, and in 1892 it was 404,115. Then it fell off to 352,347 in the election of 1893, and in the election of 1894 the Democratic vote of Ohio was 276,902. In 1895 it was 334,519, and in 1896 it ran up to 473,462; an increase over the vote of 1894 of 196,560. That increase, remember, is in the Democratic vote alone.

The Republican vote of Ohio has also fluctuated very much along the same lines. We were beaten in 1889. We had but 363,548 votes in 1890 against 352,579 for the Democrats. We had but 386,739 in 1891 against 365,228 for the Democrats, and in 1892, in the Presidential election of that year, the Republican vote was 405,187 and the Democratic vote 404,115. We elected 22 electors and lost 1, the 22 being elected by only 1,072 plurality. In 1893 we rallied to 433,342. In 1894 we fell off to 413,988. In 1895, in the great impetus of that election, the Republican vote was 427,141, and last year it was 525,000, an increase over the vote of 1892 of 119,813, while the Democratic vote of that year showed an increase over the Democratic vote in 1894 of 196,560. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it will be seen that whatever in the Ohio election is startling, whatever there is that needs explanation, whatever there is that the comprehension of a public and professional slanderer can not understand, is to be found rather in the extraordinary increase of the Democratic vote in the State of Ohio than in the increase of the Republican vote.

I hold in my hand a statement of the vote of 1896 in the State of Ohio by counties, and there is not a county in the State which has increased its vote at such a rate as the county which is the home of my distinguished friend, Mr. LAYTON. His county gave 4,899 votes last year for the Democratic ticket, while in 1895 it gave but 3,800 votes. In that little population there was an increase in the vote of over 28 per cent. In the county in which I live—and I think I may say, without arrogating very much to myself, that there could not get into the ballot boxes of my county a very large influx of fraudulent votes—in my county in 1895 there were 1,641 Democratic votes; in 1896 there were 3,256; an increase of 1,615 over the Democratic vote of 1895. That was the gain in the county in which I live; and let me say now for the county of Auglaize, where my Democratic friend, Mr. LAYTON, lives, and for the county where I live, that I do not believe there was one fraudulent vote cast, in the ordinary acceptation of that term. It may be that somebody voted who was not, under a strict construction of the law, entitled to vote. That happens in all voting places throughout the country. But that there was systematically or deliberately a vote cast that was not an honest vote, I deny absolutely.

What has been the matter, therefore, in Ohio? Well, I can tell you what has been the matter with the vote, so far as the Democratic party has been concerned. The same incidents, the same facts, the same elements that have driven the masses of the voters of the Democratic party away from the present Administration have had their effect in the State of Ohio; and inasmuch as the State was hopelessly Republican, thousands of Democrats have stayed at home. They would not go to the election and vote the Republican ticket, and they cared nothing about the success of the Democratic ticket. So one year ago, when Governor Bushnell was a candidate for governor, and one of the most popular Democrats in the State—a gentleman named in connection with the Presidential nomination; I refer to Governor Campbell—was his opponent; the latter was able to rally only 334,519 voters, while this year the Democratic candidate for President, as he was accepted in Ohio, was able to rally 473,462 voters. Why? Because the Democrats waked up. It was in my judgment an unfortunate awakening. [Laughter.] That is to say, the sound of the trumpet that called them from the tomb which they had occupied for so long a time was music that I certainly would not have believed they would have responded to. But they did respond; they responded with wonderful alacrity. And the fraud that appears to the benighted observation of the gentleman who has thus assailed the State of Ohio has come, in a large part at least, from the increased vote of the Democratic party itself.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Did any leading Democrats or leading Democratic papers of the State of Ohio complain that there had been fraud or illegality in the last election?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I was coming to that. I want now to state that the population of Ohio has very largely increased; and inasmuch as I have pointed out the county of Auglaize, where my friend and colleague on this floor [Mr. LAYTON] lives, I want to say that not only his county, but in all the counties of his Congressional district, where the great percentage of this increase took place, there has been an increase of population growing out of the development of the oil and natural-gas region in that section of Ohio.

Mr. LACEY. How much of this Democratic increase came from the Populist vote by reason of the fusion?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will come to that. I hold in my hand a statement from the Chicago Tribune, which is quite as misleading, although not malicious, as is the statement of Governor Altgeld. Referring to what Altgeld has said, this paper proceeds to say that "the Republicans of Ohio made a very bad and unsuccessful campaign this year, inasmuch as we had 137,000 votes on one occasion, and 92,000 on another occasion, and this year fell away down to 52,000." This is one of the misleading statements that have tended in part to palliate the statement made by Altgeld. Now, the fact about it is that in 1895, when Governor Bushnell carried the State, as we call it, by 92,622 plurality, he carried the State by only 16,816 majority. Fifty-two thousand six hundred and seventy-five votes were polled for one Coxey. Mr. Chairman, I regret to have to make that acknowledgment. [Laughter.] But in a voting population of a million that is not so very bad. And I am proud to say that in the year 1896, to the best of my knowledge and belief, not five of those voters voted for anybody but William J. Bryan. There was an absolute fusion of those elements.

Now, again, there were 21,264 Prohibitionists. This year they mustered 5,469; nearly all of the balance of them voted for Bryan.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like to occupy five minutes more.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman is aware that general debate is limited to one hour, but I yield him five minutes more.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, if my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] wishes to propound any question——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman state the vote per capita in 1892 and 1896 out in Ohio?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman tell me what the per capita in Ohio is?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Neither do I. [Laughter.] We have not had a census since 1890.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman answer upon the census of 1890?

Mr. GROSVENOR. We have passed seven years away from 1890; we have been growing with great rapidity.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Had not Ohio a census in 1895?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; unfortunately not. We guess, though, fearfully. [Laughter.]

So, Mr. Chairman, instead of the Republican party having made a bad campaign, as alleged, we have lifted the majority of 16,816 up to 51,538 by a superior organization and an absolutely perfect fusion in the State. That was all I desired to say.

I might go a little further and refer to some of the personal characteristics of the gentleman to whom I have alluded, but I have nothing to do with that. My purpose was simply to vindicate the great State in which I live, and in which I have such profound pride, and to vindicate at the same time the honor, the wisdom, the integrity, and the shrewdness of the Democratic party in my State.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I hope my colleague will not forget to state that that charge is not seconded by any reputable paper in Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I thank my colleague for reminding me. I had temporarily forgotten it. It is only necessary to state, Mr. Chairman, that up to this time no reputable Democrat, nor has any Democratic newspaper in Ohio, so far as I have ever seen, repeated the language that Altgeld has repeated. No newspaper of any party has given the slightest countenance to the vicious falsehood.

So, Mr. Chairman, I am replying to nothing that comes from men who have knowledge of the facts, but only to that which comes from a man who hurls a slander upon the people of a great State without knowledge of what he is talking about. [Applause.]

* From 1803 to 1850 the secretary of state was elected by the general assembly.

† The Democratic party of to-day claims lineal descent from the first Republican party, with President Jefferson as its founder. Authorities differ as to the date when the party dropped the name Republican and assumed that of Democrat, it being ascribed to various dates between 1805 and 1820.

‡ Political parties were disorganized at the time of the election of John Q. Adams. He claimed to be a Republican as Jefferson, but his doctrines were decidedly Federalistic. The opposition to his Administration took the name of Democrat and elected Jackson President in 1828.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished mathematician from Ohio, General GROSVENOR, has succeeded in "stealing some of the thunder" with which I expected to make a reply on this occasion to the slanders of Altgeld. I will only take a few moments of the time of the House to supplement what he has so well said.

I also have prepared a table giving a list of election returns from the State of Ohio since the Republican party put in nomination its first candidate for office, Salmon P. Chase, in 1855. In this table I show the total votes cast at each election; the increase or decrease year by year over the previous year's vote; the Republican plurality at each election, or the Democratic plurality, as the case may be; the Republican majority over all opposing candidates, and the opposition majority where it exceeds the Republican vote.

There is one feature which this table shows clearly, and to which I desire to call the attention of the committee in a general way, which has been alluded to by my colleague, General GROSVENOR,

Commencing with the year 1885 and running down to the year 1892, there was no election, either for governor, secretary of state, or President of the United States, in which the Republican party in the State of Ohio was not in the minority. These minorities ran from 9,000, which was the minority which Harrison received in 1888, up to 39,790, which was the amount of the majority of the opposition to the Republican candidate in 1892. I call attention to that fact to show what has taken place in Ohio since 1892. Commencing with the year 1893 William McKinley, as governor, had a plurality of 80,995 votes, and a clear majority of 31,080, as against 39,790 that the opposition exceeded the Republican majority in 1892. In 1894 the Republican majority had increased to 48,857. In 1895 Governor Bushnell received a plurality of 92,622 votes, and yet his majority was only 7,286. But in 1889, while Major McKinley had a plurality of only 47,497, yet he had a majority of 43,614.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly.

Mr. HULL. Was the difference between the plurality which the gentleman has named and the majority the extent of the gold Democratic vote in Ohio?

Mr. BROMWELL. It was the Democratic vote and the coalition of all the elements with the gold Democratic party which had combined against the Republican ticket.

Mr. HULL. But the gentleman does not catch my question. The plurality was some 47,000?

Mr. BROMWELL. Yes; 47,497.

Mr. HULL. And the majority about 43,000?

Mr. BROMWELL. Yes; 43,614.

Mr. HULL. Now, what I wish to know is as to the difference between the majority and plurality. Did that measure the gold Democratic votes for their candidates?

Mr. BROMWELL. No; not entirely. There were others.

I call attention to these figures to show that Mr. McKinley, in the election in Ohio for President, has achieved as great a victory as was ever achieved by any Republican candidate, and the 137,000 that was given Taylor for secretary of state does not represent as much of a victory as the 43,000 majority given to Major McKinley at the last election. Now, Altgeld claims that because Ohio had increased its vote to over a million there were necessarily over 100,000 fraudulent votes cast. My colleague [Mr. GROSVENOR], in alluding to this, justly said the vote of the entire United States has increased. As a matter of fact, every State in this country, with the exception of seven, did increase its vote, and many of the States in far greater ratio than the vote of the State of Ohio was increased.

I have a second table, showing the popular vote for President in 1892, the vote in 1896, the increase or decrease in the vote of each State, and the per cent of increase or decrease. I shall not read all of these, but from this list I have taken seventeen, so as to include Ohio, and I will read to you the percentage of increase in the votes of these seventeen States, so that you may apply Mr. Altgeld's theory that because the vote of Ohio increased over 100,000, necessarily there must have been fraud in the election. Gentlemen of the States whose names I read can take it home to themselves, and see whether the increase in the votes of their States means, according to the same logic, a fraudulent vote.

I find that the vote of Colorado in 1892 was 93,842. In 1896 it was 189,687, an increase of 95,845, or, on the face of the returns, an increase of over 102 per cent. I have made inquiries from one of the Representatives of that State in this House as to what proportion of that increased vote was due to the female vote that was cast in this last election and was not cast in 1892. He informed me that about one-third of it was due to that cause. Allowing that one-third of that vote was due to the female suffrage of Colorado in 1896, it still leaves Colorado with an increase of over 31 per cent. The second State in the list is Idaho, which in 1892 cast 19,407 votes. In 1896 it cast 26,695 votes, an increase of 37.5 per cent. Now, without going into the details of all these votes, I will read you a list of these nineteen States, with the per cent of increase of votes.

Idaho, 37.5 per cent; Virginia, 35 per cent; Mississippi, 33.6 per cent; North Dakota, 31.2 per cent; Florida, 31 per cent; Colorado, 31 per cent; Kentucky, 30.8 per cent; Texas, 28.9 per cent; Minnesota, 27.8 per cent; Wyoming, 24.9 per cent; Illinois, 24.9 per cent; Missouri, 24.6 per cent; Oregon, 24 per cent; Wisconsin, 20.3 per cent; Tennessee, 19.6 per cent; Pennsylvania, 19.1 per cent; and, finally, Ohio, 18.7 per cent.

Now, if the reasoning of Mr. Altgeld is to hold good that because Ohio's increase was 18.7 per cent there were 100,000 fraudulent votes cast in the State of Ohio, what have you gentlemen whose States were carried by Bryan to say about them, with Virginia gaining 35 per cent, and Mississippi gaining 33.6 per cent, and Florida gaining 31 per cent, and so on down the line?

Now, in regard to the fluctuation in the vote of Ohio, we have our off years and we have our years when we turn out and vote.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Do you propose to hold the other side of the House responsible for what Governor Altgeld said?

Mr. BROMWELL. I do not; and I do not believe that one of them indorses what he has to say.

To illustrate these extreme fluctuations in the Ohio vote, I wish to call attention to the difference between the vote the year following a Presidential election and the vote in the following Presidential election, commencing with 1857 and running down to the present time. I shall not read this in full, but ask to have it printed in the RECORD. Between 1857 and 1860 there was a difference of 103,000 votes. That was away back before the war, when the population of Ohio was not much more than half what it is now. Between 1861 and 1864 there was a difference of 112,000 votes; between 1865 and 1868, a difference of 101,000; between 1869 and 1872, a difference of 64,000; between 1873 and 1876, a difference of 211,000, and in following years differences of 170,000, 163,000, and 173,000 are common variations in the vote of Ohio.

These facts also go to show whether or not Major McKinley carried the Republican vote of Ohio as it was expected he would do. Bryan's vote over Cleveland was only 74,432. Major McKinley's vote over Harrison was 122,758.

Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to print these tables in the RECORD as part of my remarks, only offering them as supplementary to the remarks made by my colleague, Mr. GROSVENOR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to print certain tables in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following extract from an editorial in the Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune is also submitted in this connection to show that Mr. Altgeld and others of his party, instead of criticising the legitimate increase in the vote of other States which gave McKinley his majorities, might well have addressed himself to a criticism of the inequality existing between the electoral votes of the silver States and of the four great sound-money States, New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Ohio:

FIGURES WORTH STUDY.

The total popular vote cast at the recent election was 13,818,365, or a gain of no less than 1,708,355 over the 12,110,636 votes cast in 1892.

Of this phenomenal and hitherto unparalleled number of electors, the four preeminently great States of New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Ohio furnished the following:

	Vote.	Electoral vote.
New York	1,358,485	36
Pennsylvania	1,193,508	32
Illinois	1,088,631	24
Total	4,660,731	115

From this table it will be seen that these 4 States alone cast considerably more than one-third of the total vote of the nation, and at that ratio they are justly entitled to at least one-third of the total electoral vote of 447, which would be 149. They have, however, only 115 votes in the electoral college, or 32 less than the number to which their proportion of the total vote shows them to be entitled. Ohio alone cast 7.4 per cent of the total vote of the country, thus fairly entitling her to the same proportion of the electoral college, or 33 electoral votes. Yet she is only allowed 23, which is 10 less than the number her voting strength should give her.

The total vote cast for the Republican ticket was 7,078,461, and to this aggregate the four States here named contributed as follows:

New York	795,271
Pennsylvania	728,300
Illinois	607,130

From these figures it is also seen that this quartet of leaders among the Commonwealths of the Union gave not only one-third of the total Republican vote of the country, but 891,600 votes in excess of that proportion.

These are the only States which cast over 1,000,000 votes, and of the other States the one which approached the nearest to that figure was Missouri, with 674,018, or 346,089 votes less than were given in Ohio. Nor did any other State than these four cast more than half a million votes for the Republican ticket. Next to Ohio in the list in that respect comes Indiana, with 323,754 Republican ballots, which is less by 202,235 than the 525,989 given by this State.

Coming now to the consideration of some points of interest disclosed by an analysis of the free-silver Democratic vote, the following table, showing the total vote cast and the electoral college representation of these seventeen States carried by Bryan, will be of exceptional interest:

State.	Total vote.	Electoral vote.
Nevada	10,285	3
Florida	46,620	4
Idaho	29,697	3
Louisiana	101,046	8
Mississippi	69,513	9
Montana	54,170	3
South Carolina	68,938	9
South Dakota	82,309	4
Utah	80,514	3
Washington	93,583	4
Wyoming	21,066	3
Alabama	194,574	11
Arkansas	149,347	8
Georgia	157,230	13
Virginia	294,956	12
North Carolina	329,710	11
Tennessee	321,998	12
Total	2,105,636	120

Here, then, we have 17 States which give Bryan 120 electoral votes on a total vote of 2,105,636, though New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Ohio, with their 4,660,731 ballots, have an electoral college strength of but 115 votes. Placed in a table for better comparison, the situation is this:

	Total vote.	Electoral vote.
4 Republican States	4,660,731	115
17 Democratic States	2,105,636	120

Obviously the States which are given 120 electoral votes on a total vote of 2,105,636, while 4 other States can only cast 115 electoral votes on a popular vote of 4,660,731, have a relative strength in the electoral college out of all proportion to that which they deserve. Ohio cast almost half as many votes as the 17 States above named, and with an electoral representation in proportion she should have 57 or 58 votes in the electoral college, whereas she is given but 23.

Similar comparisons could be made by the score, all demonstrating that under the present system such States as Ohio are deprived of the electoral strength to which they are entitled. For instance, let us consider the following table:

	Total vote.	Electoral vote.
Nevada	10,285	3
Florida	46,620	4
Mississippi	69,513	9

Here we have 5 States carried by Bryan at the recent election whose aggregate vote was but 229,873, yet they have 23 electoral votes, the identical number allotted to Ohio. These 5 States have 1 electoral vote to every 10,000 popular votes cast. At the same rate Ohio should have 102 electoral votes instead of 23.

It is inevitable that in the not distant future this entire matter of the relative strength of the States, both in Congress and in the electoral college, must be taken up and readjusted upon fair and equitable lines.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Ohio having been clearly vindicated, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. I do not care to go into the question of the Ohio election or the Ohio population. The discussion has taken a wide range, which seems to make appropriate a little wider range. Therefore I shall claim the indulgence of the House on another branch. I might remark in passing that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] who last addressed the committee tried to devote himself to facts and figures as answer to some remarks of Governor Altgeld. The gentleman from the same State who preceded him [Mr. GROSVENOR] seemed to conclude that, the governor being absent and having no opportunity to reply to him, general, wholesale declamation upon the subject would be ample. As to the controversy between the late governor of the State of Illinois and the various distinguished Representatives of the State of Ohio, I have nothing to say. But I find in an editorial of the Post of this city, of the 20th of last November, some interesting remarks upon the election, a portion of which I will read:

The total population of Ohio, as estimated last year by the secretary of state, based upon the calculated increase over the census of 1890, is less than 4,000,000—to be specific, 3,825,000. The generally accepted theory, verified by statistics without number, is that the voters are to the population of any given State as 1 to 5. By that well-established rule the total vote of Ohio should have been 765,000. Ohio is a great State, however, for in 1895 it developed a total vote of 840,506—nearly 100,000 more than she was entitled to under the one-fifth rule. The campaign was tremendously exciting. It brought out, as they said at the time, every voter in the State. Some skeptical persons suggested, in fact, that it brought out a great many thousands of voters from other States. But this year the wonder grows. This year Ohio, responding to the clarion call of necessity, produces 259,494 more voters than it produced in 1895, when it astonished the world by its achievements in the voting line. Where in the name of reason did these 259,494 extra voters come from? Did Ohio increase in population 1,000,000 within a year, or does Ohio depart from the 1 to 5 rule, and show, instead of that, 1 to 3½ as the proportion of her voters to her population?

Now, it may possibly be said in extenuation of the offense of Governor Altgeld, if it be an offense, that he might have read some such things as this in the newspapers. It may be, too, that the horrible example of Governor Altgeld, held up to scorn by the gentleman from the Athens district of Ohio, may have been productive, not only of the majority for Mr. McKinley, but also of the tremendous outpouring of the masses of both parties who registered their judgment and their will upon the subjects at issue. I know not how that is.

The gentleman [Mr. GROSVENOR] seems to believe that Altgeld made the platform adopted at Chicago last July. I have always been of the opinion that the representatives of the great Democratic party of this country made that platform, and in it expressed their views and those of a mighty constituency.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will permit, I did not say that Governor Altgeld made the platform. I said he demanded the introduction of certain planks of the platform; and if that is not true, some of the newspapers of Chicago misrepresented him.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The gentleman is probably just as far off in his way of putting it now as he was before. The assemblage gathered in Chicago upon that occasion was not one to approach with "demands." The only demand with that body of representatives was the demand, as they understood it, of their constituents. That was not a convention to be dominated by a single man. It was not a convention of which any man having any knowledge of it would feel that he could make a demand; it was not a convention that would respect the demand of any particular man or set of men. It was a convention gathered there to voice the dominent sentiment of a great party; and I am one of those who believe that it did voice it, voiced it thoroughly; and those who were not willing to be bound by that voice, those who did not believe in the platform there uttered, were left to take, as some of them did take, their votes and their influence outside of that party.

But the gentleman says Governor Altgeld demanded that this or that should go into the platform, and that this or that did, therefore, go into the platform. That certainly can not be said by anyone who has any knowledge of that assemblage. No man can say that who understood the purpose which characterized the men assembled there, who had any knowledge of the deep conviction that abided and yet abides in the hearts and in the souls of those back of them, those whom they represented. That is a misunderstanding of the whole matter. But I will not discuss that. Perhaps at some other time, perhaps in some other arena, possibly even in this arena on some other day, the gentleman lately governor of the State of Illinois may have an equal opportunity with the statesman of the Athens district of Ohio to discuss the question of what is the relative worth or the relative worthlessness of the criticism of the one or the other.

There is this thing about Governor Altgeld which friend and foe must admit and acknowledge—that he is open and bold, and that he makes his charges where there are people ready to meet them and to refute them, if they can; that he has at least the courage of his convictions. And, although overwhelmed with defeat as his party was in his State in the last election, he has behind him now in that State and in this nation, as the able and fearless exponent of principles dear to the hearts of the American people, millions of men who believe that he is honest and right, and who are grieved at his temporary political overthrow.

I was about to direct my attention to another matter. I make these remarks merely incidentally, as they are suggested by the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] who first addressed the committee. There was issued from the Department of Agriculture recently one of those peculiar educational treatises which have so frequently emanated from that Department under its present management. This is The Farmers' Interest in Finance, a document bearing date of December 4, 1896, and with which we are recently favored, through the franking privilege. It purports to show that the people who supported Mr. Bryan in the last contest were comparatively poor in this world's goods, and ignorant. The gentleman who for the time being presides over the Department of Agriculture gives to his subordinate this direction for the preparation of this document:

In preparing this "useful information on subjects connected with agriculture," carefully collate from the work of the last national census such facts as may serve to bring out plainly the population, the agricultural wealth, and the intelligence, the manufacturing interests, and the investments of each State which at the recent election declared for the free coinage of silver at 16 to 1 or for the present gold standard.

In the pamphlet it is further stated:

The comparison in respect to illiteracy is confined to native whites, thus excluding the most illiterate classes of the population—the colored in the free-silver territory and the foreign born in the gold-standard territory.

Further on the pamphleteer says:

The gold-standard list includes one State—Kentucky—whose vote was so nearly an even balance that its decided position in either rank will perhaps be questioned. The inquiry may, therefore, arise, how the gold-standard average would be altered by omission of that State.

In this pamphlet of fifteen pages are some tables, designed to show, from the peculiar standpoint of the gentleman in charge of the Department of Agriculture, that illiteracy prevailed where the free-silver sentiment was largely in evidence, and that intelligence was the rule where the gold standard received the support of the largest number of the voters; that the savings were comparatively small where the free-silver sentiment was strong, and the people there comparatively poor, while in the regions where the gold standard was upheld by the votes of the people the savings were comparatively large and the people comparatively wealthy.

I suppose—if not known to Secretary Morton, it is known to everybody here—whatever else may be true about the late Presidential contest, it is beyond question that a large majority of the farmers of the United States, wisely or unwisely, rightfully or wrongfully, gave their support to the free-silver candidate for President, William Jennings Bryan. I suppose it is a matter of general information outside of that Department that in this large majority of the agricultural portion of the people of the United States there certainly was to be found a fair representation, not to say a marked predominance, of the intelligence of that great body of our useful citizens, the farming community. Poor many of them may be, but honest manhood is yet to be esteemed above filthy lucre.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what provocation or what excuse can be found for this man, at the head of a Department of this Government, supposed to be specially interested in the concerns of the agriculturists, supposed to understand something about their interests and their condition, what provocation, what excuse can be found for this man to scatter abroad over the land, by an abuse of the printing and franking privilege, pamphlets which are a libel upon the population that he is supposed peculiarly to serve? That I can not imagine. As to which party was right or which party was wrong, that is a question for debate, and we fear not the issue. But why such a pamphlet should be put out by this Department, a travesty upon facts which are well known to the people generally—why such a pamphlet should be issued, with the apparent view of bringing ridicule upon communities a majority of whom voted for Mr. Bryan and were defeated in the late election, why that should be done no one can imagine unless he can fathom the remarkable mind of the gentleman who presides over the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Oh, yes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The author of that pamphlet is not a Republican.

Mr. DE ARMOND. No, sir.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. So that we are not responsible for him.

Mr. DE ARMOND. You are not responsible for him, and I can well understand that you are very much gratified that you are not responsible for him. [Laughter and applause.]

Again, Mr. Chairman, poor Kentucky has to be brought in here for a special slap. "The gold standard list includes one State, Kentucky, whose vote was so nearly an even balance that its position in either rank will perhaps be questioned." Kentucky, Democratic for generations, and finally brought into the other column by a scratch—Kentucky is to be ridiculed by this man from out in Nebraska, whose State went against his side, because, he says, illiteracy in Kentucky is considerable; his conclusion from his premises being, I suppose, that if illiteracy had prevailed there to a lesser extent the gold standard would have prevailed to a larger extent.

Mr. CLARDY. If the gentleman will take out 60,000 ignorant negro votes cast there, Kentucky's vote will be all right.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Another remarkable thing is this, that this gentleman, confining his investigations and his comparisons to the white population, loses sight of a most important fact. I suppose he knew—it may be that he never knew it, for some men never know facts that all other men do know [laughter] but he ought to know—that in States like Kentucky, aye, and in States like Ohio, the majority in favor of the gold standard could well be ascribed to the colored population, whose votes were cast for that ticket. This man, making his comparisons within the ranks of the Caucasians, loses sight entirely of the fact that if the suffrage had been confined to them, if only people of our own race and lineage had voted at the last election, the decision would have been the other way.

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, by unanimous consent, the time of Mr. DE ARMOND was extended ten minutes.

Mr. DE ARMOND. But I presume we ought not to take this man seriously. [Laughter.] It would be wonderful that any other man in the position he occupies should, without cause, without provocation, without excuse, endeavor to cast ridicule and odium upon the very people for whose special interests he is supposed to care; but it is not so remarkable in the present Secretary of Agriculture. We ought not to be surprised at many things coming from there. Perhaps this pamphlet should be included in the list of things that ought not to surprise us, and ought not to challenge serious consideration. We might expect treatises of the most remarkable character from that Department, while presided over by that peculiar gentleman. We might expect him to furnish learned treatises upon The Woodchuck and its Availability for the Manufacture of Shingles; upon The Hedgehog and its Use for Fencing Purposes; upon The Acute Obtuseness of the Triangularificationableness of the Angleworm! [Laughter.] We might expect him to dilate upon The Admirable Capability of the Eye of the Potato for Looking into the Financial Question. [Laughter.] But when it comes to such things as this pamphlet, we are excusable for hardly expecting it.

It was said a good many years ago of a certain man in prominent position, "The Secretary stood alone; modern degeneracy had not reached him." History repeats itself—with variations. We may say now, The Secretary stands alone; modern degeneracy has not passed him. [Laughter.]

I do not know, but it seems to me, following the suggestion of my friend from Pennsylvania, that though the Republican party is not responsible for this Secretary of Agriculture, it certainly does owe him something. Though he may not have rendered you any really valuable service, he has manifested the disposition to do so. If the will is to be taken for the deed, you owe him considerable. Now, why can not you provide a place for him? Of course you will not keep him in his present position. That would not be thought of. Away back, a long time ago, it was the custom to have about the courts of kings a man something like him. There was a name, too, attached to this particular functionary. [Laughter.] But he was not known as a cabinet minister. I do not expect you people to have him about the court in any capacity. But why do you not find a place for him in the National Museum—not, of course, to point out the various attractions, the several curiosities and oddities—but why not find a place for him upon some shelf of the National Museum?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman yield to me one moment?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understood the gentleman to intimate that perhaps my speech was unfair, because Mr. Altgeld could not reply in this forum. What special opportunity does my colleague propose the distinguished Secretary of Agriculture shall have to reply to his speech? [Laughter.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I can not imagine anything else than that, with his habit of speaking once every day (when he is here), and on a great many days speaking many times, the gentleman from Ohio will reply for him. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the suggestion that I made with regard to providing for this man of the Agricultural Department after the 4th of March next—after the chilly winds of March shall have blown him out—is, of course, entirely gratuitous. I submit it to my Republican friends for what it is worth. I hope they will take it into prayerful consideration. Why not devote part of a shelf in the National Museum to this curiosity of modern political life and modern political administration of the affairs of the Agricultural Department?

This man has the peculiarity of always talking when he is not writing, and always writing when he is not talking, and always doing both when he is not thinking. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Chairman, I must not unduly detain the committee, and I probably can not close these desultory remarks any better than by quoting from what I know is a favorite poem with all of you—

> Full many a whim of purest ray serene
> The dark, unfathomed screeds of Morton bear;
> Full many a wheel is formed to whir unseen
> And waste its fleetness 'neath J. Sterling's hair.

[Loud laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate has expired.

Mr. HULL. We have had so exhaustive an explanation of this bill in the general debate, I suggest to the chairman of the committee [Mr. WADSWORTH] that he now ask unanimous consent to report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it pass. [Laughter.]

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, if the Committee of the Whole will bear with me, I will not detain it more than a few minutes. I wish to state a few of the leading provisions of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate is exhausted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I ask unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole can not change the order of the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I will make my remarks after the Clerk has read the first paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk (proceeding to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment under the five-minute rule) read the following:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, for the purposes and objects hereinafter expressed, namely.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the amount appropriated for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, was $3,255,532. The amount carried by the bill now under consideration is $3,152,752—a net decrease of $102,780. The amount appropriated for salaries under this Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, was $464,400. The amount provided by this bill for similar purposes for the fiscal ending June 30, 1898, is $468,690. The amount estimated for salaries for the year ending June 30, 1898, was $494,350. It will thus be seen that the bill carries $25,660 less than the amount of the estimate, while it is $4,290 above the appropriation for the current year. The actual increase, however, is only $1,300. The larger apparent increase has been caused by transferring from lump-sum appropriations to specific appropriations (according to the statutory rule) about $3,500 or $3,700.

The amount carried by this bill for miscellaneous purposes (including the Weather Bureau) is $107,070 less than the corresponding appropriations for last year. Under this head the bill apparently carries $73,000 more than the estimates; but that is because the Agricultural Department made no estimate for seeds, so that practically the appropriations are, as I said a moment ago, $107,070 less than those of last year. The salaries in the Weather Bureau are decreased about $330. Otherwise the appropriations in this bill for that service are identical with those of last year.

The appropriation for the Bureau of Animal Industry is $25,000, which is an increase over last year, because of the growth of the work of that Bureau. It was rendered necessary by reason of the wonderful increase in the demand for inspection of meats going abroad, as well as meats intended for interstate commerce. The inspection on the starting of this Bureau, some three years ago, amounted to only 83,000 head, and has increased to the enormous figure of 23,000,000, including cattle, sheep, and hogs, in the last year. Otherwise the bill is practically the same as the bill of last year. There are other small changes, many of them of little material difference.

With this brief explanation, Mr. Chairman, I will be glad, under the five-minute rule, when we reach the bill by paragraphs, to further, if necessary, answer any questions that may occur to any gentleman with reference to changes in the bill.

I move that the committee now rise and report progress to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Agricultural appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

PRODUCTION OF CASTOR BEANS.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution of inquiry addressed to one of the Departments.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and is hereby, requested to inform the House how many bushels of castor beans have been produced in the United States each year since 1890, to 1896, inclusive; and how many bushels were exported each year within said period.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that the word "request" ought to be stricken out and the word "directed" inserted.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to do it, but find that I can not, within the rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, permit me one moment. I would ask the gentleman if he would not include also an inquiry as to how many bushels have been imported in the same time?

Mr. STEELE. That is practically covered.

Mr. PAYNE. The statistics already show that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

WEAR CRAWFORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move the concurrence of the House in a Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 514) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Wear Crawford, which bill is now, I think, on the Speaker's table.

The amendment, I will say, is merely a formal one in phraseology, to correct some tautology in the bill as it passed the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this bill was presented to the House this morning, and on motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The action of the House was afterwards vacated, and the bill was left on the Speaker's table.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the effect of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The bill simply corrects a military record. It is a bill which passed the House and the Senate in the last term of Congress, but did not reach the President in time for his action.

It is a bill to remove a disability from a soldier charged with desertion. After the war was over, after all danger had passed, he had an encounter with an officer of another regiment when on outpost duty, and absented himself for fear of punishment. He was therefore marked as a deserter. That is all there is of it.

I hope there will be no objection to the adoption of the Senate amendment.

There being no objection, the Senate amendment was considered, and agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DE WITT, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. WANGER, for three days, on account of sickness.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. MEIKLEJOHN, a reprint was ordered of the bill S. 502.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

STATE OF WYOMING, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Wyoming, ss:

I, Charles W. Burdick, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of joint resolution No. 1, house of representatives, passed by the fourth legislature of the State of Wyoming.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 25th day of January, A. D. 1897.

[SEAL.] CHARLES W. BURDICK,
Secretary of State.

(Fourth legislature of the State of Wyoming.) Enrolled joint resolution No. 1, house of representatives, State of Wyoming.

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Wyoming, That the Congress of the United States be memorialized as follows:

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States a measure known as the "California mineral lands bill," which has for its object the examination and classification of mineral lands within the railroad land grants in the State of California, and, as amended in the Senate, to include like lands in the State of Oregon; and

Whereas the State of Wyoming is situated under like circumstances, having large areas of mountainous lands within the Union Pacific Railroad land grant known to be mineral in character, and is entitled to the same consideration:

Be it therefore resolved, That we are desirous of securing legislation of like character for the State of Wyoming, and we hereby instruct our Senators and request our Representative in Congress to use all honorable means to secure the passage of the California mineral lands bill so amended as to include the State of Wyoming within its operation; and

Be it further resolved, That his excellency the governor of the State of Wyoming be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to each of our Senators and to our Representative in Congress, to the President of the United States, and to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States a copy of these resolutions.

Mr. SEWELL presented the petition of the president and professors of Princeton University, New Jersey, and of the professors of the Princeton Theological Seminary, New Jersey, praying for the ratification of the pending arbitration treaty with Great Britain; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, with the names, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

The undersigned respectfully represent that they, in common with great numbers of their fellow-citizens in all parts of our country, are extremely solicitous that the treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which is now before the Senate, should be promptly ratified, and they earnestly request the honorable Senators from this State to do all in their power to bring about this result. Enlightened and Christian nations surely can and should settle their disputes by an appeal to reason instead of force, by a reference to duly authorized and properly constituted tribunals. Particularly these two great nations, bound together by such innumerable ties, should set the example to the world of providing for the peaceful adjustment of every controversy, and making the horrible arbitrament of war forever impossible between them. The provisions of the proposed treaty seem to us eminently judicious and wise; and we sincerely hope that no hesitation about minor, unimportant details which may be modified hereafter, if experience shall show it to be desirable, may unduly delay its ratification, and thus jeopard the establishment of the great principle involved.

Winans, professor of Greek; H. B. Cornwall, professor of chemistry; W. M. Daniels, professor of political economy; John Grier Hibben, professor of logic; Henry B. Torrey, H. C. O. Huss, Walter M. Rankin, Edwin S. Lewis, William K. Prentice, Willard Humphreys, C. G. Rockwood, jr., Geo. M. Harper, H. S. S. Smith.

Mr. CAMERON. I present a petition signed by a number of the most prominent citizens of Philadelphia, praying for the prompt ratification of the pending arbitration treaty with Great Britain. I ask unanimous consent that the petition be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, with the names, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate of the United States:

The undersigned citizens of Philadelphia desire respectfully to convey to your honorable body the universal prayer of the community for the prompt ratification of the treaty with Great Britain providing for the arbitration of international questions when not settled by the ordinary process of diplomacy.

It has long been the loftiest distinction of our race that it has been foremost in emancipating man from the shackles of tradition and in leading him to a higher plane of thought and action. To us the less fortunate nations habitually look as the pioneers of progress, opening the path through which humanity can rise from the darkness and errors of the past to the destiny of a brighter future. In this progress there have been few steps more pregnant with possible good than the measure now before you. This is evidenced no less in the acclaim with which it has been welcomed by European populations, groaning under the burdens of militarism, than by the hostility of the organs of that militarism, which deprecate it as a shrewd move by the English-speaking peoples in an attempt to obtain the supremacy of the world. It is not for us to deny that the more the world is subjected to such influence the happier it will be for mankind, and it is only two nations, each in its own way serenely conscious of unconquerable strength, that can afford to set so noble an example to their overburdened neighbors.

The objections urged against the treaty, that it would expose us to disadvantage in various questions calling for settlement in the near future, would appear to the undersigned to be groundless. The measure is only tentative—limited in its period and scope. It does not preclude the possibility of war when national sovereignty or national honor is involved, but it prescribes delays which admit of the subsidence of passion and the exercise of reason. This offers a special advantage to a nation like ours, which refuses to be burdened with enormous permanent armaments, and which thus escapes the peril of attack while unprepared. Moreover, it reduces to a minimum the influence of one of the most fertile sources of international collision—the wounded vanity of statesmen worsted in diplomatic encounter and prompt to cover their failures by an appeal to the sensitiveness of national pride.

Representing as we do a great industrial community, we may be permitted to urge upon you that the immediate material advantage to result from ratification would alone justify your early favorable action. In this industrial age the interests of society are so vast and complex, and the suffering entailed by any derangement of the machinery of trade and commerce is so widespread and severe, that the averting of sudden war panics would in itself be an incalculable gain to the nation. Nor are such motives to be stigmatized as mercenary, for industrial prosperity signifies happiness and comfort to the mass of the population, while industrial distress brings want and misery. It is the duty of the highest statesmanship to guard the material interests of the people, and the people can be trusted at all times and in every emergency to vindicate the national honor.

For these and other reasons which will suggest themselves to you, the undersigned venture to express the hope that at an early day you will in your wisdom, set the seal of your approbation on a measure so beneficent in its purpose and so stimulating to the moral sense of mankind. You will thus, moreover, lead the way to further arrangements of a similar nature with other nations who are awaiting your action prior to opening negotiations for the purpose. Responsibility so great has rarely fallen to the lot of legislators, for in your hands now rests the decision whether the United States shall stand forth as the apostle of peace in a distracted world.

MRS. MARTHA FRANK.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3612) granting a pension to Mrs. Martha Frank, to report it favorably without amendment. As this is a bill which proposes to pension an old lady in the State of Georgia, 102½ years old, I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Mrs. Martha Frank, widow of William Frank, member of the company of Capt. Mr. GALLINGER. A resolution was referred a few days ago to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate which provided for the payment of one year's salary to the daughter of Chester R. Faulkner, late a messenger on the rolls of the Senate. The committee report a substitute for the resolution, the substitute providing for the payment of one-half year's salary, which is in accordance, I think, with the uniform custom of the Senate. I ask that the resolution reported as a substitute may be immediately considered.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Miss F. L. Faulkner, daughter of Chester R. Faulkner, deceased, late a messenger on the rolls of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary, at the rate per annum allowed by law to the messenger aforesaid, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 2,000 additional copies of the annual report of the Treasurer of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, for the use of the Treasury Department.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 3618) to prevent the overcapitalization of corporations, companies, and associations of persons doing an interstate carrying trade, and requiring the taking out of a license therefor in certain cases, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 3619) to reduce the interest on arrearages of taxes due the District of Columbia prior to July 1, 1895; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3620) for the relief of Joseph Prather, of the District of Columbia, for supplies and stores taken from him by the military forces of the United States for their use in said District during the war for the suppression of the rebellion; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 3621) for the relief of William Johnson, administrator of Thomas I. Johnson, deceased, of Fayette County, Tenn., as found due by the Court of Claims under the act of March 3, 1883; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

INTERNATIONAL COURT OF ARBITRATION.

Mr. BACON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 196) relative to the establishment of an international court of arbitration; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. BACON. I ask that the joint resolution be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the United States of America deprecate war, and desire the maintenance of peace and friendship with all the world, and that this desire is not limited to their relations with any one nation, but extends to their relations with all the nations of the earth, whether the same be great or small, strong or weak.

Resolved further, That to the end that these relations of peace and amity now happily existing between them and all nations may be perpetually preserved, and that wars may be discouraged and as far as practicable made impossible, the United States favor the principle and practice of international arbitration for the settlement of all questions in difference between them and any other nation which they may fail to adjust by treaty or diplomatic negotiation.

Resolved further, That the United States do hereby avow it as their future policy and intention, whenever there shall arise any question in difference between them and any other nation which they may fail to adjust by treaty or diplomatic negotiation, that they shall and will, so far as they can consistently with the national honor and established national policies, agree with such other nation to submit such question in difference to the arbitrament and final decision of an international court of arbitration. Such court of arbitration shall, in the future as in the past, be constituted by agreement between the parties consenting thereto, with special reference and adaptation to the particular question in difference, and to the conditions then existing.

Resolved further, That the United States hereby invite all civilized nations to make a corresponding and reciprocal declaration, to the end that wars between nations may cease, and that a universal reign of peace may be inaugurated and perpetually maintained.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not propose in introducing these resolutions to submit any remarks relative thereto. I could not do so without in some measure trenching upon the subject of the pending treaty between this Government and Great Britain relative to international arbitration, which would be manifestly improper.

I simply desire to say, however, in order that attention may be called to this matter, that it must be apparent to all that such a declaration as is embodied in the resolutions, when made by Congress, which is the war-making power, must exert a much stronger influence in the prevention of war and in the encouragement of peace than can be possibly exerted by any treaty between this Government and any other one nation.

In the hope of an early report, in order that this matter which is now occupying the public mind may have a final determination by the present Congress, I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. DAVIS. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which I ask be referred to the Committee on Commerce and printed. I call the particular attention of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], the chairman of the committee, to the amendment. It provides for surveys and examinations of deep waterways and the routes thereof between the Great Lakes and Atlantic tide waters in the respects indicated by the report of the Deep Waterways Commission transmitted to Congress January 18, 1897, $150,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and printed.

Mr. BAKER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit a concurrent resolution and ask that it be read.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a master's, marshal, or any other judicial or execution sale of the properties of the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific railroad companies, or either of them, without additional legislation by Congress, would not be binding on the Government of the United States, or conclude it of any legal or equitable right therein now possessed, unless such sale should be subsequently ratified by Congressional action.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the resolution be passed over, to be considered on the morning of the next legislative day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CONFERENCE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that Senate bill 3547 may be taken up for consideration.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Have we disposed of the morning business? I should like to know.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business has not been concluded. The Senator from New Hampshire addressed the Chair.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that Senate bill 3547 may be taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3547) to provide for the representation of the United States by commissioners in any international monetary conference hereafter to be called.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. CANNON.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I desire simply to express my opposition to this bill, not to engage in a fruitless debate. I shall mention but two or three points of objection, and them briefly.

In what it says, still more in its implications, the bill is worse than useless—it is highly vicious. It is another of the ambiguous and timid utterances, of the projects, illusory—perhaps it is not too much to say deceitful—by which those of our countrymen who put faith in the declarations of Congress, as guided by wisdom, are perversely taught misconception of the true principles of government, of finance, and commerce.

I do not charge that the scheme is not supported with sincerity, nor that in fact no conference is purposed to be held, or, if held, no practical result is anticipated—though for this there might be grounds of suspicion, as the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] intimated yesterday. I take it rather as being what its words indicate, and there find it worse in effect than if merely insincere.

It proffers again to the public as sound and wise the theory that bimetallism, in the sense that a stable, practicable, and useful standard of value may be compounded of the two metals, gold and silver, both enjoying free and unlimited coinage at an arbitrary ratio, if only many nations will try it together instead of ours alone. In that it defies the teaching of history, the advice of experience and experienced men, and the deductions of sound reason.

No such bimetallism has ever existed in fact; in no country of the world does it exist now. Always and everywhere the concurrent unlimited coinage of the two metals, at any ratio, has resulted in the involuntary, unconscious, but inevitable fixation, for the time being, of one or the other metal as the standard, the vain though constant pursuit of an unattainable adjustment of relation between two different and contending standards at the same time by continual shifts of legislation, always accompanied by instability of values of the current coins, profitable only to money changers, but inflicting distress on business, and especial injury on those who depend on their labor for life and its enjoyments.

The pretense that any such system of bimetallism as created the standard out of both metals, so that the value of both became necessary components of it, has ever had existence in the world is overwhelmed by the most trustworthy historical researches and must be consigned to the limbo where the ghosts of witchcraft, astrology, demonology, and kindred superstitions have been driven by the advancing intelligence and wisdom of mankind.

It would matter little if it were granted to have once had some footing on earth, for it has none now. As I said, no country furnishes example of it. Some base their reckoning of business on silver coins; some on gold; but none on a bimetallic standard.

If such ever existed, then it has disappeared; and let him who would demand its resurrection confront the experienced progress of human intelligence.

In either aspect the pursuit of a bimetallic standard of such a character is as idle as would be human effort to divert the Gulf Stream or warm the climate of the poles.

But still more this bill implies to the public mind, and the inference is certain that such a standard of value is far better and more desirable than the present. It is complete acknowledgment of the fundamental assumption of the Bryan campaign that a gold standard of monetary measurement, however freely silver may be used within the sphere of its practical usefulness, is wrong, not right, a false, not a true, standard, the product of evil law, not of just and natural law, an injury done society by human error which can be in some way redressed, and therefore ought to be. And it fairly leads to the recent issue that but for the wicked resistance of other countries the grievous wrong might be righted and the woes of mankind, here and elsewhere, vastly alleviated. Sir, no wonder men listened to the siren tones that lured them toward this fancied blessing and said, "Let us try it alone, let us be free and independent, let us have the boon of prosperity, 'without the consent of any other nation on earth.'"

If they had been right in their basis, which this vicious and misleading bill now implies, they were right in this insistence, for it is assuredly a truth, sir, in my poor opinion, that any people under the sun may pursue alone the sound principles of finance, commerce, business, and good government, without any exception whatever of a single principle among all that rule those subjects, independently of other nations, and be gainers, not losers, by their faithful adherence to them. Not always to the full extent that cooperation with others would insure, but always to advantage and benefit far beyond any attainable by not pursuing them.

Why, then, if the free coinage of both metals at an arbitrary ratio be a principle of finance or commerce valuable to many nations together, is it not, like all sound principles of finance and commerce, helpful to the nation which pursues it alone? Sir, that appears to me a question which the average common sense of man does not find answered by the refinements and mysticism which proffer all the benefits of principle only to some hopeless application of it; and it can not be thus answered to any sound judgment. "The hills are green far away" is the sententious Irish saying that dispatches such fantastic theories.

And well may it be applied to this dream of international bimetallism. How many more conferences do we require to satisfy us of the futility, the fatuity, of all such attempts? How many times more must we be shown that the comity of nations does indeed forbid the world to laugh in our faces, but by no means suppresses their laughter in the sleeve? Of course, if the United States shall continue to be inspired by that sort of statesmanship which will try to keep an intelligent people from bothering politicians in their pursuit of place, by putting them off with the expectation of splendid results to come "in the sweet by and by" from a millennial concord of nations in financial affairs, why, just so long polite, courteous, and sympathizing politicians in the countries of Europe will gravely consent to light a council fire and have a "big talk" with the United States. It is for nations as for Indians, a rule of politeness. And we can undoubtedly again get together at Paris, Brussels, or some other pleasant capital a delightful assemblage of the brainiest and brightest financiers of Europe, who will listen with sedate faces and blink like wisdom-laden owls while our commissioners shall unfold again the glorious joys to the human race to spring from the free and unlimited coinage of silver at 16 to 1, with all the delectable tables of mathematical confectionery which attend the winsome argument. And after a sufficient number of days have been worn away in the rites and ceremonials of financial mysticism until greater bewilderment of mind becomes impossible, and after dinners, receptions, and social festivities have begun to pall, some one will quietly point out, like Mr. Forssell, of Sweden, at the last Brussels conference, that no such a thing as this fancied bimetallism can possibly be created because incapable of existence, and then it will gradually leak out that in point of fact the delegates from the countries where the arts of civilization have been most triumphant really were sent under instructions which practically forbid any definite agreement of any kind. And then, with many assurances of the profoundest mutual esteem, and the most distinguished mutual consideration, and the most delightful international love, they will adjourn to meet again when called together, an event that will never occur.

Three times the United States have caused this pretty play to be enacted—twice at Paris and once at Brussels—France once even joining us in the invitation to the others. And the truth is, the international farce does not please Americans longer. Perhaps they can all, or nearly all, be fooled part of the time, but the time for this foolery has passed.

We have a plain and easy path before us, and it opens to all the prosperity, and especially to all the relief from afflicting currency disorders, which any legislation can give. We know that mankind in the whole can not be made rich or prosperous by legislation. If any class is so enriched, it is at the cost of the masses.

That, then, is the true plan of law which establishes the equality of privilege and right to all without distinction, and leaves the prosperity of individuals to individual efforts. And that is the wisest law of currency which fixes a simple, stable, certain standard, with sufficient provision for a circulation based upon and immediately and everywhere redeemable in it, elastic, convenient, and safe, and then leaves men entirely alone to transact their business without fear of change in the standard.

The currency should be as easy to enjoy as the air we breathe, as natural in operation, as wholesome to business as the oxygen to life, and as little liable to meddlesome infection by law.

Sir, the people of the United States have the right to expect such legislation as shall give them a sound currency, under the instruction of the late election. If that supreme object shall be traded off for the gain of favored classes or sacrificed to cowardice, woe to them who shall be guilty of it.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I do not rise to make a speech, but I can not refrain from tendering to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] my sincere congratulations. He has pictured in graphic language what I have long felt to be a supreme folly. The application to foreign powers to regulate our domestic affairs has always seemed to me to be so preposterous that it ought not to receive a moment's consideration by any American.

There is another part of his argument which challenges my admiration, and that is his profound frankness in advocating the single gold standard. He undoubtedly believes that the United States can have no money unless it can obtain the commodity gold, which European monarchs and European capitalists have cornered and hold in their firm grasp; that if we have money at all we must obtain it upon such terms and conditions as the hoarders of gold dictate, whether it rob us of our property and reduce us to slavery or not.

Believing, as I do, that money is the creation of law, and that it is the duty of the Government to furnish a sufficient volume of money to enable the country to prosper and develop its resources, I view with astonishment any man who has conceived the idea that civilization must perish if the United States can not obtain the commodity gold upon which to stamp the will of its sovereign authority and use it for money. I say that his courage in this respect challenges my admiration. I never was one of those who doubted the sincerity of the great mass of mankind who held to the theory that the world was flat, though I deprecated their fanaticism for the persecutions they inflicted upon others who thought differently; nor did I doubt the piety of the divines of the Middle Ages who thought it was sacrilegious to adopt sanitary measures to preserve health, when all that was necessary, in their opinion, was faith. I have often thought and often compared the feeling of those who believed that the world was flat and those who believed that sanitary measures to preserve health were wicked with the unctuous and enthusiastic teachings from the White House and elsewhere, that all we needed to restore prosperity was confidence. They are very similar. The confidence that civilization can be preserved by gold alone, it seems to me, stands upon the same footing as the confidence that the world was flat or that sanitary precautions were wicked. As to those gentlemen who believe otherwise, who believe that the free coinage of silver would be a good thing, and want to apply to Europe for it, when we have been three times denied it, I may question their sincerity, but when a man believes that the world can be saved with gold alone, whether we have it or not, and honestly avows that belief, his courage in stating his convictions ought to make us commend him at least personally.

The folly, however, of believing that this civilization must perish for want of money unless we can get the commodity gold from those who have hoarded it is a burlesque on human reason and is a reflection on the intelligence of the age. If it were not for the misery that it entails, if this country were not suffering distress the like of which was never before known, it would be comical to listen to the arguments to show that money, which Aristotle declared more than two thousand years ago was the creation of law, existed in any commodity whatever.

You may say to me, "Why do you want to use the commodity of silver?" My reply is: Because there is more of it than there is of gold alone, and it will come nearer rescuing this civilization from inevitable destruction than one metal alone, and also because that remedy is within our reach. That is my reason for it. Six and a half million people have declared for it, and hundreds of thousands, aye millions, of others would have declared for it if money had not voted, if they had not been deceived by being persuaded that the United States must depend upon the will of the monarchs of Europe for our domestic laws. These people will be undeceived in the next campaign. The Republican party may devise every method of deception it pleases, but the stern realities of misery are too great to deceive the people again, and everyone knows it.

I am willing the Republican party shall try any method they have and give us another object lesson of the contempt in which our efforts to get others to legislate for us is held by those to whom we apply. Let the American people feel the full force and degradation of applying to Europe to give laws to this country whereby this people can flourish.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I simply wish to record my protest against the passage of this measure; in the first place, because I believe that this country is capable of managing its own affairs without the assistance of any other nation on the globe. In the second place, I do not believe that we should longer be suppliants at the feet of the European nations, who are the chief beneficiaries of the appreciation of gold, they being our creditors, and that it is humiliating enough to have asked as often as we have for a conference on this subject; that if we can not do this alone, in other words, if we can not adopt the free and unlimited coinage of silver by ourselves and thus relieve our people from the depreciation of the value of their products, then we should do something that we can do alone. We should not longer appeal to the nations of Europe, who are the chief beneficiaries of the existing conditions, for their assistance for our relief.

I contend, Mr. President—at least I am of the opinion—that there is not a Senator on this floor who believes that a bimetallic agreement with the nations of Europe will result in the establishment of a ratio between 15 and 16 to 1, or even 16 to 1. I think there is no Senator who for a moment supposes that Great Britain will change her monetary system, and I can see no excuse whatever for the introduction of this bill, except the necessity of the Republican party to satisfy many hundred thousands of people who are advocates of silver and who voted the Republican ticket, perhaps believing that something would be done. That nothing will be done is established conclusively by the result of the conferences already held.

The first conference was held in 1867, at the invitation of France, and met at Paris on June 17, 1867. Eighteen of the principal European countries and the United States participated. They voted unanimously against the single silver standard, and every nation participating in that conference voted in favor of the single gold standard but the Netherlands, and they also voted to establish the 25-franc gold piece as an international coin.

The next conference met, at the invitation of the United States, at Paris August 16, 1878. Twelve countries were represented. Germany refused to send delegates. It was proposed by the United States, first, that it is not to be desired that silver shall be excluded from free coinage in Europe and the United States; second, that the use of both gold and silver as unlimited legal tender may be safely adopted by equalizing them at a ratio fixed by international agreement.

Then the convention resolved—what? Simply this, and nothing more: That the difference of opinion that had appeared excluded the adoption of a common ratio between the two metals, and then adjourned.

The next, or third, conference was called by France and the United States, and held in 1881, nineteen countries being represented. The delegate from Sweden said that they had better reaffirm the declaration of 1878, and the conference reaffirmed that declaration and adjourned never to meet again. That declaration of 1878 was that the differences of opinion which had appeared excluded the adoption of a common ratio between the two metals.

The next conference was held at Brussels in 1892. At that conference the United States proposed, not the free and unlimited coinage of silver at any ratio, but simply this: The United States had at first sent an invitation to Great Britain, asking that Government to join us in a convention to adopt both metals at a ratio to be agreed upon. Great Britain refused to accept the invitation to the conference to discuss the question of agreeing upon a ratio for the coinage of the two metals, but when we changed the invitation so as to provide for simply meeting and discussing the question of the enlarged use of silver Great Britain joined in the conference, and this was the programme of the United States in the conference of 1892.

> That in the opinion of this conference it is desirable that some measure should be found for increasing the use of silver in the currency systems of the nations.

That was all. No greater or broader resolution would be accepted by Great Britain, neither would she join us in a conference to discuss the question of the ratio. But what more? Mr. Wilson, a delegate from Great Britain, immediately said:

> Her Majesty's Government did not find it possible to accept an invitation conveyed in terms which might give rise to a misunderstanding by implying that the Government had some doubt as to the maintenance of the monetary system which had been in force in Great Britain since 1816.

Speaking for Sir Charles Fremantle and himself, he said:

> Our faith is that of the school of monometallism pure and simple. We do not admit that any other than the single gold standard would be applicable to our country.

Early in the session the leading delegate from Germany declared:

> Germany, being satisfied with its monetary system, has no intention of modifying its basis. * * * In view of the satisfactory monetary situation of the Empire, the Imperial Government has prescribed the most strict reserve for its delegates, who, in consequence, can not take part either in the discussion or in the vote upon the resolution presented by the delegates of the United States.

Germany in that conference then refused to discuss or vote one way or another upon a proposition simply for the enlarged use of silver.

Austria-Hungary, although represented in the conference, instructed their delegate to take no part in the conference, in its discussions or votes.

The delegate from the Netherlands declared—

> That Holland would not enter into a bimetallic union without the full and complete participation of England is a part of the formal instructions furnished us by our Government.

France made the same declaration practically, in fact absolutely the same declaration, that she would not participate in any agreement unless England joined.

The delegate from Sweden, Mr. Hans Forssell, said that—

> It would be premature to vote upon the resolution of the United States when the means were not known by which the use of silver as a monetary metal could be enlarged.

What probability was there to discuss with them the question of the ratio and the free and unlimited coinage of silver? He proposed to postpone the vote until a future meeting.

Mr. Lardy, delegate of Switzerland, made the following declaration:

> The Swiss Government hastened to accept the invitation of the President of the United States, guided by the same sentiments which caused Switzerland to be represented at the monetary conferences at Paris in 1878 and 1881.

Then he goes on to declare that they are satisfied with their money system and will not change it. Why should they not be? They owe nothing, and the world owes them; their situation is the same as that of England in that respect.

Prince Ouroussoff, delegate of Russia, expressed himself in the following terms:

> I must make the same reservations as others of our honorable colleagues. The Russian Government takes the most lively interest in the conference, and has therefore given instructions to its delegates to follow attentively the debates, but they may not vote upon proposals which have a definite character or involve practical resolutions.

Mr. Bengesco, delegate of Roumania, made the following declaration:

> The instructions of my Government not having arrived, I consider myself bound to make the same reserves as my honorable colleagues. I declare, therefore, that I can not take part in any discussion or in any vote upon the proposals which are submitted to us.

Mr. d'Antas, delegate of Portugal, joined in the reserves made by some of his colleagues, notably by the delegates of Austria, Russia, and Roumania; he recalled the fact that similar reserves had been made by the delegate of Portugal at the last monetary conference.

The delegate from Turkey made the same reservation—in fact, pretty nearly all of them did—simply declining even to discuss the question of enlarging the use of silver.

This convention adjourned to meet again at some future time, to be called again, some time within the then coming year, but it never reassembled. Afterwards the Congress of the United States passed a bill providing for nine delegates to a monetary conference whenever we could find anybody who would confer with us; and we were unable to find anyone who would join in a conference and who would talk with us about this question, and the law lapsed by limitation of time. Now it is proposed to have another conference with the same people after more than twenty-five years of constant effort in this direction. I say I will have no part in any effort in that direction. It is humiliating enough to read the history already made without increasing its pages by further humiliation.

Who is the chief beneficiary of the appreciation of gold? The gold-using nations of the world; not their producers, not their farmers, for farming in every gold-using nation to-day has ceased to pay a profit or even the expense of production; not their manufacturers, for their chief industry to-day in the line of manufactures is to create machinery to be shipped to Asiatic silver-using countries to produce the manufactured goods heretofore produced in England. The beneficiaries, then, are the rulers of those countries, the accumulators of the wealth produced by the toil of others. England buys of the world $750,000,000 worth of products more than she sells. How does she pay for them? She pays for them by interest upon the money the world owes her. If she can get two bushels of wheat for a dollar instead of one, she has doubled the comforts which her moneyed classes can buy with this interest money. Is she going to change that system? Not for one moment.

Mr. President, the figures in this direction ought to alarm the people of the United States. Go the world round, and there is not a single country with the gold standard where the producers of wealth are prosperous. But there are silver-using nations that have made more progress in the last twenty years in the development of material resources, in the creation of wealth, than ever before. What fear, then, is there in our joining the nations of the world whose producers are prosperous, as we are a great nation of producers?

If the people of the United States had received in 1895 the same gold price for their products that they received in 1873 for what they exported to other countries, instead of $807,500,000 they would have received $1,769,000,000. If we had paid the same gold price for our imports in 1895 that we paid in 1873, we would have paid $1,152,000,000 instead of $731,900,000. In other words, Mr. President, the balance of trade, instead of being $75,000,000 in our favor, would have been $617,000,000 in our favor. These exports were principally farm products and raw material, and they declined in price so much more rapidly than manufactured products that the difference was enormously against us. If our people had had $617,000,000 in 1895 instead of $75,000,000, which was the balance of trade in our favor, we would have rapidly commenced the extinction of our foreign debt.

But let us see how this rule affects Great Britain. We lost by it nearly $550,000,000. Let us see how Great Britain fared? England exported in 1895 £226,000,000 in value of manufactured products. If she had received the same price in 1895 that she received, for instance, in 1894 the difference would have been £8,500,000. If she had paid the same price in 1895 that she paid in 1894 for her imports, the difference would have been £17,000,000. In other words, the decline in price from 1894 to 1895, the result of the appreciation of gold, made a difference in England's favor of $40,000,000, and the Statist, in commenting upon this subject, says that since 1873 the rapid decline in the value of farm products and raw materials, which are the articles that England has purchased, has made such an enormous difference in her favor that she can well afford to suffer the slight decline that has come to her manufactured products.

Mr. President, if we would bring prosperity to this country we must rescue the farmer of the country. To-day the cost of producing farm products is greater than the price in gold. It is a significant fact that if the grain crop of the United States in 1895 had brought the same price in gold that it brought in 1873, the farmers of this country would have received $900,000,000 more than they did. If the cotton crop had brought the same price in 1895 that it brought in 1873, the cotton raisers of this country would have received $350,000,000 more than they received for their crop, farm animals would have brought $250,000,000 more than they did, and the difference upon these four staple items alone would have been $1,500,000,000.

I call the attention of the manufacturers of the East to these facts and figures. If you would start your factories and your mills, you must restore prosperity to the purchasers of your manufactured articles. If the farmers of this country had received in 1895 $1,500,000,000 more than they did, it would have employed every idle man in the United States and started every mill. Can you secure this prosperity by increasing the tariff? What argument do you present to the farmer for a remedy; and until you rescue him, no other remedy is of avail. Oh, you say you will furnish a home market for farm products. Mr. President, we can not have a home market for farm products and a gold standard. That is absolutely impossible. We must pay $200,000,000 of interest abroad each year. We must pay $75,000,000, the expenses of travelers abroad. We must pay the doweries of the American girls who marry the decayed branches of royalty in Europe. These sums are paid with farm products. Eighty per cent of the exports are products of the farm, and the large proportion of the other 20 per cent are mineral, oil, and silver. If we have a home market for farm products, how are you going to pay these charges abroad, to say nothing about paying for our imports? You must do it by shipping gold, and therefore a home market for farm products and a gold standard are impossible unless Senators are willing to have a gold standard without any gold.

Therefore if we would remedy the evils under which we suffer, we must raise the value of silver by increasing its use, and decrease the value of gold by decreasing the demand for it. I contend that that can be done by the United States alone; that we can take not only all the available silver, but many hundreds of millions more and enlarge our volume of metallic money, to our great advantage. If we should fail to maintain the parity, what harm would come to us? If we should fail to maintain the parity, we would simply join the only nations whose producers are prosperous to-day. We would simply leave the ranks of those nations whose producers are in ruin and distress. Not an agricultural conference has met in Europe for years that has not attributed the decline of agriculture to the demonetization of silver.

If the people of the United States would absolutely discard the use of gold, withdraw the demand for that metal from 70,000,000 people, it would have the same effect upon the price of gold as the discovery of mines of hundreds of millions of dollars in value. Therefore, as debtors, it should be the policy of the United States to decrease the demand for gold, to throw what gold we have upon the European market, to refuse it currency as money in order to make it cheaper and easier to get. Suppose our gold should leave us. It would simply inflate the gold currency of Europe, and as we sell our surplus farm products in Europe, and as the inflation of the gold currency of Europe would raise prices in gold, or, in other words, require less of our grain and our cotton to secure the gold dollar, we would pay our European debt with less of the products of our toil. It seems to me that reason, good judgment, and common sense demand that the American people shall act for themselves. To longer trifle with the subject, to continue to be the laughingstock of the financiers of Europe, is too humiliating. I trust that the United States will rise in its might—and I believe the people will at the next election—and refuse longer to be a suppliant at the feet of the monarchies of Europe; that it will no longer beg the money changers of London for a chance to legislate for the interest of our own people.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I think it will be a serious mistake if the friends of monetary reform shall obstruct in the slightest degree the passage of the pending bill. I think our friends on the other side want us to obstruct it. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] shakes his head at me, which is as much as to say that I am mistaken in my statement. I do not abate one jot or tittle of my belief in the doctrine that this country can never see prosperity until we have bimetallism and general monetary reform. But our Republican friends are coming into power, as a result of the recent election, on two arguments which they used last fall, to say nothing of the questionable means they employed in producing the result.

Those arguments were, first, that they were bimetallists and that they were the friends of silver. They wanted to coin silver, but they could not do it because Europe would not consent to it. If the people of tnis country would only give them power, when they came into the possession of the Government they would have international bimetallism: we would have an international coinage ratio, and gold and silver in the United States and in Europe would be money of equal value. Secondly, they said, "We will revise the present tariff act"—the present free-trade act, as they called it, which was a misnomer—"and will give the people a new tariff, which will protect the industries of the country and open the factories and bring about prosperity."

I think it would be a mistake on the part of the friends of silver and monetary reform in this Chamber or in the other branch of Congress to obstruct these gentlemen in the passage of these measures. I am so certain that an international agreement can not be reached, that the arguments used will fail, that I desire to see these gentlemen call upon Europe for a conference on the subject of money. I wish to witness, as I will witness if I live, their absolute humiliation and chagrin when she refuses to enter into a conference; and when she does that, the people of the United States will understand, as they do not understand now, that they have been deceived and hoodwinked again upon this subject, and that there never was any real purpose on the part of the Republican party to bring about monetary reform.

We have had six international monetary conferences since the close of the war. This will be the seventh, if this bill becomes a law and a conference is called. In every one of those conferences Europe has told us in plain terms that she would not agree to the free coinage of silver. In 1865, in Paris, at the very first conference, which was attended by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and by another delegate from this country, without debate and without examining the question in the slightest degree, the first thing the conference did was to resolve in favor of the single gold standard throughout the world. The subject was not agitated; the convention had barely met and organized when a resolution of that kind was introduced and passed, if I recollect aright, unanimously. In every conference from that time to this Europe has told us in language so plain that no man can mistake what she means that she will not agree to an international coin.

Mr. President, we have supplicated Europe upon this question to such an extent that it seems to me any self-respecting American citizen would feel ashamed to importune it any more. But two or three years ago we put upon one of the appropriation bills an amendment creating a commission of Senators and Representatives to meet the representatives of Europe in conference upon this subject. We have heard of no invitation from her from that time to this. Our friends upon the other side have sent one of the most brilliant of their number and one of the most brilliant and able members of the Senate to Europe to hunt up somebody to confer with, and we have not received a report yet that anybody in England or elsewhere is willing to confer with him or with us.

If we successfully obstruct the passage of the pending bill, then our Republican friends will go out to the country again and say, "Oh, the Populists and the Democrats and the free-silver Republicans and the Popocrats and all the combination in the Senate obstructed us, and we could not do anything. Just continue us in power one Administration longer; give us full sway in the White House, as we have now, and in both branches of Congress, and we will show you that we will form a compact with Europe for international bimetallism, and that prosperity will come back to this country and abide with us." But if we do not obstruct the passage of the bill, and it does become a law, we will demonstrate to the world in less than eighteen months that the argument of international bimetallism is a pretense designed to deceive the voters of the country; that it is not in the power of the Republican party or any other party to bring about international bimetallism; and the people will not be deceived again by an argument of that kind.

Mr. President, so thoroughly am I convinced that the Republican party will be powerless to bring about prosperity to this country without domestic bimetallism and monetary reform that I wish to see our Republican friends come in here with a tariff measure of their own making. I desire to see protection from head to foot throughout the length and breadth and middle of the measure, and all through it. I desire to see them protect everything in the United States down to the point of the smallest gimlet that can be found—everything—and then I desire to see that tariff act bring to this country prosperity. We know it will not. If we give them the privilege of formulating their own laws on the subject of silver and the tariff, and they fail to bring prosperity to the country, as we believe they will fail, the arguments upon which they won the victory of 1896 will disappear and the people will repudiate the party before the incoming Administration has served out half its time.

I shall not vote for the passage of this bill; if I vote at all I shall vote against it, but I desire to see it become a law. My friend the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] says to me I ought to vote for it. I will not vote for it, for it is wrong; it is a mere pretense, but I desire the pretense enacted into law, and I wish to see its companion piece make its appearance upon the surface as soon as possible, without any obstruction, so that we can demonstrate to the world that the hard times that are afflicting the people are due in no measure whatever to their refusal to engage in international bimetallism or to a lack of proper legislation upon the subject of the tariff.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me to make an inquiry?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. Does not the Senator from Nebraska think that this bill is rather innocent than wrong?

Mr. ALLEN. Perhaps I should stand corrected upon that subject. It is not wrong. It is a useless thing; it is a work of supererogation. I am satisfied the Republicans upon the other side of the Chamber are hoping this minute that the bill will be obstructed by us.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is as unjust a suggestion, I will say to the Senator, as it would be for me to say that I think the Senator from Nebraska hopes that the effort to obtain international bimetallism will be defeated, in order to strengthen his political party. I do not think that kind of an argument ought to be brought into this discussion either way. We profess to be sincere, and the Senator ought to take our word for it, as we take his word for it when he says that he desires to see the free coinage of silver brought about in some appropriate way.

Mr. ALLEN. I am perfectly willing, of course, to accord to the Senator from New Hampshire and all Senators sincerity upon all great matters, but certain political conditions present themselves here of which I am satisfied Senators upon the other side of the Chamber would like to take advantage. I am satisfied that there are Senators upon the other side of the Chamber who are convinced that international bimetallism can not be brought about; that it is a mere chimera; that there is no hope of bringing it about. Therefore, they would rather have the responsibility for the defeat of this measure rest upon Democrats and free-silver Republicans and Populists than to have it rest upon their own party. That is what I mean when I say there is a lack of sincerity upon their part.

Mr. President, if prosperity can be brought about by means of international bimetallism, I am perfectly willing it shall come through that channel. I desire to see this country prosperous. I do not care whether it comes through raising taxes or international bimetallism, or by what means it comes. If we can only lift the pall of gloom that has settled over the country at this time, if we can only bring prosperity to the millions and millions of our people who are suffering, I wish to see that prosperity come, though it may utterly destroy the political party to which I belong. For these reasons I hope there will be no unnecessary obstruction to the passage of this measure.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, by whomsoever disputed, the fact remains that marked progress has been made toward the solution of this vexed coinage question during the past year. By common consent ambiguous phrases have been discarded; party policies and purposes have been clearly defined. Last November, by a vote which may be considered as substantially unanimous, the electors of the country pronounced in favor of bimetallism. On the question of the method to be employed to bring about the desired result the two great contending party forces divided. The party led by Mr. Bryan proposed to solve the problem by opening the mints of the United States to the free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver at the ratio of 16 ounces of silver to 1 ounce of gold. The party led by Mr. McKinley insisted that such action would merely transfer the Government from gold monometallism to silver monometallism, and that the transfer would involve disastrous consequences to the country. At the same time his party pledged its best endeavors to bring about bimetallism through an agreement for that purpose between this country and other leading commercial powers.

Mr. Bryan and his supporters contended, and they still contend, that the proposed international agreement was and is an impracticable scheme, a mere political subterfuge, adopted as a campaign expedient and never intended in good faith to serve any other than vote-getting purposes. Mr. McKinley received a majority of the popular vote, together with a majority in the electoral college, and on the 4th of March will become President of the Republic. Anticipating that event, members of his party in the Senate present this bill, and urge its passage at this time, in order to facilitate prompt action by the new Executive looking to the consummation of the pronounced party purpose on this coinage question. Senators who supported Mr. Bryan express sympathy with the alleged purpose, but proclaim an absolute want of faith in the means suggested for its accomplishment. They say that the contemplated international agreement is a mere vision, a shadow, a schoolboy's dream, the plaything of an hour; that, regardless of any effort we may make, the movement will be doomed to failure from its inception.

The Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. CHANDLER] does not share these evil forebodings. He has faith in the movement this bill is intended to initiate. He hopes and believes that this great problem may be brought to a happy solution along the line indicated. Many earnest Senators on this side of the Chamber share his faith, and I believe it is not extravagant to assert that 99 per cent of all citizens of the country earnestly supplement his hopes.

The bill was manifestly prepared to facilitate success. Words, phrases, or elements likely to embarrass progress were undoubtedly avoided with care. It must be borne in mind, in considering any amendment offered, that if this bill becomes a law it will be the basis of all diplomatic action and correspondence preliminary to the convening of delegates in a conference representing the several nations disposed to participate with us in an effort to settle this coinage question.

The act of Congress would be published in full in every capital in Christendom the morning after its passage, and it would thereafter at all times be considered as a part of the invitation of this Government to other nations to join in a monetary conference. It is obvious that language might be placed in the bill which would render acceptance of the contemplated invitation quite embarrassing to well-disposed or friendly nations.

I know it was the object of the framer of the bill to give to the President, on whom the burden of responsibility will largely rest, all needful authority, unhampered by needless conditions. At this point an amendment is presented by the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] changing the well-considered phraseology of the bill, and requiring that the conference shall be held in Washington City. At the same time he insists that in any form the movement will certainly result in absolute failure.

Mr. CANNON. Will the Senator from Montana permit me?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think the Senator desires to do me an injustice. Nowhere nor under any circumstances have I ever stated that a movement for an international agreement for bimetallism based upon proper action by this Government would be a failure.

Mr. CARTER. I am glad to have the Senator correct that point, because I certainly understood him to insist that this movement would not, in the nature of things, succeed. Do I now understand the Senator to say that he believes, if his amendment is adopted and made a part of the law of the land, it will, in and of itself, result in a full and complete solution and a satisfactory adjustment by international agreement?

Mr. CANNON. The Senator from Montana may understand me to say distinctly that if my amendment shall be embodied in the bill, the people of the United States will know, when we get through with this effort for an international agreement, whether it is possible or not. If we can not get an international agreement for bimetallism, the next best thing for the people of this country is to ascertain that we can not get it.

Mr. CARTER. Upon that we have no point of disagreement. Then, sir, from prospective failure there is no pretense that his proposed amendment can or will save us. The Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. CHANDLER] thinks the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] would greatly embarrass, if not prove fatal to, the objects of the measure.

In this dilemma I submit that the wise course for the Senator from Utah is to withdraw his amendment. Should his amendment prevail, he will have accepted responsibility where he predicts inevitable failure. It is better to be entirely frank about the matter. If the effort of the coming Administration to solve the vexed question ends in failure to secure an international agreement, an important result will have been achieved in demonstrating the futility of the scheme. But, sir, the political utility of the result will be measurably impaired if it can be truthfully said that the ardent friends of silver paved the way for the failure by declining to permit the advocates of international bimetallism to proceed according to the dictates of their own party policy. How can you hereafter justly charge the Administration with responsibility for failure or delinquency if by the record it appears you insisted that the Administration should act on the lines you prescribed or not act at all?

The question at issue is beyond phrases and synonyms. The country understands it. The question is, Can an international agreement be secured establishing bimetallism in this and other countries? The people demand a demonstration, an honest demonstration, on this question. The country will not accept the result if the movement is dominated by those who predict failure from the beginning. Inasmuch as the Senator from Utah has no confidence in success even with the amendment he offers, it occurs to me, since he disclaims, and properly so, responsibility, the wise and prudent course for him is to follow the lead of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] by withdrawing his amendment.

It has been suggested by the eminent Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] that repeated efforts have been made to secure international cooperation in the solution of this money question. That fact can not be gainsaid nor can it be denied; but I submit this observation in connection with the previous efforts made. Never at any time in the history of this Republic have the people, prior to the recent election, made a direct and unquestionable issue upon the methods of procedure and purposes to be accomplished. The American people have made in this respect a determined effort of their own, and during the next four years it will devolve upon the Administration to demonstrate its ability to bring about an agreement or to demonstrate to the country the fact that such an agreement can not be obtained. It is entitled, having this mighty weight of responsibility, to the cordial and friendly cooperation of those who would see silver remonetized by either national or international effort.

Mr. CANNON. Will the Chair kindly state the status of the question at the present moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, after the correction which I made of the statement by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], I did not expect to hear him repeat it in other terms. Subsequently he avers that I have no confidence in the amendment which I have proposed to the pending measure and that I disclaim all responsibility for it. Neither assertion is correct, Mr. President. I have confidence to the full extent stated by me in correcting the former assertion of the Senator from Montana. I think that I have fully as much confidence in the proposed amendment as the mover of the bill has in his own measure, and fully as much confidence in this effort for international agreement as has the Senator from Montana, whose record has been so long and so well known on this question that I may practically claim to have occupied with him identically the same ground up to the convention of last June.

Mr. President, except for the tragic element which enters into the lives and fortunes of the American people under the gold standard, this movement and the new ethics asserted for it here would have the air of grotesqueness for the American people. This measure is supported by a caucus of a party whose commanding figures do not believe that so-called "fixity of value" of gold and silver can be accomplished by the legislation of one nation or the agreement of all nations. It is supported by the caucus of a party whose newspapers declare that we are on the gold standard now, the standard of "the most enlightened nations of the earth," and that it is folly to attempt international agreement—newspapers which ridicule the pledge to promote international agreement in the platform of their own party. It is supported by the caucus of a party whose financial pillars declare that ruin and national dishonor will follow further attempts in this direction.

I am willing to waive all that, however, and, as I stated, I am willing to vote for the bill. But, at the risk of shattering the sanctities of this place, I take the liberty of questioning the propriety of the new ethics which have been presented to us here for political action and for parliamentary practice.

Both the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Montana declare that it is our duty to submit this entire question to the party recently elected to power. If it has become the duty of a minority here or elsewhere in this Republic to allow a majority to work its own sweet will upon legislation, then the seats of the minority should be vacated in this Chamber. So soon as a President is elected, if his party shall have control of both branches of the National Legislature, all opposition to their purpose should cease; and then we would see destroyed the greatest guardianship which the rights of the people have had through the centuries—the watchfulness and the courage of a minority acting as a restraint or an impulsion upon the majority. The distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], whose remarks we listened to recently on the Maritime Canal Company, would under the same proposition owe it as a duty to his country and his constituency to allow the proponents of the Maritime Canal bill to pass it without an amendment and in their own form, because they have faith in it and he has not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah will please suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3247) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," approved February 20, 1889.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside to proceed with the consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Before that request is put, I hope the Senator will give me a moment. I want to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to name a day on which a vote can be taken on the Nicaragua Canal bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator from Utah has not finished his remarks, and I ask unanimous consent that the pending order be laid aside temporarily until he concludes.

Mr. MORGAN. There will be perhaps no objection to that, but at the same time I want to ask the consent of the Senate now, before we act on that matter, to fix a day for voting on the Nicaragua Canal bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest that the Senator from Alabama allow the Senator from Utah to finish his remarks. Then——

Mr. PETTIGREW. It will take but a short time, I think.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire withdraw his request?

Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits the request of the Senator from South Dakota that the pending order be laid aside temporarily in order that the Senator from Utah may conclude his remarks.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, if we shall adopt this plan on this question, the gravest which now confronts the American people, it will have become a precedent that men shall not even interpose to amend tariff laws, and if the Democracy, with a platform of tariff reform or free trade or tariff for revenue, shall some time come to the control of the Government, it will be the duty of those who do not believe that prosperity and success will attend upon the enactment of free-trade legislation here to withhold all objection thereto.

The statement by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] that the friends of this measure have prepared it in precisely the form that they desire it to become a law, and that efforts to modify or amend would probably result only in its defeat, came to me as a great surprise. The Senator sat in this Chamber at a time not long distant when there was proposed here by the opposing party a tariff measure. The proponents of that bill declared that it would give freedom to American industry, greater prosperity to American homes. The believers in it, according to this doctrine, should have had permission to enact it precisely in the form in which it came from the House, if ratified by the majority then in the Senate. But the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire took it upon himself, in the interest of his fellow-citizens of this Republic, to offer numerous amendments thereto, as did other gentlemen. I question, sir, whether it is proper to assert, even for the sake of gaining political advantage, that the possession of power by any party in the Republic gives it the right to work its will without restraint, without amendment, without comment, or without correction.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Utah allow me a word?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator has mistaken the point in his discussion of what he calls an ethical principle that has been asserted here. I did not notice that it was an ethical principle. The point is precisely what I shall state, not the one the Senator states now. The bill is proposed in a Senate a majority of whose members confessedly do not believe that there will come a successful result from an international agreement, and it can not pass if, feeling that way, they choose to vote "no." In presenting the bill to the Senate under such circumstances we necessarily appeal to the generosity of those who do not believe there can be any successful result. Now, if they choose to vote it down, that is perfectly proper and legitimate. If, however, they do not choose to vote it down, they ought to show large consideration for the framers of the project and not undertake to load the project with amendments that may defeat its passage through Congress, and if it passes may defeat the object of the conference. I think I make my statement so the Senator will not do me, or any other Senator who has made that appeal, any injustice hereafter.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I understand the Senator perfectly well, and I do not see any difference now between the position assumed by him and that which I asserted as having been assumed not only by himself in his original remarks on this bill, but by the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Montana. I do not understand, sir, that there has been any contention by the majority of this body that international agreement for bimetallism is an impossibility. The Senator from New Hampshire says that a majority of this Chamber is confessedly in favor of this measure.

Mr. CHANDLER. Excuse me. The Senator, unintentionally no doubt, misrepresents me. I did not say that a majority of the Chamber were not in favor of trying an international conference. I said that a majority of this Chamber had no faith that a successful result would ensue. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], I think, has little or no faith that bimetallism will be achieved, but still he thinks this bill ought to pass.

Mr. CANNON. Why, Mr. President, we are splitting hairs here. If men have no faith in a method, certainly they are not in favor of it. Sincere and conscientious men will not be in favor of a thing that they have no faith in. I recognize that a great many Senators here will undoubtedly vote for the bill in such form as it shall be when finally presented upon its passage, not necessarily because they have entire confidence in the success of the measure, but because they are willing that the party about to come into power shall be at liberty to make the attempt.

However, I do not think that we should be restricted in our right to insert such language in the bill as will make it effective and as will make it mandatory upon the President of the United States to call an international conference. It has been stated here repeatedly that the record of foreign conferences has been one of humiliation. If we must fawn forever at the feet of those who control the finances of the world, let us at least preserve self-respect and do it when we are their hosts and they are in our habitation, instead of doing it when we are their guests.

I believe the American people have the right to know the manner in which international conferences to secure bimetallism are conducted. I believe that the very fact stated by the Senator from New Hampshire that the Western Hemisphere is for bimetallism will have its effect upon the conferees whom Europe shall send. We saw not long since an illustration of the effect of locality. Last year there was held a convention in the city of Indianapolis at which was nominated the only gold-standard candidate for the Presidency of the United States. When the bankers of this country wanted to hold a conference in the interest of the gold standard, they promptly called it to meet at Indianapolis. The aroma of the former convention was still there. All men are affected by environment, and perhaps Europe's conferees at the conference, if held here, might be swayed advantageously.

It seems to me, sir, that if all else connected with the amendment which I have proposed shall be struck out, we should retain that provision which makes it mandatory upon the President of the United States to call the conference within ninety days after he shall have assumed his high office, and to appoint Washington as the place of the conference.

I presume, sir, since the introduction by the Senator from Georgia of the amendment which the Senator from New Hampshire says is satisfactory to him, that we can not get an amendment which will go to the length proposed by mine, but I shall insist upon a vote. Failing to carry my amendment, I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. Failing to get that, I shall be willing to vote for the bill in its original form, trusting that something better will come from this movement than has been predicted by those gentlemen who have absolutely no faith in attempts for an international conference.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now renew my request.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit me to ask that I may be indulged, say four or five minutes only?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent——

Mr. MORGAN. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the unfinished business, which was laid before the Senate at 2 o'clock, and which was temporarily displaced at the request of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. CHANDLER. Now I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, in order that the consideration of Senate bill 3547 may be continued.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, that the international conference bill may be proceeded with.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think Senate bill 3547 can be finished to-day, if the Senator from Alabama will allow it to go on. The Nicaragua Canal bill, I am sorry to say, can not be concluded to-day. I am ready to vote upon it, and, to propitiate the Senator from Alabama a little, I will say I am ready to vote for it now, but I think it could not be finished to-day, and that the international monetary conference bill could be completed, if the Senator would allow it to be proceeded with.

Mr. MORGAN. Can the Senator get an hour fixed for voting upon the international conference bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask that there may be a vote upon the bill at 2 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. WHITE and others. Let us vote to-day.

Mr. FRYE. Why can we not vote to-day?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is suggested by Senators that I am too liberal, as I usually am in such matters, and therefore I will modify my request by saying 4 o'clock this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to vote upon Senate bill 3547 and the amendments thereto at 4 o'clock this evening. Is there objection?

Mr. TURPIE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana objects.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from New Hampshire will see that I am not left any option. I am obliged to insist upon my proposition.

Mr. TURPIE. I will withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana withdraws his objection. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, so far as I am concerned, I consent that the regular order, the Nicaragua Canal bill, shall be laid aside until the vote is taken——

Mr. WHITE. That it shall be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. MORGAN. That it shall be temporarily laid aside until the vote is taken upon the pending measure, when it will be resumed without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, that the business which has been before the Senate may be completed? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

Mr. HOAR. I desire, if the Senator from Georgia will pardon me, to address an inquiry to the Senator from Alabama.

I am one of those, as I suppose the Senator knows very well, who have endeavored to follow him and his committee in regard to the very important and interesting measure which he has in charge, and I hope and expect to continue to do so. But the Senator must see that a Senate bill which has given rise to so much discussion here, and about which the action of other branches of the Government, both at this end of the Avenue and the other, would certainly be a subject of great anxiety to the friends of the bill hereafter, I suppose I trangress no propriety in saying, ought not to prevent the Senate from accomplishing any other legislative business. If eight or ten opponents of the bill, the Senate having made up its mind and having considered the matter for years, are to address the Senate, as is their right and their duty—I make no complaint of that—and then they have to be answered at equal length, answering arguments against the bill which have not made much impression on the majority of the Senate, there is great danger not only that the bill will fail, but that it will drag down all other legislation that anyone has any interest in with it.

For one, expressing my profoundest interest in the measure and my purpose to follow the Senator from Alabama with great fidelity as an able leader, I desire to appeal to him to ask the Senate to fix a time for the disposition of the bill. If that be objected to, then I desire to ask that Senator to propose at as early a day as possible that the Senate continue in session to-night, or to-morrow night, or Monday night. Perhaps it would not do to propose it at so late an hour to-day for to-night, as the Senate has not expected to continue in session, but I ask the Senator to propose to take up the bill and continue its consideration until it is disposed of.

I beg the Senator to excuse me if I have interfered improperly in this matter.

Mr. MORGAN. Not in the slightest degree. I wish to say this about it: I gave notice on the day before yesterday, on the intimation of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], that I should ask the Senate on yesterday to sit this bill out. It was very apparent, however, to Senators here that there was a necessity for an executive session, which was protracted until the hour of 4 o'clock in the afternoon. It was equally apparent at that hour that no progress of any value could be made upon the Nicaraguan Canal bill, and Senators all around appealed to me that they should be allowed to go to the Calendar and pass unobjected cases, which I think is an important duty that we owe to each other, and I yielded for that purpose. This morning there comes this very important international silver question, brought up in the morning hour and continued over until 2 o'clock. As an act of courtesy to the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON], I yielded the floor and asked that he might be permitted to finish his remarks. Then the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], thinking it was a great matter, which should be attended to—and it is—asked that the further consideration of the Nicaraguan Canal bill might be laid aside to let his bill come to a vote. I then proposed that he should name an hour for voting on the silver bill, and he named the hour of 4 o'clock, which I thought was a reasonable adjustment, and that we could then get that out of the way.

Mr. President, I never get as badly scolded for anything I do here as for those things which are exactly right, and when I do a thing that is exactly right I am always looking out for censure.

Mr. HOAR. All I have done was to ask the Senator to make this application, which I have no doubt he would like to do.

Mr. MORGAN. I gave notice, following up the intimation of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], that immediately we take up this bill and proceed with the consideration of it, and if Senators will remain with me here, I will stay all night, if it be necessary, though I am not a young man now.

Mr. CULLOM (to Mr. MORGAN). First ask the Senate to fix a time for taking the final vote.

Mr. MORGAN. I was about to make that suggestion. I have frequently asked the Senate to fix an hour or a day for voting on the Nicaraguan bill. I will ask now that on Tuesday next—I think that is probably time enough for all debate necessary—at the hour of 4 o'clock we commence voting on the bill without further debate, except under the ten-minute rule on amendments, and continue until the bill is finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock on Tuesday the Senate proceed to vote upon the Nicaragua bill. Does the Chair understand the Senator to ask that the debate continue after 4 o'clock?

Mr. MORGAN. On amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And that at 4 o'clock on Tuesday amendments to the bill be debated under the ten-minute rule, and that the vote be taken at what hour?

Mr. MORGAN. That the vote be taken at 5 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And that the vote be taken at 5 o'clock upon the bill and amendments. Is there objection?

Mr. TURPIE. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana objects.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust now the Senator from Alabama will not give his notice to sit this bill out on Monday, but will postpone that also for a day. I trust that he will ask that the Senate begin the consideration of the bill on Monday immediately after the routine morning business. I think that at the conclusion of a short session there is an impediment in the transaction of business here by dividing our day into two parts. We have seen here the bill of the Senator from New Hampshire occupying a week after the routine morning business until 2 o'clock. Then we have seen two weeks occupied from that hour until 4 o'clock usually in the consideration of the important question which the Senator from Alabama has in charge. If we are to transact any business from now until the end of the session, we must begin after the routine morning business with whatever we have in hand and go on with it, certainly, until 6 o'clock every evening, and after an opportunity for reasonable debate, we must vote on it, whether we vote it up or vote it down. I hope also that we shall sit here nights.

Mr. MORGAN. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa with great satisfaction, and admit the validity and force of the suggestions he has made in support of his intimation to me. That Senator knows as much about the business of the Senate of the United States and of Congress as any man on this floor, and has been a long time intimately connected with it in the most important sense. I concur with him that the better way certainly is to commence at the conclusion of the routine morning business on Tuesday.

Mr. ALLISON. On Monday.

Mr. CULLOM. And follow it up until the matter is disposed of.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say on Monday; and I hope that the Senate will enable me to bring this subject to a vote at some reasonable hour after it shall have taken the subject up as I have now suggested. On Monday, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, I desire to advise Senators that I shall move to take up this bill with that view.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to give notice that immediately after the disposition of the Nicaraguan Canal bill I shall ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the unfinished business, which is the bankruptcy bill.

Mr. BACON obtained the floor.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator pardon me one moment?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Alabama gave notice that he would move to take the bill up immediately after the routine morning business on Monday. If he succeeded in having the bill taken up at that time, it would then be within the morning hour, where there is no such thing as unfinished business, and the bill would lose its place as unfinished business. I think the Senator ought to ask unanimous consent that the bill may be taken up immediately after the routine business on Monday morning, and that it shall not lose its position as unfinished business at 2 o'clock.

Mr. MORGAN. Perhaps I may modify the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that in his opinion the bill would not lose its position as unfinished business if taken up in the morning hour.

Mr. HOAR. What the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] suggests has not been the custom.

Mr. ALDRICH. That has not been the custom of the Senate, I would suggest to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. It has not been?

Mr. ALDRICH. No; I am sure of that.

Mr. FRYE. Then it is unnecessary. My own impression was that the bill would lose its place as the unfinished business by being taken up in the morning hour.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose no Senator, whatever he may think, will object when it is understood that the unfinished business, whatever it may be, is not to lose whatever rights it now has; and I wish it understood that this is to apply both to the Nicaraguan bill and the bankruptcy bill. That was understood.

Mr. TURPIE. I do not understand that the Senator from Alabama——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana will please excuse the Chair.

Mr. TURPIE. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts desire the request he has made to be put to the Senate, for unanimous consent?

Mr. HOAR. I desire to have it understood; yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the rule of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. If that is the rule, I will not ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair simply rules in accordance with what is his judgment upon the subject.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, I did not understand the honorable Senator from Alabama to ask unanimous consent to make the Nicaraguan Canal bill the unfinished business immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business, but only to give notice that he will at that time move to take it up.

Mr. MORGAN. That is all.

Mr. TURPIE. Of course, I have no objection to that.

Mr. MORGAN. That is all I propose.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, there was one expression in the remarks of the honorable Senator from Alabama which I intended to discuss, in which he said that all debate on this bill which would be necessary would be finished by such a time. I do not think it is possible at this time for any Senator to say as to when necessary debate will be finished. I do not think it is possible at this time for the Senator from Alabama to say when necessary debate should be finished upon this measure, nor when necessary debate would be finished on any measure which is pending before us.

I recollect some four or five years ago addressing the Senate on the subject of the cloture, in which an attempt was made to lay down the line at which resistance should cease by those who were opposed to a measure pending in this body. We are far from that line now. The true divisional line has not yet been reached. As soon as that trocha may have been reached, it will be time enough to talk about fixing an hour and a day for an ultimate vote upon the bill.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, there are two resolutions which have been introduced by my colleague, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], with respect to the foreclosure proceedings instituted by direction of the President against the Union Pacific Railway Company. I desire simply to give notice that I wish to speak on those resolutions before they are in any way disposed of or referred; but I have no desire to press for an opportunity to do so at any early day.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, on yesterday I offered an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized, in the name of the Government of the United States, to call, in his discretion, such international conference, to assemble at such point as may be agreed upon.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not wish to be understood as expressing in that amendment all that I think ought to be provided in the pending bill. As an original proposition, I should very much prefer the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON]; in other words, I think that the bill ought to provide definitely not only that this international conference may be called, but that it shall be called. But I recognize the fact that in order for this bill to accomplish anything, either directly or indirectly, it must be such a bill as the promoters and friends of it agree to. Therefore, my only object in offering the amendment is to make it sufficiently definite to put the responsibility for either the calling or the not calling of this proposed international conference upon the political party which seeks to promote it.

As stated on yesterday, the bill in its present form, without the amendments, while it may be susceptible to the construction which has been put upon it by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], to the effect that it does already empower the President of the United States thus to call this conference—while this may be the proper construction, it is possible that there may be a difference of opinion upon it. The object of this amendment is simply to put that out of the pale of doubt or question.

I repeat, Mr. President, that if the Senators who favor the passage of this bill, and who seek to promote this international conference, would agree to it, I should very much prefer the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah; but I think it would be a mistake to impose upon the bill, even if we had the power to do so, any amendment to which they do not agree and on account of which amendment they may hereafter say that the bill failed of accomplishing its purpose.

The distinguished Senator who has charge of this bill has signified his acceptance of my amendment. Therefore it is the same, so far as the question of responsibility goes, as if it had been incorporated in the original draft of the bill.

I wish to say but one word with reference to the question of supporting this bill. There are those who have spoken to-day and on yesterday who agree with me on the general propositions relative to financial matters connected with coinage, but who are not disposed to give their support to this bill. The distinguished Senator from New Hampshire called the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that I was supporting the bill while I did not have faith in it, and to that the Senator from Utah responded that a Senator who did not have faith in the bill ought not to give it his support.

Mr. President, while I do not think there is any great probability of a successful issue in this attempt, I do recognize the fact that there is a possibility of such successful result; but even if I should be of the opinion that there is no possibility of success, I think that the bill ought to pass, for the reason that, whatever may be the opinion which I and others may have upon the question whether this matter of international bimetallism can be accomplished, there is no doubt about the fact that there are a great many people in the United States who are opposed to the single gold standard, who yet are standing upon the proposition that the only safe way to attempt bimetallism is through international agreement, and who believe that it is practicable to accomplish it through international agreement. They, like ourselves, are opposed to the single gold standard, and yet they do not cooperate with us because they think it ought to be done through the medium of an international agreement and not by independent action on the part of the United States Government.

Now, if those who have pledged themselves to promote international bimetallism are allowed to do it in their own way, if no impediments are thrown in the way, if, on the contrary, they are to the extent of our votes in support of the bill aided in their effort, one of two things must be demonstrated. It may be a success. If it is, I shall welcome it and be glad of it. If it is not a success, it will be forever an answer to the proposition that this Government ought not to proceed because it can be done in another way which is more practicable. For that reason I think the distinguished Senator from Utah is incorrect in his criticism when he says that one who has not faith in the success of the movement ought not to support the bill. On the contrary, I think all of us who favor bimetallism ought to support the bill, to give full opportunity to have the question tested in the fairest way, whether or not it can be done in this way.

I repeat, if it can be done in this way, although it will be an overthrow of the views which I have entertained, I shall be glad of the success. If it can be demonstrated that it can not be obtained in this way, then the road is open for the attempt more properly and successfully to be made in the way which I think this Government ought to proceed in the effort.

I do not desire, Mr. President, to follow the distinguished Senators in any discussion which has been had upon this subject as to whether or not it can be a success or will not be a success. I do not think that is a material question in the issue whether or not this bill should be voted for by those of us who are opposed to a single gold standard. For myself I shall vote for it, and I shall be very glad to see every other Senator who is opposed to the gold standard cast a like vote.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I agree to almost all that has been said by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. I am a strong believer in bimetallism. I should be gratified beyond measure to have bimetallism accomplished by the concurrent consent of the great nations of the earth. I am one of those who have believed that it was impossible to get the nations of the world to agree to bimetallism for the present, and believing that the best interests of the people of the United States would be subserved by independent action if we could not procure concurrent action, I have favored independent action on the part of this Government.

I believe that hundreds of thousands of people in the recent election voted against the party to which I belong and for the other party because they had been made to believe that an international agreement was possible, and that the results which we all wanted could be brought about with less disturbance to business interests and with less danger to existing conditions by an international agreement than by our own independent action. The result of the election was against us. I believe that those people should have the opportunity to try the experiment, so as to determine whether or not an international agreement is feasible.

As was stated by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] a while ago, I regard the recent election as an almost unanimous declaration in favor of bimetallism. The method of procuring bimetallism seems to be the point of difference between the people of this country. Now, we are at a point when we are to determine whether or not we shall try the experiment, and whether or not international bimetallism is practical. I am in favor of allowing those who believe in that scheme to make a full and complete trial in their own way without any obstruction on our part. I confess that I have little faith in its success, but I feel that those who do believe in it ought to be allowed the fullest and freest liberty to do try it completely, so as to satisfy themselves and satisfy the people of this country who believe in bimetallism and yet who fear to take independent action on the part of the people of this country.

This scheme is not ours; we have not originated it; we do not believe it is the proper scheme for the solution of these difficulties; but there seems to be a large percentage of the people of this country who believe it, and, they believing it, I am in favor of their having a full and complete opportunity to try their plan. If it succeeds, I shall rejoice heartily with them. I believe the greatest question now challenging the attention of the civilized people in the world will have been settled and settled successfully if they can bring about an international agreement. If they fail in this, and they demonstrate that it is impracticable and impossible, then it seems to me that their failure will be a statement to the American people that we must either lie down before the powers of Europe and surrender our manhood absolutely, or that we shall assert ourselves as independent men and do that which the interests of our own country demand, and act for ourselves. It seems to me that the only question which can be presented which is likely to cause any difference of opinion amongst our people will have been swept out of the way, and that we shall have brought the pleadings down to plain and positive issue.

For this purpose and for this reason I agree with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] that the friends of this measure ought to have the absolute control of it. I shall not vote for a single amendment to their bill which they do not themselves accept. I do not propose to become in a measure responsible for it. I think, for instance, if there should be a majority of silver men in this Senate, and we should vote for the substitute proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON], we would at once become responsible for its enactment; it would then become our measure, and not the measure of the Republicans, not the measure of those who believe in international bimetallism, and we should be responsible for its failure in the event that it should fail. I propose to allow the responsibility to rest where it belongs, on those who believe in international bimetallism—those who believe it can be accomplished. Let us give them the fullest opportunity to try. If they succeed, I shall rejoice and bid them godspeed in their efforts to bring it about. I hope they may succeed, but I have very little faith in the effort.

Under these circumstances, I should be glad to see those who think as I do stand in the same attitude that I do toward this measure, and allow the friends of it to arrange it as they please and to put it in such shape as they choose. Let them pass it and take the responsibility for it if it should fail; and if it should succeed, as I have said, I will rejoice as much in their success as any of them.

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. President, it was not my intention to address the Senate on the pending measure, but inasmuch as amendments have been offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], I must, in justice to myself and the constituency which I in part represent, explain my vote, which will be recorded in opposition to the proposed amendments and in favor of the pending bill.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the authors of these amendments did not take into full consideration the fact that the President-elect was nominated after the adoption of a platform declaring, among other things, that:

> We demand such an equitable tariff on foreign imports which come into competition with the American product as will not only furnish adequate revenue for the necessary expenses of the Government, but will protect American labor from degradation and the wage level of other lands. We are not pledged to any particular schedule. The question of rates is a practical question, to be governed by the conditions of the time and of production. The ruling and uncompromising principle is the protection and development of American labor and industries.

The platform also declared in favor of an international agreement with the leading commercial nations of the earth relating to the coinage of gold and silver. On these declarations of party principles the President was elected.

The measure presented by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] was intended to give full authority to the President-elect to carry into effect the declaration relating to international bimetallism. I wish it distinctly understood that I have always been, and am now, an advocate of unrestricted coinage when it shall come before the Senate in a proper way, but not as a rider to any other important bill or measure, for remonetization is too important a subject to be considered in connection with other measures.

It is my opinion that these amendments are out of place at this time, inasmuch as the pending bill was intended to give the President authority to appoint commissioners to an international congress for the purpose of securing an agreement for international bimetallism. The President-elect is pledged by the Republican platform to exert his influence in accomplishing this result. Should he fail, it will then be proper for Congress to take action looking to the remonetization of silver.

Mr. President, it is not my intention to cast the slightest reflection upon the Senators who have offered the proposed amendments. I do not accuse them of bad faith, or of thwarting or trying to thwart the President-elect of the United States on the threshold of his Administration, but I believe that if these amendments should be adopted, such would be the result. The amendments are not in accord with the platform upon which he was elected, and I take it that he should have an opportunity, without being trammeled in any way, to carry into execution the declarations upon which he was elected.

I therefore sincerely hope that my friends the distinguished Senator from Nevada and the distinguished Senator from Utah will not insist upon the adoption of their amendments.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to say one or two words upon this matter, not to delay the vote. A good many Senators have spoken as if they think the possibility of an international arrangement for bimetallism is a mere chimera or dream, and have almost implied that those persons who propose to make the attempt are endeavoring to mislead somebody or cajole somebody or turn the attention of somebody away from what is practical in this matter. But I think those gentlemen fail to take into consideration one or two facts. There is no doubt whatever that a very large majority of the people of the civilized world are in favor of having what is known as the double standard—gold and silver—prevail. Look at the condition of public sentiment in the United States. There are a few worthy gentlemen who agree with what I understand is the opinion of my very able and industrious friend from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], which he has just announced. But the Democratic party and the Populist party, the supporters of Mr. Bryan, who are counted by millions in this country, believe that doctrine.

The Republican party, so far as it can be judged by its platform, has declared its belief in that doctrine, and has pledged itself to promote this result. There are a few exceptions, as I have said. There is the exception represented by my honorable friend the Senator from Wisconsin. Then there is my honorable friend the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], who says, if I understand him correctly, that he does not want foreign nations to agree to use silver as a money with us, and have it established for their benefit. He wants some money in this country, if I understand him correctly, which is so poor and cheap and miserable that even a Jap or a Chinaman will not touch it.

Mr. STEWART. I do not desire to have it so dear that an American can not get it, as it is now.

Mr. HOAR. The Americans have been getting it pretty well. The wage earners of this country have laid up what is represented by it, fifteen or sixteen hundred million dollars, in the savings banks, where they are not allowed to make a deposit of more than $500 at once or more than $1,500 in one name. The money power that the Senator talks about—the money power that carried the election last fall—was the money power of the men who earn it with their hands on farms and in factories, and who have laid it up as savings; and that money power is in favor of international bimetallism.

Mr. STEWART. Did nobody contribute to the election but laboring men?

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. HOAR. A good many thinking men did, as well as laboring men who were thinking.

Mr. President, how is it in foreign nations? I had some exceptional and unusual means of learning something about the matter this last summer when I was abroad. I had the pleasure of a long conversation with the foremost bimetallist in France, M. Fougeirot, who last summer introduced into the French Assembly a resolution declaring that the present depressed condition of agriculture and manufactures and commerce in France was owing to the demonetization of silver, and pledging France to cooperate with other countries in its restoration. In the French Assembly when they introduce an important measure it is not introduced by one person alone, but very frequently the mover goes about and gets the signatures of the men who agree with him before it is presented, and that resolution bore the signatures, I think, of 367 out of 450 members; at any rate, between three-fifths and four-fifths of the Assembly. M. Melin, then and now the premier, made a speech in the French Assembly on that question in which he declared that when other countries would reestablish silver they would not have to wait for France.

Now, that is a pretty respectable addition. It is a pretty respectable capital to start with in getting this union among nations—the pledge of the party that carried this country in the last election to do it if they can, the pledge of the party who opposed them, except the Senator from Nevada, that gray-haired and hoary hermit who stands alone in this matter, that they would be glad to see it done and would help them in every way in their power, and the pledge of nearly four-fifths of the French Assembly. They have a bimetallic league that met, of which M. Melin was president, and of which his predecessor as prime minister is an honorary president. That bimetallic league represents among other persons delegations from every agricultural society in every province of France. Those agricultural societies in France are not merely associations of gentlemen devoted to fancy farming and stock raising. They are men who wield the political power and represent the political purpose of the farmers of France, now, as always, an irresistible power in shaping its policy; and with one accord, without exception, the representatives of those great French interests agree in saying that France is eager to unite with any other country.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to make this statement, and I will answer any question afterwards.

Now, we come to England. I know very well the power of that square mile in London where the accounts of the world are summed up and where England sits, where London sits, taking her toll upon the exchanges of the industries of mankind. After the great fire in 1660 the great English poet pictured the restoration of the city of London, and that picture is as true to-day as it was when it was first drawn:

> More great than ever now, and more august,
> Now glorified she from her fires doth rise,
> Her widening streets on new foundations trust
> And opening, into larger parts she flies.
> Now, like a maiden queen, she doth behold
> To her high turrets hourly suitors come,
> The East with incense, and the West with gold,
> Shall stand, like suppliants, to receive her doom.

Mr. STEWART. That is true.

Mr. HOAR. I agree with the Senator from Nevada. I do not mean to have the people of the United States stand up to be counted in that company.

But how is it on the question of international bimetallism in England? I had the opportunity of a full conversation with Mr. Balfour, the present leader of the House of Commons. His opinions are known. He has made them known by his signature to the great report twelve years ago by the commission of which he was chairman. He has made them known in public speeches in the House of Commons.

Mr. STEWART rose.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to conclude this statement. Then I will answer any question. I have a mental infirmity which makes it impossible for me to resume a thread which is broken off in that way, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. STEWART. That is not the only mental infirmity.

Mr. HOAR. I have a good many. One of the disorders under which I labor is in being three score and ten years old, of which I do not expect to be cured. If I were young, like my friend the Senator from Nevada, I would get along better.

That gentleman has made known in every way in which it can be made known his opinion in favor of the establishment of international bimetallism by the concurrence of the civilized and commercial nations. He has defended that opinion in the House of Commons against the brutal position of Mr. Gladstone and Sir William Harcourt.

Mr. STEWART. Let me ask the Senator right here——

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to be interrupted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts declines to yield.

Mr. HOAR. I decline to yield, if the Senator will pardon me. I will yield a little later on. I hope the Senator will not think it discourteous.

Mr. STEWART. I always yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I know the Senator does.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator is making a statement in regard to a particular man, and I want to call his attention——

Mr. HOAR. I was present at a brilliant company in London, a lunch, and spoke of this conversation with Mr. Balfour. I said that I did not wish to repeat what he had said to me, because I did not think public men liked to have their opinions related at secondhand, and for that reason I do not repeat it here. They prefer to do it for themselves. When I said that, a gentleman, an eminent member of the cabinet of the present Government, there being two other members of the cabinet present, said, "Mr. HOAR, it is no secret that Mr. Balfour's opinions on this matter are those of a majority of Her Majesty's Government."

I am aware, as I said, of the difficulties. I suppose if Her Majesty's Government were to undertake to pledge England to complete international bimetallism next week, they would be overthrown by the power that dwells within the square mile in London, and they know it; and I suppose, with the other difficulties they have on their hands, they are not ready to do it. That, I concede, is a difficulty which may defeat this attempt—very possibly.

Now, how is it in Germany? I have in my hand a letter from one of the most eminent public men in Germany—a member of the Reichstag. I will not read the whole letter, and I will not give the name of the writer. The Senate will have to take what I say about it on my authority, therefore, and not on the authority of the writer himself. But he repeats and reaffirms this statement, which is in the second paragraph:

> Besides having a bimetallic majority in our parliament, we are also backed up by a majority in the Prussian cabinet; and though still obliged to cry, "Not without England as a full partner," I consider it not at all improbable that Germany may under certain circumstances join a bimetallic union even without England.
> Now, the appreciation of the currency question is growing, but to accomplish that means facing a great many more difficulties, and, worst of all, it would cause long delay and great danger to the supremacy of European civilization.

Then the writer makes some discussion about the personal qualities of the chancellor and the Emperor which it is not proper for me to read. But he goes on to express his opinion that Russia will be ready for this same union when the time comes, and he quotes a letter from a Russian friend of his, in which the latter says:

> If the present French Government play their cards well, I am sure that Russia would decide for bimetallism if at the same time the United States would adopt free silver and France contributed, too, in that direction. My fear in all these diplomatic negotiations is that the diplomatists in general have never studied the question and know nothing about it, etc.

I do not wish to be understood in saying this as expressing confidence that this consummation is at hand at all, but I wish to state that the time has come for another effort. I wish to state that this opinion in these four great nations, France, Germany, the United States, and England, saying nothing of Russia and of the smaller Latin nations or of the smaller nations on the north—some of whom, though not all, are eager to follow if France and Germany will take the lead—is growing. It will be stronger twelve months hence than it is now. It is stronger now than it was twelve months ago. And it is the opinion of a vast majority of the thinking men, of the men engaged in agriculture, of the men engaged in manufacture, and also of the scholars of the universities of mankind, whether this thing will be accomplished in three months or three years, it is coming, and coming to stay.

Now, Mr. President, I wish, while I am up, to say one word on another subject. Gentlemen in their debates here and in their discussions upon the stump use the word "banker" as if it were a term of opprobrium to be a banker, and as if to be engaged in the business of banking were a degrading occupation; as if a banker is a person who delights to plunder and bleed the poor and the laboring man, a man dealing in bullion and in stocks and speculating in the necessities of life, and desiring to foment financial and industrial troubles and excitements with a view of making his own harvest out of the operation. I saw a statement that during the last political campaign a political procession in which were two Senators of the United States had a banner or transparency with the inscription, "We will yet hang bankers in New York as they do horse thieves in Texas."

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to have the Senator state who the Senators were who rode in that procession.

Mr. HOAR. I do not propose to state who the Senators were. I saw the statement in the papers.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say further to the Senator that if any such banner was carried, it had above it that it was a quotation from Wendell Phillips. Those were his words, and it was a quotation from him.

Mr. HOAR. I dare say; and the Senator could find quotations from Wendell Phillips in which he called George Washington "that slaveholder," and other quotations from Wendell Phillips in which he said that "the Constitution of the United States was a covenant with death and an agreement with hell." I dare say. I do not care. I am talking about the indorsers and not the maker of that sentiment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator if he indorses the last quotation which he has just made?

Mr. HOAR. Not in the least. I do not put it on my banner, and I do not walk in a procession that bears it. Perhaps the Senator from South Dakota knows who the Senators were.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, there never was a greater mistake on the face of the earth. Of course there are in commercial cities men, men of wealth, men who get hold of banks, who are swindlers, who are defaulters, who are speculators, who are schemers, who are oppressors, just as in great cities there are men who are robbers and pickpockets and thieves of another kind, not any the less respectable, I agree. But in the main the bankers of New England, of which section I speak, are as good and respectable a body of men as can be found in this country. The direction of our national banks is made up in this way. Generally there will be eight or nine directors. It is true in every single instance in my city of 100,000 inhabitants. Five or six of those directors will be men retired from business, elderly men, not men of large wealth usually, but the sort of men whom you would trust, if you were to die to-morrow and leave an infant daughter of 2 years old, with your estate as her trustee, and be sure that twenty or thirty years hence it would be there, every penny of it safely accounted for. They are the sort of men selected to settle estates, that men take advice of in their private affairs. They have no personal end, but merely spend their lives in that way. Then two or three of those directors usually belong to mercantile or manufacturing establishments for the sake of borrowing money of the banks. They borrow up to the limit. They are engaged perhaps in a wire company or a woolen mill or a large dry goods house. If it is a village bank, the head of the village factory will be one of the directors.

But they are all men who desire to borrow money at the lowest possible rate, not to pay large rates, and they are men to whom a financial or business disturbance or the throwing of men out of work is especially odious, because, if for no other reason, their business is destroyed or injured by it. That is the way the banking system of New England is carried on, and I appeal with entire confidence to every New England Senator within sound of my voice if I have not given a correct description of them.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is right.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Massachusetts ought to go one step further. There is an enormous sum in the savings banks of New England which belongs to the workingmen.

Mr. HOAR. I was coming to that within a moment. I was speaking of national banks.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that all of the directors work without any pay whatever in seeking to invest this money for the poor people.

Mr. HOAR. We have $466,000,000 in the savings banks of my State, banks in which you can deposit, I believe, but $500 at any one time, and where you can not ever deposit more than fifteen or sixteen hundred dollars. I am not sure whether it is fifteen or sixteen hundred dollars. That is immaterial. The depositors in those savings banks are the wage earners of the State and their wives and children. They are the men who do the work of the State on the farms, in the factories, in the machine shops, and in all other branches of labor, and the same kind of men, as my honorable friend the Senator from Maine so well says, who manage the other banks manage these. There have been some cases of banks plundered, and of one or two savings banks' treasurers who have been defaulters. But there is no way in which the management of the concern makes a dollar out of any speculation. A director in a national bank may have a little stock. It is very seldom that a director will have more than a few thousand dollars of stock in his bank.

Mr. HAWLEY. Scarcely any of our banks have any stock to be held.

Mr. HOAR. The savings banks have no stock at all, of course. They are merely depositories. These banks are strictly regulated by law, and they are visited and carefully examined by the savings banks commissioner on the part of the State, and in the case of national banks by the United States bank examiner on the part of the nation.

Mr. President, I wish to protest against this public sentiment which has grown up. They talk about some things that have been said in the East about the West. You never hear speakers on the hustings, on the stump, in addressing any public meeting in the New England States or anywhere else in the East use an expression of opprobrium about the West. They know that the interest of New England is a prosperous West and a prosperous South. They know that we are all in one boat. They know that the political power of this Government is passing, like the star of empire, westward, and they expect it. There has not been a measure since I have been in public life or since I have known public affairs, the homestead law or any other great measure, the laws for building those railroads, and opening the Western prairies, where we have not followed the statesmen of the Western States as our leaders.

We do not think you can establish silver by this country alone. We think you must have a money which will remain stable and fixed in its value as near as the lot of humanity will admit, and that for that purpose two metals are better than one. Most of us think so. We think that if you establish and undertake to have the silver of the world coined without limit in our mints you will drive out the gold by an inexorable law; that you will get one metal, and not two; that you will get a metal which in that case will be changeable and fluctuating, going up and down like the thermometer on an April day. We think, also, that you will not have as much money then as you have now when our gold is sent off to Europe. It does not at all follow because you have cheap, poor money that it will be plenty. You have to work to get it. I have known a good many men who had very cheap and nasty clothes, and yet they did not have a great many of them. Plenty, as long as civilized man has civilized tastes, is not the necessary accompaniment of cheapness, or worthlessness, or nastiness.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to protest against this public opinion which denounces not only the whole people of the section where I live, but the worthy people whom the workingmen of the section in which I live trust to manage their savings for them in this way.

I think these great delusions which are fomented upon the stump, and which we can not help, do infinite mischief to the people of this country, taken as a whole. They do especial mischief, Mr. President, to the people who believe them and act upon them and base their public conduct upon them.

A great preacher, half a century ago, uttered a truth which some of our friends who talk about the bankers of the East and the crime of 1873, I think, sooner or later, will have occasion to bring to their own hearts. He said, "When a whole people set themselves to believe a lie, God punishes them with complete success."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as a Republican and as a Senator representing in part a State that cheerfully and willingly assented to the platform adopted at St. Louis, which pledged the Republican party to "promote" international bimetallism, I give my hearty support to the measure now under consideration. I am, however, forced to feel that there is no certainty of the success of this scheme. Indeed, I have very grave doubts that the adoption of this joint resolution will result in the purposes that its promoters have in view; and yet I am profoundly impressed with the feeling that it is the duty of the American people to honestly attempt to bring about this most desirable result.

In the discussion of this question I regret that those participating in it have not in every instance kept themselves to a strict consideration of the question that is now before the Senate. I confess that I was pained on yesterday as I listened to the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] make statements that in my opinion are not borne out by any facts which he can bring to the support of his assertions, and that are calculated to do great injustice and harm to the people of our country. I was astounded to hear the Senator from Nevada say, not for the first time in this Chamber, that there are five millions of American freemen to-day begging bread and suffering the tortures of hunger in the United States. I do not believe that any such condition as that exists; and I am here to say that, in my judgment, it is a libel upon the workingmen of the United States, and an assertion that ought to be rebuked during this discussion. I regretted likewise that the Senator from Nevada, not for the first time, felt it his duty to inform the people of this great country that the silver nations of the world are more prosperous than Great Britain or the United States.

Mr. STEWART. I never made that statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. STEWART. I never made that statement. I said they were more prosperous than they ever had been in the history of those countries.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not interrupt the Senator from Nevada, and if he will observe the courtesies of the Senate he will not interrupt me without my permission. The Senator will have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. STEWART. I will not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have heard the Senator from Nevada time and time again give utterance to precisely the expressions that I have attributed to him, and I am surprised to have him enter a denial of the correctness of my statement. Let us see what the facts are. Turning to the RECORD of this morning, I find the following in the speech of the Senator bearing on this point:

> The universal prosperity of silver-standard countries, by reason of the difference of exchange, leads me to wish that the United States could have like opportunities.

If that does not justify the statements I have made concerning the utterances of the Senator from Nevada, in his own time he will have an opportunity to disabuse my mind and the minds of Senators on that point.

Mr. President, I take issue with the Senator from Nevada, I take issue with the advocates of the free and unlimited coinage of silver in their contention, which they made over and over again during the last national campaign, that the condition of the silver-standard countries is such that the people of the United States need have no fears of any disaster coming to this nation if we adopt the financial policies and laws of the silver countries.

I have on my desk a letter from a gentleman who has traveled extensively all over the world, a gentleman who has traveled in Europe, in Asia, and in South and Central America, and who, under date of October 15, wrote me concerning the condition of the people in the silver countries of South and Central America. I want to put his letter in the RECORD. He says:

> I herewith inclose you a memorandum of the population of the South American states—seventeen in all. There is a population of about 40,000,000 in these countries. Their currency is Mexican silver, and every one of those countries is bankrupt to-day. They have no credit in Europe or America. You could not sell the bonds of many of them for 12 cents on the dollar. The exchange for gold in some of the places is 300 to 400 per cent. I invested about $70,000 in Santo Domingo some eight years ago; to-day it is not worth $10,000. When my investment earns $2.30 in Mexican silver, I only get $1 in gold for it. I received last month $350 gold draft on New York, and my agent paid $775 (Mexican) for it. The Argentine Confederation is bankrupt; Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Guatemala, are all bankrupt. Haiti is beyond being bankrupt. Honduras, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Peru, Santo Domingo, San Salvador, Uruguay, Venezuela, are all in a state of bankruptcy. Now, with these 40,000,000 of inhabitants, if they were to send $5,000,000 of bonds to Europe or the United States, they could not get 10 cents on the dollar for them. They have been made poor, first, because they manufacture nothing but what grows on the top of the ground; second, because they have no currency which the world has any confidence in. It is Mexican silver, and it is almost impossible for a man to do business in those countries on account of the depreciation in the currency. You buy a barrel of flour in New York for $3.50 and ship it out there—to Santo Domingo, for instance—and it sells for $18.50, Mexican.
> I here quote the prices of some of the goods on which they live there:
> Salt pork, 30 cents, Mexican, per pound.
> One pound C sugar (made there), 10 cents, Mexican.
> One barrel flour, $18.50, Mexican.
> One pound salt beef, 25 cents, Mexican.
> One pound ham, 50 cents, Mexican.
> One pound cheese, 50 cents, Mexican.
> One pound potatoes, 12½ cents, Mexican.
> One pound rice, 10 cents, Mexican.
> One pound onions, 20 cents, Mexican.
> One box (5 pounds) herrings, 50 cents, Mexican.
> One pound codfish, 15 to 20 cents.
> One tin coal oil (5 gallons), $3, Mexican.
> The workingmen earn from 80 cents to $1 a day; that is what I pay them. A man could only buy 2 pounds of cheese for a day's work, or 2 pounds of ham. It would take him eighteen and one-half days to earn a barrel of flour, if he got a dollar a day; and if we have free silver in this country, we will be just as bad off as they are. The price of our products would go up, and gold will stay just where it is. There is never any change in gold; it is always in the currency that is inflated by the speculators, and if we have a silver standard, as I said before, every man would have to pay twice as much for his goods and get the same wages he does now, and there would be nothing left but starvation. We do not know what poverty is in this country at all. We pay our people more wages than any other nation in the world, and they are better off than any other nation in the world. You may travel all over the world and look at the working people on Sundays and feast days, and you will find no people that dress as well as the working people in America. Compare the people at Atlantic City and the people at St. Clue on Sunday and you will see the difference. I trust our people will never vote to degrade themselves. Their franchise is the only thing they have left.

If the Senator from Nevada can extract any comfort from that exhibit of the condition of the silver countries to the south of us, he is welcome to it.

Mr. President, I do not care to go into an elaborate discussion of the gold standard or of free silver coinage. I do not think it is germane to the question that is now under consideration by the Senate. But during the last campaign we were treated in New England by Mr. George Fred Williams, the apostle of free silver coinage in our part of the country, to a picture of the prosperity, happiness, and contentment that prevail in the sister Republic of Mexico; and we were told over and over again that we need not fear to adopt a system of currency that would put us on a par with the people of Mexico.

I think I need not say that we are infinitely better off than the people of Mexico are to-day. Our relative condition is not a matter that ought to be dignified by debate in the Senate of the United States. When citizens of this great Republic point us to the prosperity of the people of Mexico, or South America, or Central America, or China, or Japan, or India, as a reason why we should adopt their notions on the currency question, it strikes me that it is an absurdity which is hardly worth mentioning in this debate.

During the four years of the Administration of President Harrison a citizen of my own State was accredited as minister plenipotentiary to a South American republic. Very recently that gentleman has told me that he paid in that silver country $2 a gallon for kerosene oil and $36 a barrel for American flour. What a paradise that is for the intelligent, self-respecting workingman of the United States! Is it not a wonder that every ship that sails from an American port to South America does not carry a cargo of intelligent, self-respecting American workingmen to a country where they can get kerosene oil for $2 a gallon and American flour for $36 a barrel? Yet this is the elysium that these gentlemen are picturing before our eyes, and this is the condition that they say we can with safety to our country and to our people fasten upon the people of the United States.

Mr. President, India and China are the great silver countries of the world. Two days ago an intelligent and highly educated physician from Calcutta presented letters of introduction to me. I talked with him an hour in my committee room, and during that conversation he said to me, "While your bricklayers in America get three or four dollars a day, the bricklayers in Calcutta and Bombay are working for 4 or 5 cents per day;" and then he added sententiously, "But they live very well on that."

Our money is worth about twice what money is in Calcutta and Bombay, and I do not want to see the time come when intelligent American workingmen and mechanics—men laying brick, constructing our great establishments and our homes—shall be compelled to work for 8 or 10 cents a day. If that is prosperity, it is the kind of prosperity that I do not want to see fastened upon the workingmen of the United States.

That is the condition of things as regards India. As for China, we have had to enact laws prohibiting the people of that great silver country from pouring by the thousands and tens of thousands into the United States to better their condition, to accumulate money here to be carried back to the land from whence they came.

Mr. President, that is the feast that the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] invites American workingmen to partake of. They refused in the last national election to follow the lead of the Senator from Nevada in that direction, and, in my judgment, they will continue to refuse to do so.

Mr. President, it may be that the effort which is being made to bring about a monetary conference in the hope that we may secure international bimetallism will fail. I trust it may not fail. I feel a profound desire that we may in some way secure the concurrence of the other great commercial nations of the world with ours in an honest attempt to rehabilitate silver and to have the two metals as standard money in this country and in the other great commercial nations of the world. If it should fail, then we shall again be compelled to face the great question, and it is a great question, that confronted us in the last campaign, namely, whether this country shall plant itself upon the gold standard alone, or whether we shall go to the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

I have myself no concealments upon this question. I have no hesitancy to declare my attitude that if international bimetallism does fail, while I respect profoundly the opinion of every honest man in this Republic who differs from me, I shall stand as an advocate and a defender of the gold standard as against the silver standard for the people of the United States.

Mr. President, this is all I care to say. I trust that the resolution may pass, as I have no doubt it will, and that an honest, earnest effort will be made by the incoming President of the United States to fully redeem the declaration that was placed, after careful and conscientious consideration, in the national platform of the great Republican party.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, the people of the State that I have the honor to take part in representing are bimetallists. I think it is safe to say that 99 per cent of them believe in the use of both gold and silver as standard money. As to the methods for bringing about bimetallism now, as we do not enjoy it, our people are not agreed. I think a majority of our people are ready to risk the experiment of national bimetallism. They believe that the people of the United States, without the aid or encouragement or assistance of any other nation under the heavens, are competent in and of themselves to regulate their own monetary affairs in their own way. While that is true, a very large proportion of our people, nearly one-half of them—as much as 40 per cent, anyway—believe that it is not safe for us to return to the system that we had in vogue prior to 1853—not 1873, but 1853—without the aid and the concurrence of the great commercial nations of the world. And I think they are as conscientious in that belief as the rest of us are in ours.

Upon that issue very largely the great battle of 1896 was fought, the most remarkable political contest in many respects that we have ever had in this country. A majority of the people, and a very large majority of the people, after a protracted and animated and earnest discussion, gave it as their opinion that we ought to have the concurrence of other nations. The party which took that position gave to the country a promise that they would honestly and earnestly endeavor to promote international bimetallism, a condition of monetary affairs with which all bimetallists the world over will be satisfied, and perhaps they will be better satisfied with international bimetallism than with national bimetallism. The Republican party promised the country that with a trial of power they would not only attempt to procure international bimetallism, but that they would revise our tariff laws in such a manner as that, putting the two great policies together, the return tide of prosperity would come over the people, that business would be revived, that our people would be rendered happier, and that in every way the country would be benefited.

I believe the people of Kansas expect of their Senators upon this floor not to place any obstacles in the way of the passage of this bill. Personally, Senators all know that I have no confidence in the accomplishment of the object sought by the bill, and that I do not believe it would amount to anything if it were accomplished, for, speaking personally, I believe the same conditions that are bringing trouble upon the gold-standard countries to-day will eventually bring trouble upon the bimetallic-standard countries of the world. But leaving all that aside (I am simply giving the reason for the vote which I expect to cast), I think the people of Kansas with practical unanimity expect both of their Senators upon this floor to place no obstacle in the way of the passage of the bill, and if a yea-and-nay vote is taken upon its passage, I shall certainly vote for the bill.

Before leaving the floor, I wish to say to my good neighbor from Utah [Mr. CANNON] and my other good neighbor from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] that I hope they will not press their amendments. I do not want to assume any responsibility for any amendment of any character that is placed upon the bill. It is presented to us by gentlemen who have been named by members of their party represented here. It satisfied them. They say to us and to the country, "This is our measure; give us this, and it is a fulfillment, and we will regard it as a fulfillment, of our pledges during the campaign."

With that statement of the views of my people and my own personal views, I have not anything further to say, only that I hope the Senators will not press their amendment.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, I am one of those who believe that this country of ours is great enough and broad enough and powerful enough to establish and maintain a monetary system of its own. Therefore, in the recent election I supported that candidate and that platform which declared for an American financial policy, the free, unlimited, and independent coinage of both gold and silver; the restoration of the monetary laws of the country back to where they were prior to 1873.

I understand bimetallism, as applied to practical finance, to mean a monetary system resting upon both metals as equal standards of value and money of final redemption, with free access to the mints at an agreed ratio. The result of the last election was the defeat of a purely American financial system, at least for the present. The Republican party, it is true, in its platform pledged itself to promote in every way in its power the restoration of bimetallism. No one believes that anything whatever will come out of that pledge. The American people are not fooled by it one whit. Enough votes were returned to sustain the candidate of that party and its platform, but we know by what methods that result was brought about. This, however, is not the place to go into the discussion of that question. Having, though, made that pledge, the effort to pass the pending measure appears to be an honest effort on the part of certain Republican Senators to initiate a movement for the establishment of international bimetallism, looking to the fulfillment of the pledge made.

Mr. President, I, for one, desire the establishment in this country of a bimetallic system of money, and whilst I should prefer that it be brought about in the way declared for at the Chicago Democratic national convention, I shall not stand upon methods. The recent election has destroyed all hope for the free, independent, and unlimited coinage of both metals for the next four years at least. If, then, all hope of having enacted into law the declarations of the Chicago platform must be put aside for four years, I am willing to support the present movement, which looks to the bringing about of bimetallism by international agreement.

We want the free coinage of gold and silver, and I am willing to take it via international agreement rather than not get it at all. But this effort at international agreement upon this important question is foredoomed to failure, in my belief. Like the other three attempts in that direction, this is likely to result in nothing; but let us on this side throw no hindrance in the way of this effort to carry out in good faith the pledge of a great political party.

I do not believe that under the incoming Republican Administration we will have anything for the next four years in the way of a financial system except a continuation of the gold standard, with all of its ills, and added to it a high protective tariff law, likely to be enacted in the next few months. The prospect, therefore, before the American people for four years is gold monometallism and high protection. Let us see to what it will bring the country and the people.

The Republican party will come into power under a pledge the most dangerous for any political party to make, the pledge of the restoration and maintenance of general prosperity. I fear, Mr. President, that the conditions do not exist which justify the hope of the restoration and maintenance of general prosperity, nor do I believe it will come under the gold standard and high protection. The money question, outside of the questions which affect the eternal welfare of mankind, is the most important one that can engage the intellect of man. According as it may wisely or unwisely be settled, it affects every man, woman, and child living to-day, as well as generations yet unborn.

This movement, in charge of which is the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], is a movement which its advocates promise is a step forward toward changing the present monetary system of the country and of the world. However much I may believe that nothing will come of it, I consider it my duty to support the measure, and such is my purpose.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I rise simply to say that as there is an amendment pending to the bill of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], which amendment was introduced by the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON], and which expresses in appropriate phrase the principles which I think should control us, and as I find myself unable to vote for that amendment, I wish to briefly state my reasons for not doing so.

While I think that the amendment of the Senator from Utah would improve this bill, yet, holding as I do that the whole scheme must prove abortive, and knowing that the Republican party is responsible for this legislation and must be held responsible in the future, I am unwilling to make any change in the measure which does not meet the approval of those who have undertaken the enterprise. I do not wish to make the bill so virtuous that it can not be taken in and absorbed and approved by our political adversaries. I am aware that their capacity for bimetallism is somewhat limited, and I do not wish to give them more than that quantity which they themselves state they are in condition to absorb. [Laughter.]

The Senator from Utah has very properly spoken of his amendment, and has given many reasons to show that the pending bill is defective; but I submit that we ought not to interfere with our friends, but permit them to formulate a measure which, as they believe, will accomplish the beneficent result referred to; and if they fail, having designed the bill themselves, we can not be charged with obstruction.

On the other hand, if we attempt to alter or amend it in any material way, it will be said afterwards, in the event of failure, that we are responsible for that failure. Let them have their bill. I shall vote for it, and I hope that it will be successful. If I doubt it, it is because of the elements surrounding the case, which I do not think the Republican and Democratic parties combined could possibly overcome. I again submit that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah should be voted down, not because intrinsically it contains anything that is not true, but because, under the circumstances, it is impolitic and unwise to interfere with the pending measure.

Mr. ALLISON obtained the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.). Mr. President, I find that there are three or four Senators who desire to speak—so far as I can learn only three or four—and yet they can not get through by 4 o'clock. I am very anxious that the bill should be concluded this afternoon in accordance with the unanimous agreement, and if Senators are willing to stay here and dispose of the bill I will ask unanimous consent for an extension of the time for debate.

Several SENATORS. How long?

Mr. CHANDLER. Until half past 4 o'clock.

Mr. HAWLEY. And with five-minute speeches.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not wish to cut off the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not want more than five minutes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask for a general extension of the debate until half past 4 o'clock, with the understanding that the bill is to be voted upon at that time, and I hope Senators will stay here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not expect to occupy much time in this discussion; indeed, it was not my purpose to participate in it at all until I listened to some of the observations made on the other side both by those who oppose and those who favor the pending bill.

Mr. President, this Chamber seems to be divided, very much as the country is divided, into those who believe in the single gold standard because they think it is not possible to have a double standard and an equivalence of value between the two metals in circulation and those who believe it is wiser and better for us to have a single standard of silver. So I find the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] in loving accord opposing this measure, though I do not know but both those Senators will vote for it. I am not sure, however, as to that.

There are others who believe that the metallic money of the world consists of both gold and silver, that they have always consisted of these two metals, and that they are likely to continue to consist of them. They believe that the chief value of these metals is derived from their use as money and not from their use in the arts, and, therefore, if their use as money can be enlarged, or the use of either of them can be enlarged, it will bring their values nearer together.

The Senator from Wisconsin says the two metals have never circulated side by side. I shall not take the time to argue now that he is mistaken, but it is an historical fact that they practically circulated side by side for hundreds of years when the ratio of a given number of commercial nations was the same.

Those who believe in an international agreement on this subject of money are not abdicating, as the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] has just said, the power and independence of our nation, but they are making an honest endeavor to bring these two metals, now widely separated in their international value, nearer and nearer together, and they believe that can be done by their universal use. Those of us who believe in having a stable money in our own country, and who do not believe it is a wise thing for us to abandon our present standard and go to the single standard of silver, for which a large number of people voted at the last election, believe that it is wiser and better by practical and sensible methods, which have derived their value from experience, to see whether or not there are other commercial nations who will unite with us in an endeavor to secure the concurrent use of silver and gold without one being greater in value than the other in circulation.

This proposition is not new. It has been the established policy of the United States since 1878, by repeated acts of Congress and by repeated statements in platforms, and only departed from in a single instance by either of the great parties—at Chicago in 1896. Therefore we propose now to place within the power of the President of the United States, as we have many times before placed in his power, the money necessary to enable this Government to participate in any arrangement amongst the commercial nations whereby we can fix a ratio between the two metals and test whether hereafter, as heretofore, they will upon that agreed ratio circulate side by side. That is all we propose here, and we do not even need to do that except for the fact that we must place in the hands of the President of the United States the power to execute this purpose, which we have so often expressed and so often declared in our statutes and in our platforms.

The Senator from Wisconsin jeers at the idea that there is a possibility of securing concurrent action of the principal commercial nations of the world in this effort. He says that all the conferences we have heretofore had have been failures. They have been failures in a sense, it is true, and yet there has not been a single conference held which has not made progress in the development of what we call bimetallism in this country and in the world.

Mr. LINDSAY. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa whether he regards the appropriation made by the act of March, 1895, as having lapsed, or whether the President may still utilize that appropriation?

Mr. ALLISON. I think, were we not to take this action, that possibly that appropriation of 1895 might be used, as the appropriation of 1892 possibly might be used.

But, Mr. President, being diverted from the suggestion I was about to make in response to the argument of the Senator from Wisconsin, I repeat that there has never been a conference which has not made progress as respects the concurrent use of both gold and silver; and I venture the assertion that, outside of the controlling portions of Great Britain and perhaps also the Scandinavian states, there is not a country in Europe that is not in favor of the effort which is proposed here and which will not support it and advocate it, excepting only Germany, which stands upon a pivot as to its parliamentary situation and as to the governing forces surrounding the Emperor of Germany. It is well known that Austria will follow in the pathway of Germany in whatever she may say or do.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] took pains to make quotations from statements made by the delegates of certain European powers in the conference of 1892. It is well known by those who participated in that conference that Great Britain stood in the pathway, and Germany also, because then her Parliament or Reichstag had not expressed itself, as it has twice since, in favor of international bimetallism. So the situation now is not what it was in 1892, whether as to the Government of Germany, the Government of France, or even that of Great Britain. It is well known, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has already stated, that all of the governing forces in France now favor bimetallism. Why? Because France and Belgium and Holland and Switzerland and Italy have in their circulation nearly $1,200,000,000 of silver money, which circulates there only as domestic money, on a par with gold, which is their standard of value. We have $600,000,000, or nearly so, of like money. Is it not the part of wisdom on the part of those countries to make our domestic money interchangeable without having behind it, as we have now and are obliged to have, the power of this Government to keep it on a par with gold? Should you take away that power, the silver money would no longer circulate, as it does circulate, on a parity with gold.

Mr. President, I do not advocate this policy because it is found in the platform adopted at St. Louis. I advocate it because I believe it is in the interest of the concurrent circulation of these two metals in the world and because it promotes the commercial interest of the world to minimize the difference in the power of exchange between great connecting trading countries. One or the other of those metals, so long as these conditions prevail, will be the paramount metal, and so long as it is the paramount metal the other will fluctuate up and down in the markets of the world. That is the situation to-day.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Will the Senator allow me just one moment?

Mr. ALLISON. As the Senator will see, I can not yield to him now.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I simply wish to correct a statement of the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator can correct it afterwards. I may have made some error, but the statement is practically correct as I have made it.

Which of these two metals is to be paramount until we have the concurrent action of nations? It is that which is the standard of money in the nations having the chief trade of the world. Who are those nations? Are they China, Japan, or the South American States, some of them having a gold standard, some of them having a silver standard, and all of them upon a depreciated paper standard but one? Here lies Europe, with its silver and its gold, having the gold standard, with a trade twelve times as great as all the trade of all the silver countries combined. Therefore it is, unless we can minimize this difference in the value of these two metals in the exchanges of the world, this divergence will go on, and the people who have the silver money are those who will be most distressed in the exchanges which are necessary to be made.

Without reference to party platforms or party alliances here or there, can it be possible that the American people, growing as they are growing, in the commerce of the world, will not make whatever effort can be made to secure as nearly as possible the power of exchange among the nations which use silver and gold?

Mr. President, I shall vote for this measure.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I shall vote for the proposition presented by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], and I think the country is to be congratulated upon the result of the debate upon this proposition to-day. With practical unanimity on the part of those who have spoken, it appears that the members of the Senate are in favor of making this earnest, honest effort to secure an international agreement. I shall vote for it, notwithstanding the fact that it gives power to the incoming President of the United States to appoint the commissioners to represent this Government in whatever conference may be held; I shall vote for it, as I have voted for all like propositions since I have been a member of the Senate, even the one of 1895, when Congress, making the provision for calling a conference, elected six of the commissioners, three by the House of Representatives and three by this body, leaving the present President of the United States to appoint a number of commissioners. The failure to carry out the law of Congress as expressed in that resolution, in my judgment, intensified the feeling of this country, certainly in the Democratic party, to such an extent that the extraordinary declarations of the Chicago convention were made.

I agree with the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that a great majority of the people of this country are in favor of bimetallism. The American people will not very much longer, in my judgment, submit to a dalliance with this question, which does not bring about results, and which is not intended to bring about results. But viewing the condition of the country, which has been produced by various causes, not only by the difficulties regarding the circulating medium, but from others, we see that distress prevails from one end of the land to the other, which does not disappear, but which intensifies, until we stand to-day not as well off as we were one year ago. But for the fact that the great famine abroad has enabled our people to send their products hence, so that the balance of trade within the year is $300,000,000 in our favor, no man could tell what would occur during these winter months. The distress of others has saved us from a great calamity.

I will not impede by any act of mine any measure that will tend to create a better condition of affairs for our people under the next Administration. I prefer, because it is a mere matter of verbiage, that the party about to assume power shall deal with this question precisely as they deem best. The methods by which they may attain it, so far as concerns my vote, must be theirs. But having voted for the bill, as I shall, I wish to say to the other side that the great reforms which you have promised will not end with the passage of the pending bill. Nothing but results will satisfy the American people, and results which will better the condition as it stands to-day. A result must follow which will give sufficient revenue to the Government without imposing unjust burdens upon the masses of the people or give favoritism to a few. The structure, as to the ordinary currency of the country, which has been created not by Democratic policies, can not be permitted by the Republicans to remain as it is now, so that whenever there is a panic or a slight disturbance in business affairs runs upon banks and the Treasury will occur again.

Having come in power, you are entitled to have fair treatment upon those questions which affect the Treasury, as the matter now under consideration affects the whole structure. I, for one, do not intend to obstruct that policy unless it be made purely political by those on the other side of the Chamber. I can not afford as an American citizen and as a Senator having a vote here, representing in part a State, to fail to take into consideration the immense embarrassment under which our people are laboring. I will not even express the opinion that this measure will be a failure. My belief is that we have failed in the past because those in the executive branch who have had the management of our financial affairs have never had their heart in the matter. Our representatives have been embarrassed by the conviction on the part of those whom they met in conference that if there was a failure the American people would quietly submit to it, as we have. I desire to see this commission go abroad with the encouragement of both Republicans and Democrats, to say to the other nations of the world that we intend to have this question adjusted fairly and in the interest of the people.

I was gratified to hear the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], with all his learning, in his splendid speech to-day, say to the American Senate that the English Government, or a majority of that Government, is in favor of bimetallism. But he said that within a square mile in London there is power enough to prevent the achievement of a great act for the benefit of mankind; that they would overturn the English Government. Mr. President, within 1 mile of the city hall in New York there has been power enough to stay and stop the consummation of this question in the United States. Within the radius of a mile in the city of Paris there has been enough power to stay and stop the men who govern France. Let these representatives of the United States under the next Administration go abroad and say that no longer shall this power thus concentrated in three or four great cities throttle all the freemen of the world; but that if they do so on the other side, the American Republic will march along in the immediate future to relieve our people at home.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, two or three of my friends who have spoken have great difficulty in understanding what I say or in interpreting what I mean. The Senator from New Hampshire made a statement that I had said that the silver-standard countries are more prosperous than our own country. I never made any such statement. What I did say is true, that since the demonetization of silver and the difference of exchange forced by that demonetization the silver-standard countries had prospered more than they ever did before in history; and if there is anything true on earth, that is. The man who does not know that the silver-standard countries, having availed themselves of cheap silver, are reaping a rich reward is ignorant of current history.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] made some sport at my expense. He told us how nicely the aristocracy of Europe treated him and what kind things they said. We have had those reports for twenty years. There is no doubt that you can get honeyed words from those gentlemen. They are very polite. In alluding to Mr. Balfour he was unfortunate, however. Mr. Balfour understands this question as well as any man living. He is in sentiment a bimetallist. But a short time ago in Parliament he conceded that it was impracticable, and he was unwilling to place the administration against the mile square in London. He is as much in dread of that as the Senators on this floor are in dread of the mile square in New York.

The Senator made another unfortunate allusion. He referred to the savings banks, and by implication let it be understood that they were contributors to the vast corruption fund which did a large part of the voting at the last election. I have heard it stated before that the very honest men whom he described contributed of the funds deposited in savings banks to swell the volume of the vast fund which voted in the last election. I did not believe it. If it is true, it speaks badly for their honesty. In regard to savings banks, I have this to say: It is true that $1,500,000,000 has been deposited by the laborers and others in the savings banks of the United States. Those $1,500,000,000 are invested in securities. It is not true that those securities are of the same value that they were when the investments were made. The savings banks are trembling on the brink of ruin. If the gold standard is maintained, they can not convert their securities into money and pay their depositors. I will not mention, as I could do, a large number of savings banks whose situation is very delicate, but I undertake to say that the gold standard, if pursued, will so depreciate the securities they hold that few if any of them can close up and pay their depositors. They can not convert the securities they hold into money, and in almost every city the savings banks are making every effort to prevent a run. In Chicago a few days ago they claimed that they availed themselves of the privilege of demanding the full notice allowed by law. That is the situation of the savings banks.

I did not think my friend the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] really misunderstood my position. He said that I am in favor of the single silver standard. I am not in favor of confining the money to any particular commodity. I am in favor of restoring silver and using the two commodities, but if the two commodities are not enough, as they frequently have not been, I am in favor of our Government saving this civilization by the exercise of its sovereign power, which has been used in every emergency by every great government, to create money out of something else. As I said the other day, there is but one case in which metallic money was used in a great war. That was the case of Germany in the war with France, when she used silver. She remained on the silver basis throughout the war. If in a great emergency of war, when national existence and national life are at stake, governments have the inherent power to create a circulating medium which will save their existence, why is it necessary that in time of peace the people should be destroyed because there is not enough of any particular material? I believe the use of both metals will furnish a reasonable amount of material out of which to make money.

It is suggested that silver will be used altogether, and that I am a monometallist. What I ask is that the mints shall be opened to each, and that if silver does not come to the mints, let gold come. If gold does not come, let silver come. Let something come that will stand between the American people and the extinction of civilization. If the misery that now stalks abroad in the land does not appeal to the Senate, what will? The suffering is greater to-day than it ever was in war. I am called to account because I said 5,000,000 are out of employment and in want. My statement was no exaggeration. There are more than 5,000,000 people who are practically idle because enterprise is stopped, and those who work upon farms are toiling for comparatively nothing. Their farms have depreciated in value. Mortgages have been converted into deeds. Misery stalks abroad in the land, and I say under these circumstances it behooves the American Senate to inquire if there is no remedy in peace for unendurable calamities.

With this situation before us, with our people struggling to live, misery everywhere, we are going to Europe to ask a mile square in London if they have blood money enough; if they are satisfied to give us some of their gold; if they are satisfied to let us use some silver; if their greed to increase their hoards by increasing the purchasing power of money is satiated. That we must petition them for that it seems to me is the depth of humiliation and disgrace. Suppose during the war either side had left home and gone to Europe to get aid and comfort. Suppose they had applied to Europe for the right to make their own money. Everybody would have said they were unpatriotic. It is equally unpatriotic to-day to let millions starve and perish while we apply to Europe for relief.

I agree with the remarks of the Senator from California and with others who have said that it is our duty, as a matter of expedience, to allow the Republican party to make this fourth application to Europe for relief, because they have made many people believe that Europe has more regard for the people of the United States than has the Government of the United States for the people which placed it in power. Many have been misled to that extent. Let them try it again; and perhaps after twenty-four or twenty-five years of experiment a sufficient number of American people will have faith in their own Government and in the power of their own Government to save the people in this emergency. That being the case, let it go on. We can do nothing else. Let them have the spectacle, and I desire to have it presented in their own bill. I appeal to my friend, the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON], to withdraw his amendment. Let us put no obstruction in the way. Let them show to the world just what this thing is. Do not let us bear any of the responsibility of obstructing. We want the object lesson. One more object lesson will suffice, I am satisfied. With one more object lesson all the money in the savings banks in the United States, if you take it all out, will be insufficient to cast a majority vote in the next election.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me? I ask unanimous consent that the time for a vote may be extended, so that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] may address the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. Will we have a vote this afternoon?

Mr. CHANDLER. Immediately thereafter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall occupy the time of the Senate for but a very few moments. I am as anxious to come to a vote as is any other Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the agreement was to take a vote at half past 4 o'clock. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from New Hampshire that the time be extended in order that the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Illinois may address the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am very anxious to get the bill through to-night, but not so anxious but that I would like to have the Senator from Illinois as well as the Senator from Connecticut have a chance to make a speech. No other Senators have hitherto indicated a desire to speak. Those are the only ones who wish to speak, and I hope they may have an opportunity.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. PALMER. I would prefer that the request be limited to an extension of time so as to permit the Senator from Connecticut to speak.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall object unless the time is extended so that all who choose to speak can do so.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from South Dakota can object if he pleases.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. FRYE. Let us have a vote.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall not object if the time is extended so as to allow every Senator to speak who wishes to do so.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object to that.

Mr. CHANDLER. No other Senator has indicated a wish to speak until now.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that if any other Senator now indicates a wish to speak the extension of time can be enlarged so as to include him. I understand that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] withdraws his desire, so that no Senator has indicated a wish to speak except the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit to the Senate the request of the Senator from New Hampshire. Is there objection?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed. The hour has arrived at which the Senate agreed to vote. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause down to and including the word "conference" in line 12, and insert:

That within ninety days after the 4th day of March, 1897, the President of the United States shall invite the leading commercial nations of the world to appoint representatives to an international monetary conference, to convene on or before October 1, 1897, at such place in the city of Washington as the President may designate; and also, within said ninety days after the 4th day of March, 1897, the President shall appoint five commissioners to represent the United States at such conference, the duty of which United States commissioners shall be to urge the adoption by said conference of a plan for the free and unlimited coinage of silver and gold at some ratio ranging between 15 to 1 and 16 to 1 by the nations represented at such conference.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator from Utah will withdraw the amendment. I ask him in behalf of the friends of the original bill to withdraw it.

Mr. CANNON. I prefer to allow the amendment to be voted upon by the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I move to lay the amendment upon the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to lay on the table the amendment submitted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I understand from the Senator from New Hampshire that my colleague [Mr. ELKINS], with whom I am paired, would vote "yea" on this question if he were present. I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCBRIDE (when the name of Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon was called). My colleague is absent from the Chamber. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. If my colleague were present, I have no doubt, believing that the bill in its present form would best promote the object intended to be attained by it, he would vote against the pending amendment and all proposed amendments to the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. I understand the Senator from New Jersey is opposed to the amendment, and I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. GEAR (when Mr. MORRILL's name was called). The senior Senator from Vermont requested me to state that he has a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH]. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. I am informed by his colleague that he would be against the amendment. Therefore I shall vote in the affirmative upon this question. The Senator from Oregon would be in favor of the passage of the bill, while I would be against it. Upon this amendment I shall vote the same way in which he would if present. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], and I am not advised how he would vote upon this question. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] who is absent. The money question, however, was excepted from the operation of the pair. I understood from him that his sentiments upon that question are the same as my own, and under the circumstances I feel authorized to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BATE. My colleague [Mr. HARRIS], who is unable to be here this evening, is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. MCBRIDE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I am informed by his colleague that if present he would vote in favor of the motion to lay on the table. I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 8; as follows:

So the amendment was laid on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs upon the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert as an additional section:

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized, in the name of the Government of the United States, to call, in his discretion, such international conference, to assemble at such point as may be agreed upon.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood that the friends of the bill accepted that amendment when it was offered so far as they could do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the amendment accepted without objection?

Mr. FRYE and others. Agreed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is agreed to without objection. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the third reading be in full.

The bill was read the third time, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever after March 4, 1897, the President of the United States shall determine that the United States should be represented at any international conference called by the United States or any other country with a view to securing by international agreement a fixity of relative value between gold and silver as money by means of a common ratio between these metals, with free mintage at such ratio, he is hereby authorized to appoint five or more commissioners to such international conference; and for compensation of said commissioners, and for all reasonable expenses connected therewith, to be approved by the Secretary of State, including the proportion to be paid by the United States of the joint expenses of any such conference, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized, in the name of the Government of the United States, to call, in his discretion, such international conference to assemble at such point as may be agreed upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass as amended?

Mr. BATE. On that let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. THURSTON. I am compelled to leave the Chamber to take a train. I ask unanimous consent that my vote may be recorded in favor of the passage of the bill without waiting for the roll call.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HALE. Let the name of the Senator from Nebraska be called.

The Secretary called the name of Mr. THURSTON, and he voted in the affirmative.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on the passage of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. I do not know how he would vote on the bill. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to inform the Senator from Arkansas that I am authorized by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to pair him in favor of the bill.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator from New Hampshire can get a pair for him, I hope he will do so.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Arkansas is at liberty to vote.

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am informed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] that my colleague [Mr. ELKINS], with whom I am paired, would vote in the affirmative on the passage of the bill. I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am informed that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], with whom I have a general pair, would vote, if present, in favor of the bill. Therefore I will vote. I vote "yea."

pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCBRIDE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I am informed by his colleague that he would vote for the bill. I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCBRIDE (when the name of Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon was called). I again announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. MITCHELL] with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. My colleague, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I have already announced my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that we exchange our pairs so as to be enabled to vote.

Mr. VILAS. Very well; then let the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] stand paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. WARREN] on account of severe illness, and that if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON. I again announce my pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE. In view of the transfer which has just been made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], I desire to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BATE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is absent on account of indisposition, and is paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3555) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to the Eastern Nebraska and Gulf Railway Company right of way through the Omaha and Winnebago Indian reservations, in the State of Nebraska," by extending the time for the construction of said railway, with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6902) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. Viel;

A bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10085) for the relief of Elnora Shuman.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3247) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," approved February 20, 1889.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I take the floor on the Nicaragua Canal bill this evening for the purpose of presenting to the Senate a report of the Select Committee on the Construction of the Nicaragua Canal, which sets forth a statement made by Hiram Hitchcock, of New York, president of the Maritime Canal Company, and which I will ask to have printed and laid on the table.

Mr. FRYE. And printed as a document?

Mr. MORGAN. And printed as a document, of course.

Mr. SHERMAN. We can not hear on this side of the Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was unable to hear the remarks of the Senator from Alabama. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. MORGAN. I said that I took the floor this evening on the bill for the purpose of presenting a report of the Select Committee on the Construction of the Nicaragua Canal, which sets forth a statement of Mr. Hiram Hitchcock, of New York, president of the Maritime Canal Company, in reference to the present relations between the company and the States of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and it is submitted without any comment on the part of the committee. I should like very much, as it is a matter of consequence to the Senate, that the report may be printed in the RECORD as well as in ordinary report form, unless there is objection to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be printed in the form of a document, because it is easier to read in that form than in the RECORD.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; in the form of a document, and in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF MR. HIRAM HITCHCOCK, OF NEW YORK, PRESIDENT OF THE MARITIME CANAL COMPANY, OF NEW YORK, BEFORE THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE NICARAGUA CANAL OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE, ON THURSDAY, JANUARY 28, 1897.

The committee met at 10.30 a. m.

The CHAIRMAN. This meeting has been specially called to hear the statement of Mr. Hiram Hitchcock, president of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, who has been summoned by the committee to give the committee information with reference to the canal company.

I will first ask you, Mr. Hitchcock, what differences, if any, your company has had with the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica in connection with the building of the canal?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The same is true with regard to any substantial differences as was true when I was first called before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, June, 1890. I then said: "I may as well perhaps say, as you ask me the question, with reference to that, that there is no point of difference remaining unsettled between the company and Nicaragua at the present time. That leads me to say (without assuming to be able to give you gentlemen the least information on that point) that it is proper that you should know from us officially the relations which exist between us and Nicaragua, and in fact Central America generally. It is, as I said before, perhaps unnecessary to state these facts, but there are complicated questions. The rights to the San Juan River, the boundary questions between Nicaragua and Costa Rica, always come up when any question of transit across that Isthmus arises. You will find that under Tyler's Administration, in 1842, this matter was somewhat considered by Mr. Webster, and it has been before every Secretary of State in some aspect from that time to this. It involves the canal question. Now, the question of the respective rights in this particular route was supposed to have been settled under the treaty of limits between those two powers of 1858. Under that treaty, while Nicaragua owns the entire route, yet Costa Ricahas the right to navigation and has the right to be consulted.

"Now I come down to the point where it concerns this particular concession. The Nicaragua Canal Association, which was formed in 1886, set out early in 1887 to obtain a concession to build this canal. Nicaragua had the right to give this concession, and in it gave us the fullest freedom to locate the route; but for the reason that the treaty of 1858 gives to Costa Rica the right of navigation and that in the construction of the canal waters would be made to overflow Costa Rican territory, Costa Rica took the ground that Nicaragua should have recognized that treaty to the extent, at least, of obtaining the consent of Costa Rica to this concession. Nicaragua did not do that. We accepted the concession in good faith, believing Nicaragua had the absolute right to grant it. The first thing we encountered was a protest, thirty or forty days thereafter, from Costa Rica, announcing that the concession was of no value because she had not been consulted. The Government of Nicaragua could have consulted her before, and have gone on and satisfied her for any damages which the overflow might do to her territory, but we were left to make terms with Costa Rica. We then, for six months, negotiated to obtain a concession from Costa Rica, when this was accomplished. Nicaragua immediately protested against our concession from Costa Rica. We assured Nicaragua that we had accepted the concession from Costa Rica simply in the nature of a quitclaim of any rights she might have; and when we formed our company and accepted the Costa Rica concession we accepted it only in so far as it did not conflict with the territorial rights and proprietary interests of the Republic of Nicaragua. Thus we were entirely open and frank in the whole transaction.

"Now, you will readily see that up to that point it was useless to talk about the sale of bonds with the protest of either Government pending. Then when the first expedition, sent out after the Maritime Company was organized, commenced work on the 3d of June, 1889, Nicaragua officially notified us that, while she would protest against our concession from Costa Rica, yet she would not go beyond protesting and would not interfere with the construction of the canal. But in July Nicaragua ordered the stopping of our work at Grey Town. We did not pay attention to that order, because she immediately modified it by saying that she would not regard the work as an official commencement of permanent work. The troubles continued and were fostered by parties from England, whose names I know, who wanted to have the 24th day of October arrive and the Government of Nicaragua not recognize that we had begun our work, so that our concession would lapse. On the 16th of September, 1889, the Government of Nicaragua notified us officially that if we did not confine ourselves within her limits, thereby ignoring any rights or claims of Costa Rica, she would not approve our surveys nor recognize the commencement of the work of construction, and that on the 24th of October she should consider our concession as having lapsed.

"This course of Nicaragua was so unjust that I went immediately to the Government here, through the State Department. I stated the case fully. Mr. Blaine met the question with great fairness and promptness, and immediately wired to the American minister at Central America (Mr. Mizner) to go to Nicaragua and say to the Nicaraguan Government that he was surprised at the report of the attitude of the Nicaraguan Government toward this company, and wished him to examine into the facts and report to the State Department here, and at the same time to assure the Government of Nicaragua that the Government of the United States would not remain passive and see the rights of its citizens threatened. That dispatch of Mr. Blaine had the desired effect. Mr. Mizner and Mr. Hall, our permanent agent there, arranged a plan by which Nicaragua could recede from her position with dignity, which was in the form of a joint declaration. On our part we agreed to go on and build the canal in good faith under the concession, and the Nicaraguan Government agreed to approve the surveys and work, so that the work of construction was recognized officially as commenced on the 8th of last October. I will submit copies of the telegrams between the President of Nicaragua and myself."

[Copy of telegram sent October 9, 1889.]

His Excellency PRESIDENT OF NICARAGUA, Managua:

Please accept my sincere congratulations upon the happy termination of all differences, and the company's assurance that it will vigorously prosecute the work of the canal in the interest of Nicaragua and the whole commercial world.

HIRAM HITCHCOCK,
President Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

[Translation of telegram received from the President of Nicaragua in reply to ours of October 9.]

MANAGUA, October 11, 1889.

President of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua:

I congratulate myself jointly with you upon the happy settlement of the canal question, and with the greatest satisfaction I offer the cordial assistance of my Government to the efforts of the company for the realization of this grand enterprise.

ROBERTO SACASA,
President of the Republic.

Mr. Hitchcock explained that this was mainly a repetition of his statement before the Committee on Foreign Relations June 5, 1890.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hitchcock, will you please relate to the committee in detail your interview with Mr. Blaine just referred to?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have here a memorandum made at the time of a confidential interview with the Hon. James G. Blaine, Secretary of State, in Washington, on the 7th of May, 1889, at which were present ex-Chief Judge Charles P. Daly, Engineer A. G. Menocal, and myself. I stated to Mr. Blaine that the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, chartered by Congress, had just been organized, and recited to him the history of the enterprise up to that time, including some of the numerous interests opposed to the construction of the canal, and that the opposition had in vain endeavored to induce President Cleveland not to sign the charter of the company. The last move of the enemies of the canal was to bring an ineffectual suit in New York to prevent our organizing under the charter of the United States.

Mr. Blaine gave us some valuable information with reference to the relations of the United States to the Central American States, and then said that the canal must be built and controlled by the United States, and he believed that more tonnage would pass through it in a short time after its construction than was passing through the Suez Canal. I suggested to Mr. Blaine that it might be proper for the Government to say to us that it expected us to faithfully comply with the charter and build the canal, and also state to the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica that it would expect them to afford us every facility for building the canal under the respective concessions. Mr. Blaine then said:

I serve notice on you now that the Government does expect you to execute the charter faithfully and to build the canal, and if you do so you will have the Government with you. I will also cable the minister to Central America to go to Managua to look after our interests, and will send for the ministers to Nicaragua and Costa Rica and talk with them.

Our object in this conference was to determine the fact that we could go on with the work of building the canal and rely upon the support and protection of the United States, the power that had given us the charter, and we felt fully satisfied on that point.

I sent to Mr. Blaine, at his request, copies of all papers connected with the canal, beginning with the concessions.

I will say here that messages of congratulation on the organization of the company, May 7, were exchanged between President Carazo, of Nicaragua, and myself, as president of the Maritime Canal Company.

Not long after this, the Nicaraguan minister at Washington telegraphed his Government about the organization of the canal company, and said:

Costa Rica insists upon a director. If he remains, Nicaragua must recall its director. The company observes both concessions.

After our agent in Nicaragua had talked with President Carazo about this, the President instructed the minister in Washington to limit himself to protest and assured our agent that Nicaragua would not hinder the beginning of the work. On the strength of Mr. Blaine's request to keep him fully informed, I wrote him, June 21, 1889, stating that I had that day received a letter from the Hon. Henry C. Hall, former United States minister to Central America, who had become our agent at Central America, advising me by cable that Nicaragua proposed to stop our work, which had been going on since June 3, on the ground that our surveys had not yet been approved by her engineers. I then wrote:

Our surveys were long since completed, at great expense, and received the approval of our engineers and also of the able advisory board of five American engineers. Three months ago they were submitted to the two engineers appointed by the Government of Nicaragua.

And this obstruction to our work was, notwithstanding the letter of Minister Zavala to Minister Hall, on the 12th of October, 1888, in which Zavala says that the Government of Nicaragua—

Will not place any obstacles to the construction of the canal in accordance with her concession, but on the contrary will contribute with all those facilities within the power of the Government, anxious as it is to see the work carried on to a successful termination.

On the 16th of July, 1889, I went to Washington by request of the minister of Nicaragua, and at his request endeavored to allay any unpleasant feeling that existed between the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica with reference to the canal concessions. He requesed me to confer with the minister of Costa Rica on that subject. When I reached the residence of the latter he was about sending for me, and showed me a telegram from the President of Costa Rica asking me, as president of the Maritime Canal Company, to obtain the mediation of the United States Government. The result of repeated conferences between us was a letter addressed by me July 18, 1889, as follows:

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA,
New York, July 18, 1889.

DEAR SIR: The Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua respectfully asks you to direct the American minister at Central America to say to the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica that having learned of serious differences between those two Governments which affect the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, the Government of the United States offers its mediation in regard to the same and requests the said Governments to give their resident ministers at Washington full powers to confer with the president of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua as to those differences, and then with him to submit the same and all questions relating thereto to the President of the United States for his decision, which shall be final and binding upon each and all of the said parties.

Very respectfully,

HIRAM HITCHCOCK, President.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Secretary of State.

This letter is approved by the ministers of those countries.

This letter, unfortunately, did not reach Mr. Blaine, who was absent from Washington, until some weeks afterwards.

On the 16th of September, 1889, I addressed Mr. Blaine the following letter:

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA,
New York, September 16, 1889.

DEAR SIR: A crisis in the affairs of this company being at hand, it becomes necessary to submit the case, through you, to the Government of the United States, that we may be advised and protected. This is made easy on account of the great interest that you personally take in the enterprise, and the full liberty you have always given me to come to you. That we shall be protected through your wise aid and counsel I well know, and have known since your cordial assurances to that effect, in Washington, when I went out with Judge Daly and Chief Engineer Menocal, on the 7th of May, to announce the organization of the company under the charter granted by the United States. From that day we have felt and now feel that we can go in and build the canal and rely upon protection by the power that granted us a corporate existence.

I have formally asked in writing the friendly aid of the Government, as will appear from my communications to you of June 21 and July 18, and I am aware that you directed Minister Mizner to Managua, where he now is. I have also written you from time to time of the progress of our affairs.

In my last letter, of August 1, I strongly protested against the position taken by the Government of Nicaragua with reference to this company. On the 17th of August the Hon. Henry C. Hall, our agent at Nicaragua, was received very warmly by the new President, Dr. Sacasa, and had a most gratifying interview.

On the following day, August the 8th, Mr. Hall cabled me as follows:

"I have seen the President. He is favorably impressed with everything, and I have no doubt that matters can be settled in accordance with your wishes."

But on August 28 Mr. Hall wrote as follows:

"For a long time I have been convinced that there is some secret influence at work with the Nicaragua Government adverse to the company. This influence in my opinion is British. I do not say it comes direct from the British Government, but it comes from British capitalists who are anxious to get control of the enterprise. Mr. Climie tells me, as mentioned in a former letter, that the Blackman scheme could obtain all the capital it might need in London, and from what he let drop at the same time I am satisfied that his partner, Mr. Passmore, had conferred with Mr. Blackman in London, and that he (Climie) had conferred with him in New York. This influence has been more than ever apparent since the death of Mr. Carazo. I had counted upon Modesta Barrios as a friend of the enterprise to be relied upon. I now find him imbued with the same ideas that were entertained by Urtecho in regard to the Costa Rica contract, that is, that while that contract exists Nicaragua must not permit the commencement of canal work; and further, that if on the 24th of October next, the limit of time which they claim for the commencement of the work, the company shall not have released itself from Costa Rica, the Nicaragua Government shall then declare its concessions forfeited. And these views he says are those of his associates and of the President. A few days before Carazo's death, he (Barrios) expressed to me that the action of the Government in refusing to permit the commencement of canal construction was unjustifiable. What influence could have been brought to bear upon him since he became a member of the cabinet is more than I can imagine. The object of all this is clear to me. They hope to bring about a conflict between Costa Rica and the company, then Nicaragua will break with the company, and the latter will be left without the support of either. As matters now stand, Costa Rica is in honor bound not to permit that the canal shall fail through her contract with the company, nor that Nicaragua shall so contemptuously ignore it.

"President Bogram, of Honduras, has sent as commissioner to Nicaragua and Costa Rica Señor Manuel Colindres, one of the most prominent and able public men of that State.

"He expects to receive the same appointment from the President of Guatemala. His mission is solely in regard to the canal, in whose success both Presidents take great interest. I have had several conferences with him, and have given him all the information at my disposal. He considers the attitude of the Nicaragua Government wholly untenable. Before doing or saying anything to the Government, he will await the arrival of Mr. Mizner, so as to act in concert with him."

To-day Dr. Guzman notifies me, through Engineer Menocal, that he wishes me to call a meeting of the board of directors of this company (and which I have called for Thursday, the 19th), to present an important communication or ultimatum from his Government, the full nature of which I do not know, but one part of it is a demand that we shall break our contract with Costa Rica. The board will receive this official paper, and before acting upon it will undoubtedly appoint a committee to confer with you in this exigency.

I shall be glad to know by the bearer that you receive this and at what time and place it may be your pleasure to receive such committee. Dr. Guzman will insist on an immediate reply, which it is not likely we will be able to give without first having a conference with you.

I was in hopes, when you "served notice" on me personally, May 7, that the United States expected and required us to comply with our charter and build the canal—and also notified the ministers of Nicaragua and Costa Rica that the United States expected those two Governments would not obstruct, but would aid in the great work—that all danger of difficulty had passed; but it seems they have paid no attention to the warning. And the assurances of the company that it would faithfully carry out its concessions under its charter (which it has thus far done), and our presence there in force and quietly at work since June 3, has not been received by them in a proper spirit.

Very respectfully,

HIRAM HITCHCOCK.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Secretary of State.

In this I inclosed the following memorandum:

MEMORANDUM CONCERNING THE COSTA RICA CONCESSION.

The following is from the opinion of the Hon. Jos. E. McDonald, one of the incorporators of this company and formerly counsel of the Republic of Nicaragua:

"The Menocal-Zeledon contract has been rendered necessary by the fact that at the time the Nicaragua concession was negotiated Nicaragua assumed that the treaty of 1858, between herself and Costa Rica, was not in force, and that after the President (then Cleveland) had declared it to be in force, and that the rights of Costa Rica (under Article VIII) to be consulted with respect to any canal grant across the territory of Nicaragua that involved the valley of the San Juan River was more than advisory, it has then become necessary for the company to negotiate with Costa Rica or to entirely disregard her rights under that treaty."

I will add what I have before stated to you, that Nicaragua herself wished the company to come to terms with Costa Rica, and the company regards the Costa Rica concession as merely in the nature of a quitclaim. And the Maritime Canal Company accepted this concession with the following reservations:

"It is hereby understood, however, that the said concession is accepted by the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua upon the condition that nothing therein contained shall be construed to affect the sovereign rights or propriety in interests of the Republic of Nicaragua so far as the same may have been established by the treaty of April 15, 1858, between the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica."

To this Mr. Blaine sent the following reply:

Personal.]

BAR HARBOR, September 17, 1889.

MY DEAR SIR: I have your favor and the accompanying memoranda. I am sorry to hear of the impending difficulties in the way of the canal company. But I do not think that Nicaragua or Costa Rica or both together will deprive you of your rights.

I go hence on the 23d instant to Richfield, N. Y., to witness the marriage of my son on the 26th, thence to New York and Washington, reaching the latter on the 30th of September.

Very respectfully,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

HIRAM HITCHCOCK, Esq.

On the 23d of September, 1889, I met Mr. Blaine in Boston, by appointment, and was accompanied by Judge Daly and other gentlemen connected with the canal enterprise.

I stated to Mr. Blaine that we had received a communication from the Government of Nicaragua notifying the company that its concession would be forfeited October 24 unless the causes referred to in their ultimatum were removed—that is, unless we broke our contract with Costa Rica. He then carefully perused the papers submitted and asked what answer had been made, and was informed that the company had made no reply, but had appointed us as a committee to consult with him before replying to the communication.

After a full discussion of the matter, Mr. Blaine said:

The United States Government by granting to your company a Congressional charter practically guaranteed to give you such support as might be necessary for the protection of your rights. This obligation is not expressed in the charter, but exists just the same by implication. In other words, there is a moral obligation on the part of the Government to see that you have fair play. It would be absurd for the Government to incorporate you gentlemen for the purpose of doing a certain thing and then not to see that you are not deprived unjustly of your rights.

Mr. Blaine asked what rights were needed from Costa Rica, and Mr. Menocal showed him a plan of the canal route and pointed out to him how the dam at Ochoa would cause the flooding of the lands of Costa Rica.

After further discussion, Mr. Blaine wrote and read to us the following dispatch, which he caused to be sent to Nicaragua, addressed to Minister Mizner:

The United States Government learns with surprise of rumors of an attempt to impair or deprive the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua of its rights as embodied in the contract granted by Nicaragua to that country. The United States can not understand how a company chartered under its laws should be treated with injustice by Nicaragua. You will please ascertain whence these disquieting rumors have arisen and communicate with me as soon as possible. You will also leave a copy of this dispatch with the Nicaraguan secretary of foreign affairs. The United States Government can not remain passive when the rights of a corporation organized under its laws are threatened with injustice.

The result was that on the 9th of October Mr. Blaine sent me the following dispatch:

HITCHCOCK, Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York:

Mizner telegraphs "all difficulties settled. Papers executed in triplicate. This Government will retain one."

BLAINE.

Mr. Guzman telegraphed the same day:

Mr. HIRAM HITCHCOCK, New York:

I sincerely congratulate the company and yourself upon the good news received from Nicaragua.

H. GUZMAN.

The following messages were also sent October 9:

His Excellency PRESIDENT OF NICARAGUA, Managua:

Please accept my sincere congratulations upon the happy termination of all differences and the company's assurance that it will vigorously prosecute the work of the canal in the interest of Nicaragua and the whole commercial world.

HIRAM HITCHCOCK, President.

On the 11th of October the following dispatch was received:

PRESIDENT OF THE MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA:

I congratulate myself jointly with you upon the happy settlement of the canal question, and with the greatest satisfaction I offer the cordial assistance of my Government to the efforts of the company for the realization of this grand enterprise.

ROBERTO SACAZA,
President of the Republic.

On the 12th of November Mr. Hall, the agent of the company, cabled from Managua as follows:

The Government of Nicaragua has approved plans submitted by Chief Engineer Menocal for the Nicaraguan Canal, entrance at San Juan del Norte. They are satisfied perfectly.

The agreement referred to in Mr. Mizner's telegram to Mr. Blaine, as signed in triplicate, was a joint declaration that the company on its part would adhere strictly to the concession, acknowledging the jurisdiction of the Nicaraguan Government over the canal and its ports, and Nicaragua, on its part, revoked the orders prohibiting formal beginning of canal construction and approved the plans.

On the 18th of September, 1890, in a conference with Mr. Blaine, at Bar Harbor, we went over the entire canal situation, especially considering the articles of noncompliance, which would cause a forfeiture of the concession. We agreed that the only remaining cause of forfeiture would be the failure to do work upon the canal to the amount of $2,000,000 on or before the 8th of October, 1890. I said to him that we had put much more than that into the work, and therefore no question should arise; but from the fact that we had had some misunderstandings with the Nicaraguan Government, I thought that I would take every precaution in the matter.

On the following day Mr. Blaine sent the following dispatch to Mr. Mizner at Central America:

Be at Managua from the 4th until the 10th of October. Witness the settlement of accounts between the Government of Nicaragua and the Nicaraguan Company and protect the rights and interests of this great American enterprise. If any question arises, you will act judiciously but firmly for the full protection of such rights and interests.

During the conversation reference was made to the various attacks of the enemies of the canal, referring particularly to the last one, the attempt to repeal our charter, and the admirable adverse report on that attempt which was made by Chairman Baker, of the Committee on Commerce of the House of Representatives, by the unanimous direction of the committee.

The Nicaraguan Government ascertained that more than $2,000,000 had been expended on the canal, and that therefore Article XLVII of the concession had been complied with; and later I received the following letter:

LEGACION DE NICARAGUA, Washington, December 12, 1890.

MY DEAR SIR: It affords me great pleasure to inform you that I am in receipt of a cablegram from His Excellency the President of Nicaragua, in which he directs me to inform you that Article XLVII of the concession has been fully and completely complied with.

In conveying this information to you, I desire to congratulate most heartfly yourself and the other members of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua for the success which so far has crowned the great enterprise. I remain, dear sir,

Very truly, yours, H. GUZMAN.

MR. HIRAM HITCHCOCK,
President of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, New York.

As will be seen by Article LIII of the concession, this last act in fulfillment of Article XLVII rendered the concession nonforfeitable.

On the 22d of August, 1893, Minister Guzman received in Managua, from the minister of fomento, a full power of attorney, giving him authority to settle and compromise with the company, ad referendum, any and all differences or claims which may arise from the failure of the company to comply with any of the provisions of the concession. Dr. Guzman returned to the United States late in September, and was present at a meeting of the board of directors held November 2, 1893. The following is an extract from the minutes of said meeting:

The president asked Dr. Guzman whether, in view of his recent visit to Nicaragua, he had any information to present to the board. In reply, Dr. Guzman said that he wished to assure the company that the relations between the Government of Nicaragua and the company were of the most cordial nature, and that the Government was very desirous to aid the company in its work in every way possible; that his Government had given him full authority with reference to all matters connected with the canal, which authority he had exhibited to the president of the canal company, and he wished to assure the board that he should do everything in his power, both as minister and as member of the board, as well as an individual, to preserve the friendly relations between his Government and the company, and to promote the interests of the canal; and that when he failed to do that, he should insist upon resigning as the representative of his Government and as a member of this board; that he should do everything in his power in Washington this winter to secure cooperation of this Government in construction of the canal, and that if after a reasonable time such cooperation should be found not practicable, then he should advocate that his Government, in cooperation with the company, should go abroad for such financial assistance as might be found necessary to carry on the enterprise to completion.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a correct copy.

THOMAS B. ATKINS,
Secretary and Treasurer.

Made January 28, 1897.

Since the said meeting of November 2, 1893, Dr. Guzman has repeatedly stated that it was his Government's intention to give the company all the time it needed to recover from the panic of 1893.

Soon after that we received notice of seizures of some of our property at Grey Town which we regarded as illegal, and I went to Washington with the papers bearing on the case and laid the matter before Secretary of State Gresham, and on the 23d of April, 1894, Mr. Gresham cabled Minister Baker at Central America as follows:

It is reported here that property of the Maritime Canal Company has been seized at Grey Town as the property of the construction company. Papers exhibited to me indicate that the seizure was unauthorized. You are expected to give the matter your attention, and to do what you consistently can for the protection of the property and rights of the canal company.

On May 10, 1894, I received the following letter:

A.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 9, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I have just received a telegram from Minister Baker, saying he can do nothing in the canal matter without the assistance of an able lawyer who understands the Spanish language and practice; that matters are in the worst possible shape; that the canal property has been virtually confiscated and the concession attacked.

Yours, truly,

W. Q. GRESHAM.

HIRAM HITCHCOCK, Esq.,
New York City, N. Y.

On the 26th of April, 1894, I was surprised to receive a copy from Minister Guzman of a letter addressed by Señor Gamez, of the Nicaragua cabinet, misdirected to the agent of the Interoceanic Canal Company at Granada April 7, 1894, which was in effect a notification that Nicaragua regarded the company's concession as forfeited. At the same time some of the company's property was seized at Grey Town. The company then sought the protection of the power that created it—the United States—and the then honorable Secretary of State, the late Judge Gresham, reviewed the case, examined the concession, and arrived at the conclusion that there was no existing cause whatever for the forfeiture of the concession, and by his direction the United States minister at Managua cooperated with the general agent of the company, and the Government of Nicaragua withdrew the notice. And on the 2d of July, 1894, I received the following dispatch:

I have just received a telegram from Minister Baker, as follows:
"Gamez's letter forfeiting canal franchises withdrawn. All serene."

W. Q. GRESHAM.

I also received from Minister Guzman a copy of a cable from President Zelaya to him stating the same thing. On the 3d of January, 1895, Dr. Guzman was present at a meeting of the board of directors of the Maritime Canal Company, and I will read to you the following extract from the records of the meeting on that date:

Mr. Bryan asked for information as to the relations existing between the company and the Government of Nicaragua. Minister Guzman replied that they were of the most cordial nature; never were they so much so as at the present time; that the Government were most anxious to aid the company in the construction of the canal, and was ready to concede whatever might be necessary to insure success.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a correct copy.

THOS. B. ATKINS,
Secretary and Treasurer.

Made January 28, 1897.

In the summer of 1895 the form of an agreement on the Tipitapa Canal question was discussed at Managua between the Government of Nicaragua and the general agent of the Maritime Canal Company, and then the Government sent a special representative, Señor Gamez, with our agent to New York, where the matter was further discussed and changes were made in the form of agreement. It was also agreed and understood that the question could rest without prejudice to either party for a year.

In the summer of 1896 the special agent came again to New York with the agent of the company, and on the 28th day of August, 1896, the consideration of the subject was further postponed until May, 1897.

On the 7th of July, 1896, the Hon. Lewis Baker, minister of the United States to Central America, wrote to me the following letter:

MANAGUA, July 7, 1896.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Christanto Medina, of Paris and Central America, remarked to me a few days ago that you and some of your confrères were uneasy lest this Government may take some steps to disturb or cast a shadow over the Maritime Canal concession; and he asked me my opinion as to such a probability.

I answered him promptly and with perfect assurance of the absolute correctness of my statement, that the Government of Nicaragua has no intention of doing anything of the kind. Mr. Medina fully agrees with me in this.

To you I will say, the fact is that the movement or threat made prior to the visit of General Macauley was nothing more nor less than a blackmailing scheme of a shrewd person, but he failed to find an accomplice in the General, and the threat was withdrawn in a legal and an honorable way.

Since that day the company has been in no danger whatever.

Further, I have had the positive assurance, and have had it several times repeated to me by the President, that nothing will be done by this Government to disturb the concession or to alarm its friends who are attempting to raise money for the prosecution of the work.

If both the Maritime Company and the Government of the United States show a desire to have the concession so changed as to permit the Government to build and control the canal, and therefore desire the time extended sufficiently to enable the latter to complete the work, I have the assurance of the President that such a change and extension would be readily agreed to by the Government of Nicaragua.

The fact is, since the Leon crowd have been completely banished, there is no longer any honest opposition to the canal.

I will say this for the President. Since the reorganization of the Government he is the undisputed master. He "sits at the head of the table." He is unselfishly in favor of the building of the canal by the present company, if it has the means, or by the United States Government.

I have satisfactory reasons for making this statement, and I am assured by Mr. Medina that his information accords with mine, as stated. This gentleman will be in New York soon, he informs me, and will no doubt see you.

No answer is required to this letter. It is written for the sole reason of giving you the assurances that are set forth in it. If they are worth nothing, they cost nothing.

Very truly, yours,

LEWIS BAKER.

H. HITCHCOCK, Esq., New York.

On the 23d of November, 1896, President Zelaya, of Nicaragua, wrote me as follows:

MANAGUA, November 23, 1896.

DEAR SIR: Your very esteemed letter of the 29th of October last, to which I have the pleasure to refer, reached me in due time.

By the contents of your letter I learn of the efforts made by you and by Mr. Wieser toward the organization of the works to build railroads in the country and also of coining, and which to you appear of feasible realization.

The country is at the present moment in very favorable conditions to undertake such enterprises, and offers to immigrants all sorts of guaranties.

I trust that, in conformity with your promise, as soon as the electoral campaign be over and confidence restored, you will kindly favor me with favorable reports in regard to the construction of the canal.

Once more I take pleasure in assuring you of my consideration and esteem, and please accept my thanks in the name of this Government for your wishes for the prosperity of the country over which it is my honor to preside.

I remain, respectfully, yours,

J. A. ZELAYA.

President the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua,

I was consequently amazed to read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 22, instant, the letter addressed by Minister Rodriguez to the Secretary of State, and by him transmitted to the Senate, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 22, 1897.

SIR: In the matter of the various bills now pending in Congress looking to the construction of an interoceanic canal through Nicaragua, I have the honor to inclose herewith for the information of your committee a communication just received by me from the minister of the Greater Republic of Central America at this capital.

Respectfully, yours,

RICHARD OLNEY.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate.

LEGATION OF THE GREATER REPUBLIC OF CENTRAL AMERICA,
Washington, January 15, 1897.

The undersigned, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Greater Republic of Central America, has the honor to address his excellency the Secretary of State, informing him that, as several bills relative to the construction of an interoceanic canal through Nicaragua have been for some time pending before both Houses of the American Congress, his Government recently instructed him to examine them, and to make, under certain conditions, suitable representations to his excellency the Secretary of State.

The undersigned has consequently examined said bills, which are five in number, to wit:

Three introduced in the House of Representatives—one by Mr. MAHON, December 3, 1895, another by Mr. DOOLITTLE, and the third by Mr. BARHAM, both the latter having been introduced December 6, 1895.

Two introduced in the Senate, one by Mr. PERKINS, December 30, 1895, and the other by Mr. MORGAN, June 1, 1896.

All these bills take it for granted, with minor differences of detail, that the American Government is to take an important part in the enterprise, and that it is to furnish the money necessary for the construction of the canal by the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, whose constitution and organization they essentially modify.

Unfortunately, the undersigned observes that the provisions of these bills are at variance, both generally and in matters of detail, with the stipulations of the contract of April 24, 1887, between Nicaragua and the company aforesaid, from which contract the company derives its existence and which is the basis of its enterprise.

That contract stipulates, in its eighth article, that the concession therein provided for shall in no case be transferable to governments or to foreign public powers, and Article LIII provides that any contravention of this stipulation shall entail a forfeiture of the contract. As it can not be denied that the bills to which the undersigned has reference—although they do not expressly say so—effect that transfer most fully, making the Government of the United States of America the absolute owner of the enterprise and of the canal and its rights, the result to which they inevitably conduce is the forfeiture of the contract.

Article XLVII of that instrument provides that the company shall undertake, at its own expense, the final surveys of the ground and the location of the line of the canal by a commission of competent engineers, two of whom are to be appointed by the Government of Nicaragua, and the aforesaid Article LIII provides that a failure to comply with this stipulation shall entail the forfeiture of the concession. The bills, however, provide that the canal shall be constructed under the surveillance of the Department of Engineers of the Army of the United States of America, and according to its plans; and that three engineers shall be designated by the President for that purpose, who shall make the explorations and estimates. This provision likewise conduces to the forfeiture of the contract.

"The people of all nations shall be invited to contribute the necessary capital to the enterprise. * * *

"Of the capital with which the company shall organize, and which it proposes to distribute among the different countries interested in the enterprise, there shall be reserved at least five (5) per cent for the Central American Government and citizens that may desire to subscribe." These provisions of Article VII of the contract are antagonized by the bills, which distribute the capital of the enterprise among the United States of America, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and the company.

"The capital stock of the final company shall be composed of shares, bonds, or obligations of any other kind, in such proportion as it may deem convenient." This is another provision of the ninth article. The bills, however, fix the amount of the capital stock in shares, of which they dispose in such a way that they are of no use for the work of the enterprise, as they ought to be, according to the intent of the contract. For the work of the enterprise the bills create bonds, which must thus be converted into capital stock or be left out of the contract. The undersigned need not here point out the infractions which the bills involve.

According to Article X of the contract, the board of directors is to be composed of persons at least one-half of whom shall be chosen—by the company, of course—from the promoters who may yet preserve their quality as such. The bills organize the board of directors with 11 members, 8 of whom are to be appointed by the President of the United States, in different capacities, 1 by Nicaragua, 1 by Costa Rica, and 1 by the canal company. The difference between this provision and the stipulation referred to could not be more marked than it is.

Among the benefits which Nicaragua reserves to herself, in consideration of the valuable privileges and rights which she surrenders, is 6 per cent of the shares, bonds, certificates, or such other obligations as the company may issue with a view to raising the capital. Now, notwithstanding the fact that the company has made several issues, it has not fulfilled this obligation; and as the bills say nothing on this particular point of shares, bonds, certificates, or other obligations which were to be issued and have not been issued in favor of Nicaragua, these securities would probably either be lost in the new form of the enterprise, or would be liable to troublesome and tedious litigation.

Two of the bills in question have already been reported by a committee, so that they may finally exclude the others; nothing, however, is established in them with regard to the shares that would belong to Nicaragua; and it might happen, owing to this, that Nicaragua would get none at all.

If the company were to issue a hundred or a hundred and fifty million dollars' worth of bonds in order to meet the cost of the work, which bonds, as I have already remarked, would have to be considered as capital or be left out of the contract, Nicaragua would be entitled to her 6 per cent in virtue of the stipulation above referred to; but the bills leave no door open to such a possibility, nor do they allow her any participation in the issue which is to be made in order to pay for the work already done.

The company, by Article XIV of the aforesaid contract, has contracted the solemn obligation to construct, at its own expense, within the term of three years, reckoned from the commencement of the work upon the interoceanic canal, a navigable canal between Lake Managua and the navigable part of the Tipitapa River, near Pasquier, of sufficient dimensions to admit of the free passage of vessels drawing 6 feet and of 150 feet in length. That term expired a long time ago, but the company, notwithstanding the most earnest solicitation, has made no pretense of meeting that obligation, or of definitely adjusting the compensation which it ought to pay in order to be discharged therefrom. The bills establish nothing on this other point, and Nicaragua's rights in this matter might thus be annulled in consequence of their silence.

By the plan involved in the new form which the bills devise for the enterprise, the present company is extinguished, and nothing remains of it, in its relations with the enterprise, save the shadow of a personality represented by a vote in a board of directors of eleven members; while in its relations with Nicaragua it may always claim full personality as the holder of the concession, although having none of the means necessary to enable it to meet its obligations.

Finally, it is to be observed that, while the bills contravene and set at naught stipulations of the contract, they do not state whether the remaining ones still remain in force or not, although among these latter there are very many which are of no great importance to Nicaragua in particular, and to Central America in general.

The undersigned is convinced of the good faith of the gentlemen who have introduced these bills in both Houses, and of those who advocate their passage; he takes, moreover, pleasure in stating that he recognizes these efforts as the result of the legitimate interest which they feel in behalf of the construction of an interoceanic canal, in which the confederation that he represents is quite as deeply interested. And, in calling attention to the serious objections enumerated, which would render these efforts nugatory, the only object that he has in view is to protect just rights which he thinks are menaced by the bills aforesaid.

It seems evident that the company is unable to raise money to fulfill its contract unless the United States of America furnish it therewith, and since that contract excludes the possibility of attaining that result, the undersigned, having been duly authorized to do so, proposes to his excellency the Secretary of State that the two Governments—relying upon the favorable disposition of the Government of the United States of America—shall come to a direct understanding on the subject, on the basis of the Zavala-Frelinghuysen treaty, with such modifications as may be agreed upon, and endeavoring to reach a just arrangement with the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, so that it may renounce a concession whose conditions it is unable to fulfill.

The undersigned, in thus obeying the instructions of his Government, avails himself of this occasion to reiterate to his excellency Secretary Olney the assurances of his most distinguished consideration.

J. D. RODRIGUEZ.

His Excellency RICHARD OLNEY,
Secretary of State of the United States, etc.
Washington, D. C.

I replied to this letter on January 23, as follows:

THE MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA,
New York, January 23, 1897.

DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 22, containing a copy of a letter addressed by the minister of the Greater Republic of Central America at Washington to you, and transmitted by you to the Senate, in which the minister reflects upon the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, a company chartered by the United States, and which company, in compliance with a provision of said charter, reports annually its transactions to the Government of the United States, through the Department of the Interior, and which holds concessions from the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, under which the construction of the Nicaragua Canal has been commenced and is to be completed.

It therefore becomes my duty to briefly call your attention to some of the statements contained in the minister's letter, and to note some omissions. Referring to certain bills before the Congress of the United States, he says that "the bills, however, provide that the canal shall be constructed under the surveillance of the Department of Engineers of the Army of the United States of America and according to its plans;" and adds, "this provision likewise conduces to the forfeiture of the contract." But he omits to inform you that the final surveys and the location of the line of the canal were made and concluded by a commission of engineers, in strict conformity with Article XLVII of the concession, and were formally accepted by the Government of Nicaragua on the 8th day of October, 1889.

He quotes from Article IX of the concession, "the people of all nations shall be invited to contribute the necessary capital to the enterprise," but omits the remainder of the sentence, namely, "and it shall be sufficient for the fulfillment of this requirement to publish an advertisement for thirty consecutive days in one of the principal daily papers of each of the cities New York, London, and Paris." He quotes further, "there shall be reserved at least 5 per cent for the Central American Governments and citizens that may desire to subscribe," but he omits to inform you that soon after its organization the company fully performed all these conditions of Article IX in the manner required therein.

Referring to the 6 per cent of shares that the concession obligates the company to issue to Nicaragua, the minister says the "company has not fulfilled its obligations." The fact is that the company issued this stock to Nicaragua on the 31st day of October, 1890, and notified that Government that the certificate was at its disposal, but the Government has not yet appointed an agent to receive the same as provided in Article L of the concession.

The minister states that the company has failed to meet its obligations to construct the Tipitapa Canal under the terms of Article XIV of the concession. As to this I will say that the surveys for the canal as described in Article XIV were made, and then the Government of Nicaragua asked for a deeper canal than the concessions provided for. Before a resurvey was completed a desire was expressed for a still deeper canal. Pending negotiations on this subject, and notwithstanding the fact that the Government had failed to place at the disposal of the company the lands required for the line of the canal, the Government issued a notice to the effect that it considered the canal concession forfeited. The company then sought the protection of the power that created it—the United States—and the then honorable Secretary of State, the late Judge Gresham, reviewed the case, examined the concession, and arrived at the conclusion that there was no existing cause whatever of forfeiture of the concession, and by his direction the United States minister at Managua cooperated with the general agent of the company, and the Government of Nicaragua withdrew the notice. Whether the Tipitapa Canal will be constructed, and of what dimensions, or whether compensation will be made in lieu thereof, are matters still under negotiation, and any differences that may arise in the consideration thereof are not causes of forfeiture, but are to be settled by arbitration under Article LV of the concession.

While the honorable minister may not have intended any injustice to the company by his letter, yet he must be supposed to have made a careful study of the canal question, the concessions and the operations under them, and if so, his letter seems inexplicable.

It would appear from his letter that a contemplation of possible Congressional action in amending the charter of the Maritime Canal Company has interposed itself between him and the true relations existing between the Government of Nicaragua and Costa Rica and this company under the concessions.

In this connection it is pertinent to say that in an interview with the honorable minister since his arrival from Central America I alluded to the bills before Congress and stated to him in substance that they were generally believed to be the result of a strong desire on the part of the Congress to hasten the construction of this vitally important connection of the coast lines of this continent; and I added that, whatever the outcome might be, the Maritime Canal Company could accept of no measure that would be unjust to the powers from whom it received the concessions.

This letter of the minister is an attack upon the integrity of the Maritime Canal Company and its concessions, and on behalf of that company I ask the protection and aid of the Government of the United States in the defense and maintenance of its concessionary rights and its property.

Very respectfully,

HIRAM HITCHCOCK,
President of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

Hon. RICHARD OLNEY,
Secretary of State.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Mr. Hitchcock, do you know in what manner the passage of the bill by the Senate in January, 1895, was received by the minister of Nicaragua, then resident at this capital, and what expression he gave as to the happiness of the people and Government of Nicaragua over the passage of that bill, if any?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In reply I will say that on the last day of January, 1895, I received the following letter from Minister Guzman:

WASHINGTON, January 30, 1895.

DEAR MR. HITCHCOCK: I am sorry you could not be here the day our bill passed the Senate, but I saw by your telegram that you were detained by a sad loss in your family.

I should have written you before this about the great victory, had I not been sick. I was taken with a bad attack of quinsy, and I only left my bed yesterday.

Please accept my congratulations for the success of the bill, and let me hear, as soon as possible, about your future plans. I am sure that my cablegram announcing the victory was received with joy in Nicaragua.

Very sincerely, yours,

H. GUZMAN.

Later I received a letter from the Hon. Lewis Baker, minister to Central America from the United States, written from San José, Costa Rica, on the 28th of January, 1895, saying:

I have a telegram from the general minister of Nicaragua this morning informing me that the canal-guaranty bill had passed the Senate. If this good news is confirmed, I shall fully expect the bill to pass the House. If this proves true, won't you do me the favor to cable me promptly, giving me the facts? On the statement of the Nicaragua minister, I have sent congratulatory messages to both the Nicaraguan and Costa Rican Governments.

The CHAIRMAN. From the fact that you had made a full statement of all your troubles with Nicaragua, if I may call them troubles, and that the Government of Nicaragua had expressed itself as being fully satisfied that all the terms of the concession had been complied with, and after receiving this letter from Mr. Baker, which you have just quoted, and after receiving the letter, which is above set out, from President Zelaya, and after receiving the letter from Mr. Guzman, which you have just quoted, did you have any suspicion or expectation that there was any real remaining difficulty or difference between your company and the Government of Nicaragua?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I had not, except that the Tipitapa question was a matter that we were arranging for arbitration if necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. And that matter had been postponed for that purpose?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That question had been postponed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Tipitapa Canal had no connection whatever with any right of forfeiture on the part of Nicaragua of the concession, and if there was any possible default on the part of the company, which I understand you to deny, the arrangement or settlement of that matter was entirely apart from your right to go on and build the main canal?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Entirely apart.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you yet convinced, notwithstanding the protest of the minister from the Greater Republic of Central America, that Nicaragua is friendly to your company and desires to see the canal succeed?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My belief is that President Zelaya and his present administration in Nicaragua are very friendly to the company and exceedingly desirous to have the canal completed, and I believe them to be desirous that the company shall be aided by the United States in order that the completion may be hastened.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there not a remaining jealousy or antagonism between Nicaragua and Costa Rica, growing out of old disputes, which has not been entirely quieted, and with which you have no concern, and may not that jealousy be at the bottom of the movement of the Greater Republic of Central America?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is quite possible, and may be more than that. It may be highly probable. But the company has but one object, and that is to carry out both its concessions from those Governments in the utmost good faith under the charter granted by the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Has not your company put itself to a great deal of trouble, inconvenience, and expense in the effort to reconcile those two Governments with each other upon the subject of the construction of this canal?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We have done our best in that direction frequently for the last ten years, as will be shown by what I have already stated before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been asserted that your company is bankrupt: Is that true?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is not true. The Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua is and always has been entirely solvent, and has no outstanding debts we are not able to meet. Anyone making a different statement confuses the Maritime Canal Company with the construction company, which held a contract with the Maritime Canal Company to construct the canal, and which was obliged to suspend and go into liquidation in 1893. This latter fact is not surprising when it is remembered that during that period of great financial depression such vast corporations as the Erie Railroad, the Baltimore and Ohio, the Reading, and the Union Pacific were obliged to default on their obligations and to resort to reorganization of their companies.

HIRAM HITCHCOCK.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to present one more paper, and then I will yield the floor. I received recently a letter, upon another topic entirely, from a gentleman in California, who is a very eminent man, a very learned lawyer, and was writing to me about some questions of law. In the course of his letter he presented a statement that I wish now to read:

In 1851-52 the late Commodore Van Derbilt (he always spelled it so himself) was at the head of a New York company organized to build such a canal, and at his instance I spent about a twelvemonth on the Isthmus as general agent of the company. Living right on the lake shore, and frequently moving up and down the river, I became, of course, familiar with the route and the whole situation. In fact, the first passenger steamer that ascended the river passed the Machuca Rapids with my foot on the safety valve and Mr. Van Derbilt at the helm, and I have gone the whole 125 miles of the river in a skiff.

That effort at interoceanic navigation seems now almost forgotten, but the way it came to be abandoned is worth recalling. The company relied on getting capital in England, and Van Derbilt and Joseph L. White (then lately a member of the House of Representatives from Indiana) went to London in the fall of 1851 and opened negotiations with the Barings for $26,000,000—the estimated cost of the work. They carried with them elaborate surveys, field notes, and estimates made by a Colonel Childs, a New York engineer of repute, who had made their surveys. I think Childs accompanied them himself for explanations. The project was laid before the Barings, who gave it close attention, and after a study of available statistics decided to take it up and finance the undertaking, if Colonel Childs's estimates could pass the scrutiny and win the approval of a board of English engineers, to whom they referred the question. The canal then projected was much smaller than that now contemplated, and was not expected to pass a ship drawing more than 13 feet of water (about 800 tons). I still have a tracing of Childs's map, and somewhere (though not now findable) of his detailed statements. After some weeks delay, during which the bankers were most gracious and pleasant, the English engineers reported favorably, and the Commodore believed the negotiation had been quite successful, but after another, though shorter delay, the aspect of things suddenly changed and the financial gentlemen having consulted with some Government officers and eminent merchants, etc., declined the whole negotiation. The Commodore gave expression to his emotions in his fashion, by a little genteel profanity, but White, who was very deeply interested, and more politic, sought the cause of the change in the views of the bankers, and after a little hesitation learned from them that on consultation with eminent authorities on the subject they had come to the conclusion that the canal if built as proposed would result in throwing the whole commerce of the Pacific into American hands, and they were naturally averse to embarking English capital in an enterprise likely to be destructive to English interests, by building up American commerce where England then enjoyed a monopoly. The justice of this excuse was undeniable, and the American negotiators returned, disappointed.

I yield the floor with the single remark that both of the Senators from California here know this gentleman, and if any Senator desires to inquire in respect to his character and standing, they can easily ascertain.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to lay aside the pending order informally to take up Senate bill 3588.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Massachusetts does not seek to displace the pending measure?

Mr. HOAR. No.

Mr. FRYE. It is to be only informally laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Nicaragua Canal bill will be laid aside informally, if there be no objection.

THE LA ABRA AND WEIL CASES.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3588) to insure a full bench in the Court of Claims for the hearing of the cases entitled "The United States against La Abra Silver Mining Company and others," and "The United States against Alice Weil and others." It is a measure which has already been read. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] desired to examine it, and he will propose a slight amendment, which will take but a moment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. VILAS. After the word "the," at the end of line 12, I move to insert the words "supreme court of the;" so that instead of reading "of any circuit or district court of the United States or of the District of Columbia" it will read "or of the supreme court of the District of Columbia." That practically gives definite expression to what I suppose is really intended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

EASTERN NEBRASKA AND GULF RAILWAY COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3555) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to the Eastern Nebraska and Gulf Railway Company right of way through the Omaha and Winnebago Indian reservations, in the State of Nebraska," by extending the time for the construction of said railway.

The amendment was, in line 9, to strike out "four" and insert "three."

Mr. ALLEN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 6902) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. Viel; and

A bill (H. R. 10085) for the relief of Elnora Shuman.

The bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH CABLE LINES.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9149) to regulate the establishment of submarine cable lines or systems in the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The bill was read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STEWART. I would rather that that bill should lie over.

Mr. FRYE. The bill has been reported favorably unanimously by both the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Commerce, and there is no opposition to it. The opposition which appeared perhaps a month ago has been withdrawn.

Mr. NELSON. I am opposed to that bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am opposed to it, also.

Mr. NELSON. And I have no recollection of the bill having been considered in the Committee on Commerce at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FRYE. It is on the Calendar as having been reported from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NELSON. I do not know how the bill got there.

Mr. FRYE. I am very much surprised. We gave hearings in the Committee on Commerce and invited everybody to appear before that committee who had anything to say about the bill, and only one company appeared and had a hearing.

Mr. STEWART. Under the circumstances, I think the bill had better lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed, and the bill will go over.

Mr. FRYE subsequently said: I desire to make a remark. I made a statement that the bill the consideration of which I had asked for had been reported by the Committee on Commerce without any objection. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] called my statement in question. I hold in my hand the printed report on the bill made by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the United States Senate. The same bill was pending in the Committee on Foreign Relations, and by the instruction of the committee I reported it from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it took the place of the other committee bill; and this is the one. I am not in the habit of making statements which I do not know to be true.

Mr. NELSON. I understood the Senator to say this was a bill which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE. It has been reported, and I hold the report in my hand.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 514) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Wear Crawford.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9707) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CURTIS of New York, Mr. GRIFFIN, and Mr. TYLER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

MINERAL OIL LANDS.

Mr. CLARK. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3551) to authorize the entry and patenting of lands containing petroleum and other mineral oils under the placer-mining laws of the United States.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that any person authorized to enter lands under the mining laws of the United States may enter and obtain patent to lands containing petroleum or other mineral oils, and chiefly valuable therefor, under the provisions of the laws relating to placer mineral claims; and further provides that lands containing such petroleum or other mineral oils which have heretofore been filed upon, claimed, or improved as mineral, but not yet patented, may be held and patented under the provisions of this act the same as if such filing, claim, or improvement were subsequent to the date of its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9707) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. BRICE were appointed.

HARRIET F. HERRICK.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2859) granting an increase of pension to Harriet F. Herrick.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll, at $12 per month, the name of Harriet F. Herrick, of Beverly, State of Massachusetts, widow of Moses S. Herrick, deceased, late a member of Company E, Eighth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SPECULATION IN CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6834) to prevent the purchasing of or speculation in claims against the Federal Government by United States officers.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 10, after the word "purchase," to insert "at less than the full face value thereof;" in line 11, after the word "indirectly," to insert "any claim for fee, mileage, or expenses of;" in line 12, after the word "witness," to strike out "fee or claim, or the fee or claim of any;" in the same line, after the word "juror," to strike out "or the fee or claim of any;" in line 13, after the word "or," to strike out "the fee or claim," and in line 14, after the word "other," to strike out "person" and insert "officer of court;" so as to make the section read:

That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any United States marshal or deputy marshal, or any clerk or deputy clerk of any court of the United States or of any Territory thereof, or any United States attorney or assistant attorney, or any United States judge, or United States commissioner, or other person holding any office, employment, or position of trust or profit under the Government of the United States to purchase, at less than the full face value thereof, either directly or indirectly, any claim for fee, mileage, or expenses of any witness, juror, deputy marshal, or of any other officer of court whatsoever against the United States Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after the word "shall," to strike out "be guilty of a violation of the first section of this bill shall be liable to an indictment by the grand jury of the United States," and insert "violate this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor;" in line 5, after the word "find," to strike out "in any sum of not less than fifty nor more than;" in line 6, before the word "five," to insert "not exceeding;" in the same line, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thousand" and insert "hundred;" and after the word "dollars" to strike out "and final judgment against the defendant shall ipso facto operate as a removal of the person convicted and render his office or position vacant;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That any person who shall violate this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be fined not exceeding $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with this bill are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

TRAFFIC BRIDGE OVER THE OUACHITA RIVER.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 6750. It is a bridge bill which has been favorably reported by the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6750) to authorize the mayor and city council of Monroe and the police jury of the parish of Ouachita, La., to construct a traffic bridge across the Ouachita River opposite said city.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF RICHARD LAWSON.

Mr. BACON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3239) for the relief of the estate of Richard Lawson.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the administrator de bonis non of the estate of Richard Lawson, late of Baltimore, Md., to sue in the United States Court of Claims for the said Lawson's individual interest as a partner in the late firm of John McFadon & Co., and also the late firm of William McFadon & Co., formerly of Baltimore, Md., on account of French spoliations committed prior to the year 1800, the court to pass upon the facts and law in the case and report the same to Congress.

Mr. PLATT. I do not understand that bill, Mr. President.

Mr. BACON. I have the report here.

Mr. PLATT. I should like some explanation of it.

Mr. BACON. It is simply in the nature of a bill to authorize a party to sue under the act of January 20, 1885, to establish the validity of a claim under the French spoliations act. He has been barred, not by his own neglect, but it was a case where the claim was that of a firm, and it turned out, pending the investigation, that the member of the firm in whose name the suit originally had been filed within the time limited by the act had prior to that time assigned his individual interest.

Mr. PLATT. The bill does not propose to create any additional liability in the French spoliation claims beyond that which the Senator has stated?

Mr. BACON. None whatever. It simply allows this man to avail himself of the act of 1885, from the provisions of which he is now barred.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 1, 1897, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 29, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 1833) to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont calls up a conference report which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1833) entitled "An act to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In line 2 of said amendment numbered 1, and after the word "to" where it occurs the second time, insert the words "the United States;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "not," in line 31 of the bill, and in place of the language stricken out by said amendment insert the words "except such as may have been incurred for wages or supplies in the operation of the property purchased;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 3 and 4, and agree to an amendment as follows: After the word "Provided," in line 32 of the bill, insert as follows:

"That the capital stock of the corporation herein authorized shall be divided into shares each of the par value of $100, and shall not exceed the amount of the funded debt existing and unpaid at the time of the decree of foreclosure: Provided, That additional stock for the purchase or construction of additional road, or for equipment or betterments, may be issued by the corporation upon the payment into its treasury therefor of the full par value thereof in cash, or in return for labor or property estimated at its actual value; but no such additional stock shall be issued by said corporation until such issue shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior as actually representing money, labor, or property estimated at its actual value, at the full or par value of said issue of stock. The total stock issued under the provisions of this act shall not exceed $100,000,000."

And the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 5.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"Provided further, That in case any uncompleted contracts for the purchase of land shall be pending at the time of such foreclosure sale, such new company shall, upon payment to it of any unpaid balance of purchase money for such land at the time provided in such contracts for the sale thereof, convey and release to the holders of such contracts all its title, interest, and estate in and to the land embraced in such contracts."

And after the word "company," in line 4 of said amendment numbered 6, insert the words "to any bona fide settler and occupant in a tract of 640 acres or less."

Also, strike out from line 7 of said amendment numbered 6 the words "said contracts for the sale of lands," and in lieu thereof insert the words "any such contract."

Also, after the word "of," in line 12 of said amendment, insert the word "any."

Also, strike out from line 12 of said amendment the word "contracts" and insert in lieu thereof the word "contract."

And the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 7.

GROVE L. JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

DAVID B. HILL,
O. H. PLATT,
C. D. CLARK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The amendment of the House numbered 1 seeks to subject the new corporation to all the obligations and duties to the United States imposed upon the original company by the charter of 1866. Hence the words "the United States" are added to the amendment by the conference committee to make such meaning clear and certain.

The amendment of the House numbered 2 would subject the purchasers to payment of all the unsecured indebtedness of the old corporation, whereas on foreclosure of mortgage such purchasers take no liability in respect thereto. The conference committee has imposed such liability to the extent of all obligations for wages and supplies incurred in the operation of the road legally chargeable against the old company.

The amendments of the House Nos. 3 and 4 are contradictory. Amendment No. 3 restricts the issue of additional stock to cash payment at par; amendment No. 4 provides for such issue on prior approval of the Secretary of the Interior in exchange for money, labor, or property estimated at its actual cost value. To harmonize this the language of each amendment has been embodied in one amendment wherein the issue of such stock is restricted to the actual value of the property when exchanged therefor, as ascertained by the Secretary of the Interior, regardless of its original and probable increased cost.

The amendment of the House No. 5, wherefrom the House conferees recommend that the House recede, requires the purchasers at foreclosure sale, and as a condition precedent to reorganization, to relinquish to the United States all interest in the lands granted the original company situate opposite road unconstructed at date of the forfeiture act approved July 6, 1886. The bill as passed by the Senate broadly protects all rights of the United States in this regard. The validity of the forfeiture act is now under submission before the United States Supreme Court in a case wherein the United States has been fully heard in argument. If that court sustains the validity of such forfeiture act, then these prospective purchasers could take no possible interest in such lands, and the amendment of the House would be unnecessary. Should the court decide that the grant was not so subject to forfeiture, then, as matter both of law and justice, the old company and these purchasers should not be foreclosed by present legislation. The bill as now framed carefully preserves all existing rights of the United States against both in this respect.

The amendment of the House numbered 6 requires the new company to protect the land warranties and contracts of the old. It is not clear that the amendment applies to executory land contracts whereon the purchaser has made partial payments, and language has been added so providing in terms.

With respect to executed land contracts, the conference committee believed that such liability should extend to actual settlers and occupants purchasing in tracts of 640 acres or less, following legislative precedent in this regard as illustrated by the general railroad land-grant forfeiture act of September 29, 1890, section 3 (26 Stat. L., 496), where the right is so protected to a maximum of 320 acres on payment to the United States of $1.25 per acre. Here the new company is required to recoup the purchaser for loss of title to the extent of 640 acres, but without any compensation therefor.

The amendment of the House numbered 7, wherefrom the House conferees recommend that the House recede, empowers the States wherein this railroad may now or hereafter extend to require the new company to become incorporated under the laws of each of such States.

This new company would be a Federal corporation. Congress has always retained control of such corporations, but left the property thereof to the operation of State laws of taxation, police power, and like subjects within State regulation and control. To reach this result no affirmative legislation is necessary in this act. Surrender of control over the corporate franchise, if hereafter deemed wise by Congress, should be accomplished by general law applicable to all such Federal corporations and not extended to one only by special legislation.

H. HENRY POWERS,
GEO. P. HARRISON,
GROVE L. JOHNSON,
Conferees.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, there are several amendments——

Mr. McRAE. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, I should like to know if we can have some understanding about the time to be allowed for debate.

Mr. POWERS. I am content that that should be so.

Mr. McRAE. What is the purpose of the gentleman as to calling the previous question?

Mr. POWERS. I have not called for it.

Mr. McRAE. How much time does the gentleman propose to give for debate?

Mr. POWERS. How much time do you want?

Mr. McRAE. I can not very well tell. I think we should have an hour.

Mr. POWERS. I am content that an arrangement shall be made for an hour's debate on each side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition that the debate shall cease at the end of two hours, one-half to be allotted to either side?

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, there is a question involved in this report which probably does not interest the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE], and if he is going to control the debate in opposition, it seems proper that some allowance should be made for my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

The SPEAKER. There is no proposition to control the debate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. How much time do you ask for?

Mr. POWERS. An hour on a side.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I object to that.

Mr. TERRY. I will say to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS], reserving my right to object——

Mr. DOCKERY. Why do you not let them finish the Agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. TERRY. I will suggest to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] that this affects a number of States, and in the course of the debate a number of Representatives here will see that their constituents are affected by this matter. I would suggest that we have an hour and a half debate on each side.

Mr. POWERS. It is entirely immaterial to me, I will say to my friend, how much time is allotted. If the gentleman will make that request, I will accede to it.

Mr. TERRY. I ask that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that there be an hour and a half of debate on each side.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I object.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let him finish his Agricultural bill.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. If no arrangement is entered into, how much time do we have for the consideration of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is in charge of the bill.

Mr. POWERS. And I have an hour's time.

The SPEAKER. An hour's time.

Mr. TERRY. What was the answer of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. The Chair said that the bill was in charge of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS. I will endeavor to yield to my friend a reasonable share of the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] is recognized.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, this was a Senate bill which came to the House for its concurrence. The House passed seven different amendments to the Senate bill, and a conference committee was appointed to consider the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. That committee have made their report, and copies of it will be found on the desks of members. Some of these changes in the amendments adopted by the House are purely clerical in their character. Others are substantial. I assume that no gentleman has any objection to the adoption of such of the amendments as are clerical in their character. For instance, No. 1 reads:

But such new company shall be subject to all the obligations and duties to which said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company was subject under its charter or act of incorporation.

The conference committee have inserted after the word "duties" the words "to the United States," as that was the plain meaning of the amendment, doubtless, on the part of the gentleman who proposed it. I ask that that amendment be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. This is a conference report, and it is not divisible.

Mr. POWERS. Can it not be agreed to in detail?

The SPEAKER. This is a conference report, and as such it must be adopted as a whole or rejected as a whole.

Mr. POWERS. Very well, then, I will point out to the House that amendment No. 1 is simply adding the words "to the United States" after the word "duties," because in the original text the duties did not apply to anybody, and here they are specifically named.

The second amendment as adopted by the House reads:

But nothing in this act shall make such purchasers and their associates—

Alluding to the bondholders under this mortgage that are seeking this incorporation—or such new corporation liable for any debt or claims or contracts of the old corporation not "expressly assumed in their contract of purchase at said judicial sale."

That is modified in the conference committee so as to read:

Strike out the word "not," in line 31 of the bill, and in place of the language stricken out by said amendment insert the words "except such as may have been employed for wages or supplies in the operation of the property purchased."

This is to make the new corporation liable for the debts of the old corporation that the old corporation incurred for supplies and wages in the operation of the property. Of course no gentleman would ask to have the mortgages made chargeable with any debts of the old corporation to which their mortgage was paramount. But it is a principle of equity jurisprudence announced by the Supreme Court of the United States and announced in various States that wages of employees and supplies that have been furnished for the operation of a road have an equitable preference over the rights of the bondholders; and we have made that certain by incorporating in it an express stipulation that it shall be so, although in my own judgment there was no necessity for it, because the rules of law already require it. I take it that no gentleman has any objection to that amendment.

Amendment No. 3 relates to the proposed issue of new stock. When this bill was pending in the House, this amendment was put on; but it is not explicit enough to protect the rights of the stockholders and the rights of the public. Therefore the committee of conference have given it a new draft, retaining the substance of the amendment, but putting it in more specific and explicit language to make it effectual to carry out the purpose. It reads:

That the capital stock of the corporation herein authorized shall be divided into shares each of the par value of $100, and shall not exceed the amount of the funded debt existing and unpaid at the time of the decree of foreclosure.

The conference committee have substituted for the word "mortgage" the word "funded;" so that it shall read, "shall not exceed the amount of the funded debt;" because it transpires that this corporation has both a mortgage debt eo nomine, and has, in addition, another mortgage that is specified in railroad nomenclature as funded debt. Now, the object of foreclosure is to foreclose the debt known and described as the mortgage debt and the debt known and described as the funding debt. So we use the generic term "funded" as covering both, rather than the specific term "mortgage" as used in the amendment, with the proviso—

That additional stock for the purchase or construction of additional road, or for equipment or betterments, may be issued by the corporation upon the payment into its treasury therefor of the full par value thereof in cash, or in return for labor or property estimated at its actual value; but no such additional stock shall be issued by said corporation until such issue shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior—

And that it shall not exceed $100,000,000.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield. Do I understand the gentleman to state to the House that the limit imposed by the House amendment is not changed by the report of the conference committee?

Mr. POWERS. It is not changed, unless we quibble over the word "mortgage."

Mr. MOODY. I understand the gentleman to say, and I want to know whether I am right or not, that there were two mortgages—one designated as a mortgage debt, and the other as a funded debt—and that this mortgage debt eo nomine and the funded debt were both to be comprised in the foreclosure?

Mr. POWERS. Yes.

Mr. MOODY. If that is true, there is no difference in the effect of the House amendment and the conference report.

Mr. POWERS. Well, substantially none. The word "mortgage" is a term more specific than "funded." "Funded" is a generic term, and it covers both debts.

Mr. MOODY. Does it have the same effect?

Mr. POWERS. Precisely so, as I understand.

Mr. BARRETT. Will the gentleman allow me to state the difference of the effect?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Vermont yield?

Mr. POWERS. Well, I will allow the gentleman to state it when the time comes for him to debate. I will state my view, and if he wants to correct me in my grammar or in my legal proposition, he can do so.

Mr. BARRETT. I thought the gentleman from Vermont, the chairman of the committee making this conference report, would be very glad, as he seems disposed to be, to have all the information he can, that this matter go before the House at the same time.

Mr. POWERS. I should be thus happy, Mr. Speaker, but when

I am searching for information I prefer to choose my own instrumentalities.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman yield for another question? This is a mere question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Vermont yield?

Mr. POWERS. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY. I would like to ask the gentleman if, under this bill, together with the rights of succession to the powers of the corporation whose property is foreclosed, it will be possible for the reorganized company to issue not only the amount of stock which is named in this amendment, but also a corresponding amount of bonds, so that there shall be in existence at one time, in stock and in bonds together, just double the amount of the actual investment under these foreclosure proceedings? I ask for information.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, the practical working of the proposition is this: The parties who now hold the mortgage bonds upon these railroads are permitted by this act to reorganize themselves into a corporation and to utilize their mortgage bonds in the shape of stock. That is to say, the holder of $1,000 in bonds may take ten shares of stock in the new corporation, converting his bonds into stock. That is the way the capital stock is made up. That is the way the capital stock is always made up in the reorganization of a railroad company by bondholders who reorganize and put in their mortgage bonds as stock and not as bonds. Now, the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts, as I understand him, is, Can not the corporation issue a new mortgage, equaling in amount the stock that will be provided for by this amendment? I say unhesitatingly they can. I say unhesitatingly they ought to have that right. If a corporation, after it is organized as a corporation, finds it necessary to issue a mortgage for proper purposes, it should have that right.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman what are "proper purposes?"

Mr. POWERS. Any purpose that the law recognizes as proper. I am sure my friend would not say—he is too good a lawyer to say—that a railroad corporation ought not to have the right to issue, under proper circumstances, a mortgage upon its property. It may become necessary for new construction; it may become necessary for any one of a dozen lawful purposes.

Mr. MOODY. Let me say to the gentleman from Vermont that I have no objection to the issuing of a mortgage for consideration; but I want to see very clearly that, on account of the same specific sum of money, there can not be in existence in the market two obligations of bonds and of stock, each representing the same money. Let me say further that it has been asserted to me—I know not with what truth—that the reorganization committee have advertised to the bondholders that under this reorganization they shall obtain not only new bonds in place of those they now hold, but an equal amount of stock in addition. I would like to ask the gentleman from Vermont if he has investigated that question and is ready to make a statement to the House in relation to it upon his own responsibility?

Mr. POWERS. I have not investigated that question. I have not chased down all the rumors that interested parties may have circulated with reference to this proposition. I tie myself down to the language of this bill and the language of this amendment. The language of this amendment is that they may issue stock not exceeding $100,000,000. The language of the bill is that the new company shall succeed to the original rights accorded under the franchise of the old company. Now, under the franchise of the old company they had no right to issue a mortgage except for a proper legal purpose.

Mr. BARRETT. Will the gentleman allow me time now to answer the question asked by my colleague?

Mr. POWERS. I must decline, Mr. Speaker, to have my time taken up by the gentleman from Massachusetts in answering questions asked by his colleague. If I do not answer them properly or satisfactorily, his colleague will doubtless apprise me of the fact.

This issue of stock is limited to $100,000,000. The amount of the funded debt provided for in this amendment aggregates about $40,000,000, and the additional stock is only to be issued with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, so I assume that it is sufficiently guarded to prevent the "watering" of stock or any abuse of that kind.

Amendment No. 5 was proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] and the substance of it is that this company shall not take any right under this new charter except upon the condition precedent that it shall relinquish all its rights to the land grant that was given to the original company and which is covered by this mortgage now under process of foreclosure. In answer to that I have this to say: Congress has already passed an act providing for the forfeiture of unearned land grants made to different railroad corporations, and the question whether the land grant made to this old corporation comes within the operation of that act has been argued, only a week since, in the Supreme Court of the United States. A case was made up, and the United States have been fully heard in argument.

The question is ripe for decision by that court, and the decision is expected in the immediate future. If the court decides that these lands have been forfeited, then of course this new company can have no rights under this amendment. If, on the other hand, the courts decide that the lands are not forfeited, then this new company, upon every principle of right, upon every principle of justice, will be entitled to those lands. They were granted to the original company. They were mortgaged by that company, and the mortgagees ought not to be taken by the throat and told by the American Congress that unless they relinquish the rights given them by their mortgage they shall not be allowed to be incorporated under a law of Congress. No one can justify any such proposition.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. POWERS. I will if the question is not too long.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Did not a committee of Congress in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress make a report, after a thorough investigation of this whole subject of the forfeiture which should take place concerning these lands, and after the act of 1871, which this bill sets forth, gave the right to this company to mortgage its lands—did not that committee, after such examination, report the act of 1886, which was afterwards passed, declaring the forfeiture?

Mr. POWERS. My understanding, Mr. Speaker, is that Congress made inquiry into the various land grants that had been made to railroad companies—this, among others.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. If the gentleman will allow me, I will call his attention to the particular report upon this particular land grant, Report No. 193, made February 3, 1886; and this report deals only with this land grant; it is a thorough and elaborate examination and discussion of the entire question as to whether any valid mortgage had been made upon this land grant under the act of 1871; and notwithstanding the act of 1871, the committee came to the conclusion that a forfeiture should be declared, and the House adopted their conclusion by the passage of the forfeiture act of 1886, which affected over 32,000,000 acres of land.

Mr. POWERS. I am not in controversy with the gentleman as to the proceedings taken by Congress, for I have already conceded that an act was passed declaring the forfeiture of these lands. What I am urging is that this is a legal question now pending before the courts; and I have confidence enough in our courts to say that we can fully trust the disposition of this question to them.

Now, what is the effect of this amendment? It provides that, no matter what the courts may decide about the legality of that forfeiture act, we ourselves insist that this company shall relinquish its claim to these lands; otherwise we deny them the rights accorded conditionally by the bill. Now, I think this is the wisest course. I think it is most in accord with the ordinary course of judicial proceeding, most in accord with the spirit of fairness which ought to influence legislators, that we should say, "If the court declares the act valid, then we are entitled to the rights we claim; if, on the other hand, they say that the forfeiture is invalid, we lose those rights."

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me a moment further? I call his attention to the title of this bill—"An act to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871." Then the bill goes on and uses this language:

> That whenever any mortgage made by the Atlantic and Pacific, etc., under and by virtue of acts of Congress is foreclosed, etc., and any sale of the road, equipment, lands, etc., the purchaser, etc., shall be entitled to hold and possess the franchises and property so sold, and to exercise, etc.

Now, I ask the gentleman to answer this question—whether this bill, if passed, would not operate as an enabling and enlarging act additional to the act of 1871 so as to validate still further by the action of this Congress the supposed right to mortgage those lands covered supposedly by the act of 1871—whether this bill does not directly recognize the construction of said act of 1871, which is claimed on the part of this railroad company, that they have the right to mortgage those lands perhaps in perpetuity?

Mr. POWERS. I did not yield for a speech, but I confess I am somewhat surprised to see an able lawyer stand up on the floor of the American Congress and insist that the title of a bill has anything to do with the body of it except to state in a general way the purpose of the act. The point of this proposed enactment is in these words:

> Provided further, That as a condition precedent to reorganization the purchasers of the railroad company and their successors shall relinquish in writing and convey to the United States by a proper deed, etc., all claim, right, title, and interest to all lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, etc.

My answer to the gentleman is that we have no right, as fair-minded men, to say to the mortgagees, "You shall not have any power to foreclose your mortgage, you shall not have your legal rights in court unless you will relinquish a portion of the property that was conveyed to you by your contract of mortgage." I say that is a species of blackmail; and as long as that very identical question is pending in the Supreme Court, let that court determine the rights of these men, and let us not undertake to say in addition that these mortgagees shall have no rights even if the court says that they have.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. May I ask the gentleman——

Mr. POWERS. I can not yield any further to the gentleman, because he interposes a stump speech when he undertakes to propose a question.

The sixth amendment adopted by the House provided that "in every case of failure of the title to any lands conveyed or contracted to be sold by said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, any and all rights of such purchaser or his assigns," etc., shall be preserved. This language was not explicit enough to protect the rights of these settlers, and the conference committee has undertaken to make it more clear by changing the phraseology so that it shall read as follows:

Provided further, That in case any uncompleted contracts for the purchase of land shall be pending at the time of such foreclosure sale, such new company shall, upon payment to it of any unpaid balance of purchase money for such land at the time provided in such contracts for the sale thereof, convey and release to the holders of such contracts all its title, interest, and estate in and to the land embraced in such contracts.

And after the word "company," in line 4, insert:

To any bona fide settler and occupant, in a tract of 640 acres or less.

Now, under the usual limitation of bills of this character the rights of settlers have been guarded heretofore where they claimed no more than 320 acres. With reference to that we have a general statute on this subject, an act passed on the 29th of September, 1890 (26 Statutes at Large, page 496), where the right is so protected to a maximum of 320 acres only. We go further in this case, because the land is very poor, and in some cases the purchasers acquired as much as a whole quarter section; and so we extended the mantle of protection to double the amount to which it extended under the former statute.

Amendment No. 7 the committee of conference recommend that the House recede from. That amendment is in substance that the company shall take out its charter in each State through which it shall pass or through which the line runs. It runs through the Territories now substantially, and the amendment provides that when they become States they may then require this provision.

The answer to that proposition is that the company is a Federal corporation, and Congress has always retained control of such corporations, but has left the property of such company to the operation of the State law of taxation, police power, and like subjects, which are within State regulation and State control. It seems to the committee that we ought to follow the unanimous practice heretofore, and we are making a charter wherein we retain the control of the corporation in our own hands and not turn it over to the States through which it may pass.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the gentleman from Vermont yield to me for a question?

Mr. POWERS. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I was not on the floor when the gentleman from Vermont explained the amendment of the House No. 2. I notice from the conference report that the Senate recedes from its disagreement to this amendment, which was passed on my motion, and agree to the same with an amendment. Am I to understand that this amendment strikes out from the original House bill the words:

Expressly assumed in the contract of purchase at such judicial sale.

Which were the words which I objected to, and leaves in the words which I have substituted therefor, namely:

Legal charge against said old corporation,

And inserts before said last words:

Except such as may have been incurred for wages and supplies in the operation of the property purchased—

So that the whole clause shall read as follows:

But nothing in this act shall make such purchasers and their associates or said new corporation liable for any debts or claims or contracts of the old corporation, except such as have been incurred for wages or supplies in the operation of the property purchased, legally chargeable against such old corporation.

Mr. POWERS. The words "legally chargeable against said old corporation" are retained. I do not know whether the gentleman has the copy of the bill before him that I have, but these words are in italics in the copy before me, and following that is the language "except such as may have been incurred for wages and supplies in the operation of the property purchased."

The purpose, I will state to my friend from New York, is this: We could not, with propriety, make the bondholders liable for debts which are an inferior lien of their own, and to guard against that we use the language referred to, "legally chargeable against said old corporation," and then put in a proviso leaving the wages chargeable to the new corporation. As I have already stated at the outset of my remarks, that would be the case whether we put that provision in or not.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then, as I understand it, the amendment recommended by the conference committee leaves the new company liable for debts of the old company for labor and supplies. If so, I have no objection to offer to the amendment of the conference committee.

Mr. POWERS. I now yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY]. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. TERRY. About fifteen minutes.

Mr. POWERS. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman, reserving the remainder of my time.

Mr. BARRETT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Arkansas if he will yield to me for a moment to ask the gentleman from Vermont a question?

Mr. TERRY. Certainly; but not to be taken out of my time.

Mr. BARRETT. I understood the gentleman to say that at the proper time he would allow me time to make some statement. I wish to ask if I may depend on that promise out of the gentleman's own time, or does he expect me to acquire the floor in my own right?

Mr. POWERS. I will endeavor to give the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. BARRETT. I will require more time than that.

Mr. POWERS. Well, I have promised to yield to my friend from Arkansas. I will yield to him first, and then several other gentlemen want to be heard.

Mr. BARRETT. I will ask the gentleman not to move the previous question until I have had an opportunity of being heard on this point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, there are some very important matters in this conference report to which I want to direct the attention of the House to show why it should not be adopted.

This House made an amendment to the Senate bill which required the purchaser to pay all the debts legally chargeable against the old company. That amendment perhaps went too far. It went further than I should have asked the House to go. But the proposition of the conference committee does not go far enough. It only provides for the payment of debts for wages and supplies incurred in the operation of the road, but does not make any provision for debts and liabilities otherwise incurred in the operation of the road. Neither does it make any provision for liabilities on account of damages for injuries to persons and property. That should be provided for.

Gentlemen claim that to put in any debt that has been incurred or liability incurred since the mortgage is not right and proper. I take issue with gentlemen there. Every man who takes the bond of a railroad secured by a first mortgage takes it with the knowledge that that road has got to be run and operated, else the mortgage would amount to nothing. And as it must be run and operated, the bondholder takes it with the knowledge that there will be liabilities incurred for injuries to persons and property as well as for operating expenses and for wages of employees. Now, when a man takes a mortgage upon a ship upon the high seas, when he goes into admiralty to foreclose that mortgage, although there have been debts incurred since his mortgage, in the running of the ship, for injuries to persons and property, for wages and salvage, and so on, the court of admiralty requires that these claims come ahead of the mortgage, because, they say, "When you took your mortgage on this ship, of what account would she be to you unless she was to be run and operated for the purpose for which she was built? You must have known when you took your bottomry bonds or your mortgage that these liabilities would be incurred."

The tendency of modern legislation and of judicial opinion is to require bondholders, when they ask for the appointment of a receiver, to make it a condition precedent to the appointment of a receiver that the bondholders shall submit to the payment of all debts and liabilities of the kind that I have named. That has been decided over and over again. I want to call the attention of the House to such decisions of the Supreme Court and other Federal courts on this subject, and to show you that the committee are not correct when they say that it would be unjust and inequitable to put these unsecured liabilities ahead of the mortgage.

I now quote from the American Law Review, of March, 1896:

The tendency of legislation and of the judicial mind is to apply to railroads, so far as relates to debts and liabilities incurred in their operation, substantially the rule that obtains in admiralty, which gives to all such demands priority over a mortgage on the vessel.

Justice Miller, in the Clinton Bridge case, says:

I have shown that railways are now means of interstate commerce as well as steamboats. Their iron tracks, extending from ocean to ocean, are no more limited by political boundaries than are the rivers which rise in one State and flow through others to the sea. Over the former, propelled by one application of the motive power of steam, roll many cars, laden with the products and fabrics of one section of the country for the supply of the wants of a distant section. Through the latter, propelled by another application of the same power, ply the steamers, laden in like manner, and discharging a like beneficent office. Where lies the difference between them? Why should not the power which regulates one extend to the control of the other? Where lies the difference between them in respect of the necessity and justice of the rule which makes the thing liable for the obligations which every bondholder knows when he takes his bond must be incurred in maintaining and operating it as an instrument of commerce?

Now, here is the copy of an order made by a Federal judge in appointing a receiver:

And it appearing to the court that the defendant company owes debts and has incurred liabilities to the residents and citizens of this district—

Now, I want to call your attention to the fact that you men who live in States through which this road runs are interested in this matter. The road does not run through my State, but there are thousands of debts due to the residents of your districts and of your State—

And it appearing to the court that the defendant company owes debts and has incurred liabilities to the residents and citizens of this district which the holders thereof could, without any interference with the legal or equitable rights of the complainant under the mortgage set out in the complaint, collect by proceedings at law from said defendant by seizing its rents, income, and earnings, and in other lawful modes, if not restrained from so doing by this court, and that it would be inequitable and unjust for the court to deny to said creditors and claimants their legal right to collect their several debts and demands by appointing a receiver to take and receive the earnings of said road during the pendency of this suit, as prayed for in the complainant's bill, without providing for the payment of such debts and liabilities: It is therefore declared that this order appointing the receiver herein is made upon this express condition, namely, that all debts, demands, and liabilities due or owing by the defendant company which were contracted, accrued, or were incurred in this district, or are due or owing to any residents of this district, for ticket and freight balances, or for work, labor, materials, machinery, fixtures, and supplies of every kind and character, done, performed, or furnished in the repair, equipment, operation, or extension of said road and its branches in this district, and all liabilities incurred by the said defendant company in the transportation of freight and passengers, including damages for injuries to employees or other persons, and to property, which have accrued or upon which suit has been brought or was pending or judgment rendered in this State, within twelve months last past; and all liabilities of said company to persons or corporations who have or may have become sureties for said company on stay or supersedeas bonds or cost bonds, or bonds in garnishment or other like proceedings, without regard to the date of said bonds, or whether such bonds were furnished in actions or proceedings pending in this district or elsewhere, together with all debts and liabilities which the said receiver may incur in operating said road, including claims for injuries to persons and property as aforesaid, are hereby declared to be preferential debts, and shall be paid by the receiver as the same shall accrue out of the earnings of the road, if practicable, or out of any funds in his hands applicable to that purpose; and if not sooner discharged, then the same shall be paid out of the proceeds of the sale of the said road, which shall not be discharged from the custody of this court until said debts and demands are paid.

Now, my friend from Vermont, when this matter was in the House here, very kindly consented to quite a number of amendments. I was surprised at his generosity; but I recollected that when he got into conference the bill could go through the usual course of shaking off all these amendments, and so it has.

Now it comes back here in a condition that there is no protection to a large number of men who have claims against this road. The only one they proposed to pay is wages and supplies in operation.

Mr. HARRISON. What character of claims do you refer to there and say they are not protected?

Mr. TERRY. I refer, sir, to liabilities for injuries to person and property; and if I had time, without trespassing upon the kindness of the gentleman in allowing me as much time as he has, I would read the various classes of indebtedness protected in the order appointing receivers already quoted from. Now, this road has been for years in the hands of a receiver, taking the earnings and the profits which the court says the claimant could have subjected to the payment of his debt; but having gone into the hands of a receiver, no man can make a debt out of the company. Now, if the judge did not do what he ought to have done, and protect these people when he made the order, then Congress ought to do it now, when they come to ask a favor at our hands. When they applied to the chancellor, it was his duty, when they asked him for the favor, to put this vast system of railroads in the hands of the court's officer; it was the chancellor's duty to protect the rights of the citizens; and when he did not do it, as he did not in this case, it is the duty of Congress to do it. Every man who lives in a State whose citizens have claims against this old company will, in my judgment, be recreant to his high duty here if he does not vote down this conference report, and make provision, by another conference, to protect these citizens of the United States that should be protected in their just claims.

Any time I have I yield back to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know how much time remains.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eighteen minutes remaining.

Mr. POWERS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this conference report substantially yields up every point made by the House in their amendments, and yields up every point without contest, without resistance, without explanation, and without reason. This bill ought to be sent back again to be reconsidered in conference, and the House amendments, or at least the more important of them, it seems to me, ought to be preserved. They ought to be insisted upon by the conference committee. The first proposition is one to relieve the Government from the litigation in regard to the land grant. On granting to this company a new charter, it is provided that it must relinquish to the Government that which is a subject of present litigation. The Government declared a forfeiture of the land granted coterminus with that part of the road not built in 1886. The company has since the forfeiture of the grant, and since the declaration of the forfeiture, constructed a portion of this road, and now claims it, notwithstanding the forfeiture. The House passed an amendment providing that if a new charter was given to the company it must relinquish this claim and relieve the Government from this litigation and relieve the country through which the road runs of the blight that this claim makes on the land, and to provide for opening it for settlement.

Next, the House provided that this Federal corporation in exercising its rights in any State or Territory must do so subject to the right of the State or Territory to require local incorporations. Heretofore Federal charters have had no such provision in them. They ought to have had. It has been a mistake not to insert some such provision in Federal charters heretofore. Now, we are granting a new charter to the company, and we are asked to abandon this provision, and the reason given by the conference report is because we did not require it before in charters of other railway companies. Well, have we not learned something about these United States corporations? Have we not learned that we made a mistake when we did not require such a corporation exercising its rights in any State or Territory to do so subject to the right of the States or Territories to require a local incorporation? Have we not learned from past experience that the States should be protected in such matters? The States are not bound to exercise the right proposed. If the corporations do not abuse their rights and privileges the States will not demand their subjection to local jurisdiction. But this will be a bond held over them to protect the States from abuse under the charter which we are about to grant to this corporation. Both of these amendments, it seems to me, ought to be maintained, and the committee, instead of abandoning them without a struggle, should have insisted to the last point for both of these provisions.

Mr. POWERS. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, the objections of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] and of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], who last addressed the House, carry upon their face a plausibility that is attractive to those who are in favor of paying debts. I agree to that sentiment. I wish it were in the power of Congress to have the debts of this old company paid. But I desire to ask my friends from Iowa and from Arkansas not to confound the holders of these bonds with the old company that incurred the debt. This is merely an equitable question, one that has doubtless been settled by the court in this case, or, if it has not been settled, it will be, in adjudicating the questions involved in these foreclosure proceedings the rights of the different creditors of the old company.

Are we here now, by a quasi judicial enactment, to change the rights of these parties, and to say that notwithstanding the rights which the holders of these bonds have secured to themselves under the acts of Congress authorizing this company to make a mortgage and to go into the courts and have their rights adjudicated—are we now, by legislative enactment, to overrule the decision of the courts having jurisdiction in the matter? Yet that is the logical conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa. The law, as I understand it, is not changed by the decision which has been referred to by the gentleman from Arkansas. I have never examined that particular decision, but I noticed the language of the court as the gentleman read it, and it was to the effect that the tendency of the courts is to protect the operating expenses of the railroad. The language of the amendment now before the House is "for labor and supplies." What else is necessary for the operating expenses? The gentleman from Arkansas read a decision confining it to operating expenses, but when I ask him what other character of claims he desired to incorporate beyond that, he could only name one class, to wit, damages for personal injuries. Now, is there a court in the United States that has ever held that a first mortgage on a railroad, or on any other property, is subordinate to any such a claim as that?

Mr. TERRY. In the order appointing a receiver, a portion of which I read, it is set forth, as I stated, that that order provides for all liabilities on account of injuries to both persons and property; and there are other things covered by it, as I can show the gentleman when I get the book back.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, I think I have stated correctly the gentleman's answer to my question, and I take issue with him upon this being the law of the land. I do not believe that the courts of last resort of this country have held, or ever will hold, any such doctrine as that contended for by the gentleman from Arkansas, the effect of which would be that when a party makes a contract and takes a first-mortgage lien upon any property, whether a railroad or anything else, that lien shall be subordinated to claims arising out of the misconduct or malfeasance of employees of the mortgagor.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I said in the beginning, it would delight me to make this old company pay all its debts, if I could; but I do not think it is right for Congress to come in and, by legislative enactment, undertake to change or overrule the decisions of the courts. I regard such legislation as a direct legislative interference with the courts of the country, and for that reason I think the conference report ought to be adopted.

Mr. CONNOLLY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Suppose we refuse to pass this bill at all, will not the mortgagees have all the rights secured under their mortgage secured to them and all that they can possibly get under this legislation?

Mr. HARRISON. I think not. Without the right to operate the road it would be worth very little to them.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Can not they get that right by a charter from a State?

Mr. HARRISON. This road, I understand, runs principally through the Territories, so that they are obliged to come here for authority.

Mr. CONNOLLY. They knew that fact when they took the mortgage. did they not?

Mr. HARRISON. I suppose they did, and that they also bought these bonds under an implied contract with the Government that it would not refuse the usual remedy accorded purchasers, to wit, to be and exist as a corporation.

Mr. CONNOLLY. So that we are not interfering with any of their rights if we refuse to pass this bill?

Mr. HARRISON. I think we are.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I think I can answer the question the gentleman from Illinois propounds. He asks whether these mortgagees will not have the same rights if we refuse to pass this bill as if we pass it.

Mr. CONNOLLY. They will have all the rights under their contract.

Mr. POWERS. Not at all. It has been held in two instances by the Supreme Court of the United States that where a mortgage does not specifically convey the franchise to be a corporation the mortgagees can not be a corporation, and the object of this bill is simply to give these mortgagees that right.

Mr. CONNOLLY. They knew that was the law when they took their mortgage.

Mr. POWERS. No; everybody supposed the law was different at that time. The decision was a surprise to the legal profession; but the court has so held, and we have to subscribe to that doctrine.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the two contentions most urged here against this bill are, first, the contention urged by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], that we ought to exact of this company, as a condition precedent, that they relinquish all right to this land grant. That comes down to this plain proposition. I have a mortgage against a man upon his farm and I go into court to foreclose, and the court says to me: "Unless you surrender Blackacre"—when my mortgage covers both Blackacre and Whiteacre—"unless you surrender Blackacre we will not allow you your legal rights." It is levying a species of blackmail upon these gentlemen. These bondholders are innocent parties, who put their money into this mortgage; and the mortgage to-day is held largely by people holding trust funds, such as guardians, trustees, old women, and children, etc. It is proposed that we say to these parties, "You shall not have your rights in court unless you will relinquish a part of your claim to the real estate which was mortgaged to you." Is that right? Does the House of Representatives propose to establish a doctrine of that kind? I think not.

Secondly, the gentlemen says that we ought to permit the Territories through which this road runs to require the road, after they become States, to take out a State charter. What sense is there in that? This company is chartered by Congress. Congress will retain full control over their rights. Why, then, subject these innocent parties to the control of half a dozen different State organizations when they are trying to get out of this property the money which they, in the utmost good faith, invested in it?

Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

Mr. BARRETT. I understood the gentleman from Vermont to agree to yield to me some time.

Mr. POWERS. I agreed to yield the gentleman some time if we had it; but I understand our time is exhausted.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Vermont will not ask for the previous question until I have been allowed to occupy a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont has six minutes remaining.

Mr. POWERS. Then I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] three minutes.

Mr. BARRETT. That is hardly fair. I ask the House to vote down the previous question and give us a chance to discuss this bill on its merits—not to try to "railroad" this bill through here for the benefit of stockjobbers. I ask the House to vote down the previous question, and let this matter be discussed. I have some facts that I want to bring out, and the gentleman is trying to prevent its being done.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the demand for the previous question.

The question being put, the previous question was not ordered.

The SPEAKER. The House refuses to order the previous question. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, when I asked the gentleman from Vermont to be allowed to answer the question asked in good faith by my colleague, it was because I had taken the pains to get some facts in reference to this matter which the House is entitled to know. Having been the one, when this matter was first presented in December to the House, to offer an amendment touching this pending subject, I thought I might be accorded the courtesy of occupying a little length of time in some observations on the amendment in dispute between the two Houses.

Now, I wish to confine my remarks, Mr. Speaker, to the part of this measure which refers to the issue of stock by this company.

I wish to say in the beginning that no railroad was ever constructed in this country whose history is so black with fraud and dishonor as the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad. No railroad was ever constructed in this country whose securities were issued in such amount and under such conditions as has attached to this corporation.

My friend and colleague [Mr. MOODY] offered an amendment when this matter was up before that the securities in the form of stock to be issued by this new corporation should be confined to the amount of the mortgage debt. This amendment was accepted by the committee and unanimously adopted. The gentleman from Vermont has reported an amendment in its place, which he says is merely verbal in its form, which limits the stock to be issued to the amount of the funded debt.

I want to make clear to the House the important difference between the amendment adopted by the House and that reported by the conference committee.

Now, what is the status of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad? It is bankrupt, disgraced, dishonored, beyond the power of redemption. It pays no interest on its mortgage debt in any form whatever. It does not earn enough to do it. But the whole contention made here is that this matter of reorganization is to enable the innocent holders of those securities to be put on their feet and to reorganize the company.

The gentleman from Vermont, who has occupied a place on the supreme court of his State, has affected to cast ridicule on me because I tried to throw a little light on this question. Yet the gentleman from Vermont, either willfully or not—I prefer to assume not—has made a statement in this House which is absolutely void of any foundation.

Now, what does the gentleman from Vermont claim? He claims that the innocent holders of the securities of this road are entitled to an opportunity to reorganize, and that it would be "blackmail"—he charges this House with an attempt at "blackmail"—to put into this bill certain reasonable provisions.

What is the fact about this reorganization? The stockholders of this road are not considered one bit in this reorganization. The holders of these minor bonds and securities which the gentleman claims that he desires to protect are not considered in this bill. There are on this road—I speak solely of the part known as the "Western Division," commonly known as the Atlantic and Pacific—$16,000,000 of 4 per cent bonds which were issued to represent an equal number of old 6 per cent bonds. These are held in the hands of the reorganization committee. There are also $5,000,000 of second-mortgage bonds. There are $12,000,000 worth of income bonds, and there are $79,000,000 worth of stock. The bondholders' committee, representing this $16,000,000 of first-mortgage bonds, has already entered into an agreement with the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad to sell out the entire property, to it and transfer to it the first mortgage of $16,000,000 in return for a payment which amounts in cash at present value of securities to $10,600,000. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad is to have, as soon as a few legal technicalities are complied with, the possession and control of this property for a payment of $10,600,000!

Now, my friend and colleague [Mr. MOODY] offered an amendment, when this bill was under consideration in the House, to the effect that the new corporation should be confined in its gratuitous issue of stock to an amount equal to the mortgage debts. These amounts to $21,000,000.

But this conference report provides that the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad corporation, through whose conduct the constituents of the gentleman from Vermont and myself have lost millions and millions of dollars—the amendment provides that it should be allowed for $10,600,000 to keep alive a mortgage debt of $16,000,000, and to issue in addition stock to the extent of $33,000,000.

A good deal has been said about "innocent bondholders" in connection with this matter, and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] went into a very lengthy legal statement as to how bankrupt railroad properties reorganized. He has given us to infer that the whole of the mortgage indebtedness would be wiped out, and its place taken by the new issue of stock.

Now, let us see how the reorganization is to take place. This is the way: The whole amount of $16,000,000 outstanding first-mortgage bonds goes into the treasury of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad; it is there kept alive, and that railroad—not the present stockholders of the Atlantic and Pacific, but the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad—under this act becomes the owner of the Atlantic and Pacific, and in return for $10,600,000, which it is required to pay in cash value, is to be allowed to issue $49,000,000 worth of securties.

Mr. Speaker, my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] and myself have objected to that; and why?

In the first place, Massachusetts, whose legislation has blazed a path in almost every direction of legislative progress, has put on its statute books, to the great satisfaction of all of our people, a law that no railroad corporation shall issue securities except on full payment at their par value. In this bill, before it went to the conference committee, both Houses, by an order of each House, voted that no new stock should be issued after the reorganization is completed, except upon full compensation, either in money or service.

And yet the conference committee seeks to induce this House to recede from that position, so as to authorize an issue of stock amounting to $33,000,000 for no consideration whatever, equal in value to every dollar of stock hereafter issued for full value. It asks us to authorize the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe road to issue $49,000,000 of securities for a property for which it pays in present values not exceeding $10,600,000.

But my friend from Vermont says that this extra stock should be issued on the "funded debt," as it stands now on the Atlantic and Pacific Company. Let us see how that is. What is the funded debt? It includes, in addition to the "mortgage debt," $12,000,000 of income bonds, now selling in the market at 1 cent on the dollar. This amendment, proposed by the conference committee, is a proposition to issue for something that is without value to-day stock which the succeeding sections of the bill provide shall be hereafter not issued except on full payment at par value!

Now, the gentleman from Vermont says that this has nothing to do with the measure, that it is only a legal matter. He professes not to know, and evidently does not care, about the details of this reorganization. He wishes to leave it all to the people who are buying this road. He claims that it is a mere legal matter. Let us see whether it is. It is a question whether Congress now proposes to be a party to, and to authorize, and to stand back of one of the greatest stock-watering schemes ever put forward in any legislative body.

Mr. Speaker, how can we ask men who seek to mortgage worthless farms in the West for Eastern money, or for the purpose of procuring money for the transaction of business, or who use unwarranted methods to induce the loans of money—I say how can we expect them to be dumfounded and bring them to the light of day if we ourselves, by our legislation on this floor, shall authorize the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company to issue securities to the extent of $49,000,000 on property which cost them but $10,600,000 at present values?

Now, Mr. Speaker, the amendment offered by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY], written in my presence and written hastily, would not, if he had known as much as we both of us know to-day, have been couched in exactly the form in which it is framed. We ought to have said:

That the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company, in acquiring the Atlantic and Pacific, shall issue no securities whatever except those which actually represent the cost to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad of this property.

He, like myself and others, thought that the mortgage indebtedness would represent actual value, and put in the language that this issue should be limited to the amount of the mortgage. That amount now is $21,000,000, and if the House insists upon the amendment which has already been adopted with consent of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS], and without objection—if it shall simply insist on the amendment already adopted—it thereby authorizes the issue of $33,000,000 of securities for a property which will cost the purchaser ten millions.

I desire now to move that the House instruct its conferees to insist upon amendments 3 and 4, which are the amendments offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY], and which have regard to the preventing of the wholesale issue of stock without proper consideration.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Also amendment No. 5, which relates to this enormous land grant.

Mr. LACEY. And No. 7.

Mr. MOODY. Just insist generally.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I am on my feet to reply to the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. POWERS], when he said, in a rather supercilious tone, that when he wanted information on this subject of stock watering, he knew where to ask for it, and did not deign to ask me. I have not proposed to offer any amendment except that upon which I claim to be thoroughly versed, but, as I thoroughly sympathize with the amendment offered by my friends, and fearful lest another opportunity may be denied, by springing the previous question, to prevent this House from having ample opportunity to consider it, I include in my motion that the conferees be instructed to insist upon amendments numbered 5, 6, and 7, so that the motion, as I now make it, is that the conferees be instructed to insist upon amendments numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is on agreeing or disagreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BARRETT. As I read the Manual, it is now in order to move to instruct the conferees to insist.

The SPEAKER. But the first question that must be disposed of is whether the House will agree to this conference report.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not know as this comes out of my time, but to show that I did it thinking that I was within the rules of the House, I will read from the Manual, page 359.

Pending the consideration of the report of a conference committee, it is in order to instruct the conferees on the part of the House in respect to any matter in dispute between the Houses.

I may be wrong, but that is the basis on which I made my motion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before I conclude I want to make one remark on this conference report; and I am perfectly well aware, Mr. Speaker, without being informed by any members who have served in this House longer than I, with what supreme ridicule any effort on the part of a new member who tries either to intelligently understand the business of the House or in a respectful way to represent what he believes to be the wishes of his constituents is received in some quarters.

These conference reports are among the most important matters which come before the House of Representatives. We go through a long discussion of a measure. Amendments are accepted by the member having the bill in charge. They are agreed to unanimously by the House of Representatives, and then we are told in the corridors with laughter and a sunny smile, "We will attend to that in conference."

This particular committee went into conference, and as has been suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], without making any attempt to defend the propositions of the House, this committee comes in here with a conference report, when, no matter what may be their personal feelings on a measure, they are bound by their appointment as conferees, having the judgment and confidence of this House in their keeping, to insist upon and maintain the action of the branch which they represent.

These conference reports make the gist of important legislation which comes to this House. They are all important. How do they come in? Do they come in like other matters of legislation, ordered by the rules to be printed, and the report and the amendments thus brought formally before the attention of the House? I say no. They can be brought in here, under the rule, at any time after the reading of the Journal. No matter what other question may be under consideration, after the reading of the Journal a proposition to consider a conference report is in order. How are they generally made? They are brought in here with amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and so on, sometimes running into the scores.

In the disorder or inattention in this House it is said that "the conferees have yielded on Senate amendments 6, 8, and 12," for instance, and "the Senate conferees have agreed to amendments 9, 11, and 15 of the House." Very few members do or can know what are the points in issue. Then the previous question is moved. I say for one, having tried to give attention to the proceedings of this House, that it is almost impossible for a man sitting in his seat to understand what is the intention and purport of many of these conference committees. And then, in addition to that, we have tremendous power placed in the hands of the chairman of the committee, who monopolizes the floor on debate. To-day the chairman has attempted to prevent a gentleman who rose in his place and said that he has information to contribute on this special subject to be heard, by moving the previous question, so that no further discussion could be had. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is a parody on parliamentary performance, and that it is an insult to those who desire to vote right and also intelligently in this House. [Applause.]

When this bill came up, I took an interest in it by reason of the fact that the State of Massachusetts has committed itself against these stock-watering schemes. My friend and colleague [Mr. MOODY] also took an interest in it. I was anxious to see this conference report when made. At length I went to the chairman of the committee and asked him if it had been made. He said it had. I said, "Has it been printed?" and he said, "It is in my desk." I want to be perfectly fair to the gentleman. He took it from his desk and I had an opportunity to read it, and yesterday he said he would move to have it printed and this morning call it up as soon as the Journal had been approved. Now, I say, not being a lawyer, but after listening to the statements made by gentlemen on other features of the bill than the stock-issue amendments, as a member of this House, that any attempt to prevent honest and fair, and, if necessary, considerable discussion on this bill is an outrage and ought not to be condoned. The House evidently thought the same in refusing the previous question when asked.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time, asking, first, how much time I have left.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has forty minutes.

Mr. BARRETT. I was about to ask, in no way to attempt to delay the proceedings, whether or not the Chair is of the opinion that a motion to instruct is not in order?

The SPEAKER. The matter before the House is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference. Upon an examination of the authority cited by the gentleman from Massachusetts, that was a report of a disagreement; and it resulted, although the Chair has not examined the entire debate as yet (has not quite finished it)—it seems to have ended with a proposition for a new conference. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the method by which the thing could be arrived at, which he is evidently aiming at, is by voting down, if the House sees fit, the conference report, and then ask for a new conference; and, before the conferees are appointed, make a motion to instruct them—if the House sees fit.

Mr. BARRETT. Well, Mr. Speaker, I of course acquiesce and agree in the proposition made by the Chair, but it seems to me that this proceeding was analogous to a motion to recommit with instructions.

The SPEAKER. The difficulty is that the conference committee has discharged its duty and has ceased.

Mr. BARRETT. If the Chair will pardon me, if the House should disagree to the report of the committee, it would thereby become deceased; but if the motion were made to recommit with instructions as a subsidiary motion preliminary to that, to keep it alive for the new conference as the House wished they should proceed as directed.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Massachusetts can show authority upon that subject, the Chair would be glad to have it.

Mr. BARRETT. I simply put my motion, in order that it may instruct the committee.

Mr. POWERS. I yield to my colleague from Vermont five minutes.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I rise to a point of order. The time of the gentleman from Vermont has expired. I submit that he can not yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I submit——

Mr. BARRETT. I make the point of order. I would like——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman in front to state his point of order.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I make the point of order that the time of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] has expired, and that now the members in opposition have control of the time.

Mr. GROUT. But I addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is in charge of the report now before the House, and the gentleman from Massachusetts has reserved his time, which leaves the matter open for the Chair to recognize some other gentleman if any gentleman addresses him. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] has done so.

Mr. BARRETT. The point of order I make, Mr. Speaker, is that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS], having occupied an hour, can not occupy a further hour to the exclusion of any gentleman who has been recognized.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I addressed the Chair in my own right.

Mr. BARRETT. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I was referring to the other gentleman from Vermont.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] is recognized.

Mr. GROUT. I do not insist upon being recognized now, Mr. Speaker, but I do wish to be heard for a few minutes on this subject. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] can proceed if he desires.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] kindly yielded to me, and I shall occupy only about ten minutes. I desire to say that when this matter was up before the House upon the Senate bill as it came over here the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS], speaking of these land grants, was hardly ingenuous. He spoke of the lands as having no value. He used these words, which will be found on page 180 of the RECORD:

> It became a part of the rights of that company to take those lands, but it turns out upon investigation that the lands are in the arid region; they are good for nothing.

Further on, when the House was about to vote upon amendment No. 5, which requires this company to recognize the forfeiture of the land grant and to stop its litigation with the Government concerning the title to those lands, the gentleman from Vermont said:

> Mr. Speaker, the Government of the United States has already instituted a suit to declare a forfeiture of these lands. A suit is now pending. It is being argued in the Supreme Court of the United States to-day, and it seems to me we should not undertake to blackmail this company as the condition upon which they shall have the right to organize into a corporation.

Almost immediately after the utterance of those words by the gentleman from Vermont the House, by a vote of 78 to 48, adopted the amendment.

Now, I submit as a lawyer that the bill which is before the House upon the conference report will operate, under its peculiar language, as an enlarging act, an enabling act. It will operate as a recognition of the claim which is made under the act of 1871 (by the terms of which latter act the company was authorized to mortgage its lands) in such a way as to carry out and give substantial grounds for the contention of this corporation and for the construction which it attempts to place upon the act of 1871. In other words, it recognizes that act, and it recognizes that construction of it which is contended for by the company. This bill begins in its title by saying that its purpose is—

> To define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company.

And it uses this further language:

> That whenever any mortgage made by the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, under and by virtue of acts of Congress, is foreclosed.

Then, further down, it uses this language:

> The new company which shall have and shall be entitled to hold and possess the franchises and property so sold.

So that, Mr. Speaker, if the act of 1871 is subject to the construction that it would give the corporation the power to mortgage these lands notwithstanding the forfeiture act of 1886, then this legislation would maintain and validate everything that is claimed in behalf of this corporation.

Now, I desire to say that this is a large subject. The litigation concerning these land grants has been going on for many years. There have been suits brought in California concerning these grants, where the Southern Pacific Railroad Company have claimed to take the lands which did not pass to the Atlantic and Pacific Company, and there is litigation now pending that has come up from the supreme court of New Mexico concerning lands in New Mexico, notwithstanding the forfeiture act of 1886, which, as I have already indicated, was passed by the House of Representatives in the Forty-ninth Congress, at its first session, upon the report of the Committee on Public Lands, a report made by Mr. Cobb, which was filed February 3, 1886. That report very ably and exhaustively examined the whole question as to the validity, the scope, and the effect of the act of 1871, and, as a result of that investigation and that report, the House passed the forfeiture act of July 6, 1886; and I undertake to say that the main reason for that action was that the corporation had entirely neglected to conform to the charter of 1866, by which it was given this enormous land grant.

The land grant involved here is of enormous proportions, larger than any other grant ever made to a railroad company. I hold in my hand two plats which show the constructed portion and the lands earned up to the time of the passage of the act of 1886 and also the construction since that time. These plats show the lands that are in controversy in these multitudinous suits between the Government and the representatives of this company. Without taking up too much of the time of the House now, I will submit in my remarks a table showing the lands which will be forfeited if we insist upon this amendment No. 5. In the Indian Territory this corporation is making a claim to certain lands. I think myself that the claim is without any foundation whatever, but the corporation are making a claim for lands in the Indian Territory which, if their contention is right, would give them those lands as soon as the Indian titles shall have been extinguished by the treaties now in progress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I should like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. What is the necessity of any legislation whatever at this time with respect to the subject-matter of this bill? Is there any urgent necessity for the passage of such a bill?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I am not urging the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I did not understand that the gentleman was urging the passage of the bill; but he is familiar with the situation, and I want to know whether in his opinion there is any urgent necessity for passing this kind of a bill now.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I rather think that the purchasers under the foreclosure ought to have a charter under proper restrictions; but I do not think that while they are getting such a charter from Congress, Congress should override important legislation which has been heretofore enacted with respect to these enormous land grants.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman pardon me a question?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY. Does not the gentleman think it would be better in granting a charter to these new corporators to grant one specifically, instead of doing so by reference to an old charter passed in 1866, when thought on this subject was in a very different stage of development from what it is to-day?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I thoroughly agree with my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY]. The peculiar language with which this bill starts out, and the peculiar language which it employs when it deals with any property rights to be acquired under these foreclosures, is at least of a most suspicious character, in the point of view that the language may lead to ambiguity and misconstruction—to different constructions in different courts. For this reason I believe it would be better, as the gentleman from Massachusetts suggests, that there should be a straight out-and-out charter in and of itself, containing within itself everything intended to be granted, and granting nothing not directly granted.

Mr. Speaker, I was about to say, concerning the extent of the land grants here involved, that in the Indian Territory there is involved, of granted lands and indemnity lands which would be forfeited if we insist upon this amendment No. 5, and which were forfeited under the act of 1886, the enormous amount of 20,800,000 acres. In the Territory of New Mexico, from the Texas line to Ysleta, a mileage of about 200 miles, the total amount of granted and indemnity lands which would thus be forfeited reaches 8,320,000 acres. In California the amount of lands, both granted and indemnity, reaches 12,073,600 acres, making a total of granted and indemnity lands of 41,193,600 acres, and this leaves to the purchasers under this mortgage and to the corporation all its rights to lands earned by the construction of the road within the terms of the act of 1886 and the act of 1871.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we can not shut our eyes to the enormous amount of litigation which is going on in this matter in the different States. Why, sir, in one case which has recently come up from the supreme court of New Mexico—I hold the transcript of the record in my hand—the court, in a very able decision, construing the act of 1871 and the act of 1886, together with the original grant of 1866, holds that the lands were properly, legally, and completely forfeited by the act of July 6, 1886. And, sir, I hold, as one member of this House, that we are only observing and performing our duty if we require this corporation to stop this litigation, to stop this contention which looks to the enlarging of the grant and the practical repeal of the forfeiture act—that the abandonment of such litigation shall be required by us as a condition precedent to giving this company a charter which shall last forever.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the residue of my time.

Mr. GROUT addressed the Chair.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to ask my colleague [Mr. COOKE of Illinois] a question in his time.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I should be glad to answer any question.

Mr. BARRETT. Has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] exhausted the fifteen minutes which I yielded to him?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. As I understand, I have been talking in my own time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] was speaking in the time of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT].

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I did not wish to do so, but if that is the fact, I yield back to the gentleman any time I may have used.

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] two minutes more in which to answer the question which his colleague [Mr. CANNON] desires to propound.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have been reading this report to find out what is its effect. Section 5 of the bill, which it is proposed to strike out, provides as a condition precedent that this company shall relinquish any supposed right it may have to certain lands. Now, if I recollect aright, there was in 1886 an act of forfeiture passed as to all unearned portions of this land grant.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. That is right; that act applied to all portions of the road not constructed up to that moment.

Mr. CANNON. Now, are we to understand that this railway company or its assignees claim lands that were earned, according to their contention, after the act of forfeiture?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Certainly; and the enormous extent of those lands I have already stated. They reach, of ungranted lands and indemnity lands, the amount of 41,000,000 acres and more.

Mr. CANNON. In other words, the time for construction of their road having expired and the act of forfeiture having been passed by Congress, they still went on and constructed additional road, and they now claim that they are entitled to the lands for such construction, notwithstanding the act of forfeiture?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. That is what they claim. The lands so claimed run through the Indian Territory, run through New Mexico from the Texas line to Ysleta, and from the Needles over at the boundary of Arizona away up to San Francisco.

Now, I do not concede for a moment that they have any valid claim to lands in the Indian Territory or in California; but they claim such lands, as this record shows; and because they claim them, and because they have millions of dollars with which to conduct this kind of litigation in the face of Congress and its legislation, I propose, for my part, that they relinquish their claim to such lands which they never earned, because they never built the lines even within the terms of the act of 1871, let alone the act of 1866.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understand it, the philosophy of your argument is that the bondholders must suffer from the misconduct of the railroad company?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. My argument was, Mr. Speaker, that we should give to these people all that the law authorizes them to receive by the broadest latitude of construction, but nothing more. We are not under any obligation to give them all they claim; let us give them what is their due.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, the question concerning the right of this railroad to the land grant is now before the Supreme Court, has been argued, and for aught we know, the court has reached a conclusion, so that at this very moment all the rights of both the Government and of this corporation to this land are actually determined and only await announcement by the court.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask if it would not be better to take the judgment of the court rather than for us to undertake to decide this question on the fragmentary and partial information with which we are furnished.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I hold the records of all these transactions in my hands.

Mr. GROUT. I am quite willing to leave it to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that is where this conference report proposes to leave it.

When this bill passed the House, Mr. Speaker, I was, I must confess, astonished at some of the amendments that had been offered to it, many of which were put on the bill. Here, to begin with, was a grant of a charter by Congress to the Atlantic and Pacific Railway to construct a road. It granted to this company the power to mortgage the road under certain conditions. They did so, and sold the bonds; and the bondholders come before you now for the purpose of reorganization. They come because it turns out that instead of the mortgage when issued authorizing the road to be a corporation, in the hands of the bondholders, it fails to do so. Everybody supposed that it did. Lawyers would say offhand that authority to issue a mortgage would carry with it the right to be a corporation; but the Supreme Court in other cases where precisely the same language is used have held that it did not convey the right to be a corporation; and so, while the title is perfect in the bondholders, they can not organize into a corporation without this legislation. This is necessary for the preservation of their property rights.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. COOKE], in the course of his argument frankly stated that the company, in his judgment, is fairly entitled to its charter. So it is. There is no question about that. If Congress withholds it, it will be an injustice to the bondholders. They took the bonds with the expectation that they would be granted the right, or had been granted the right, of reorganization under them. And it is only by the discovery of a defect in the wording of the language of the law that the bondholders are not possessed of that right now.

But I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that I was somewhat astonished to see this bill loaded down with some of the amendments that were attached to it when it passed the House. But it went to the Senate, and that body nonconcurred in the House amendments, and the matter went into conference; and now let us see just where the conference report leaves us, and see if, as fair men, we can sustain that report, or if, as fair men, we must insist that it be rejected. Let us look at it not alone as individuals, but in the light of Representatives, occupying the position we do here with reference to the interests of the whole people and for the purpose of preserving the consistency of our legislation.

In the first place, in the conference report—and I can not follow it in detail, for I have not had time to examine it thoroughly—but in the first place there is an amendment put on, as members of the House will perhaps recall, an amendment providing that all the debts assumed by the original management should be assumed and paid by this new company before they shall have a charter. This makes no exception. It puts on them debts which could not in law be charged to the bondholders. It provides for subsequent debts. Just think of the idea! Gentlemen of the House surely do not intend to go that far. It would be dishonorable, and every gentleman will say so when he comes to consider it fully and the effect of it. But the amendment was placed on the bill. What has the conference committee done with it? They said simply the amendment should be stricken out and the words inserted, "except such debts as may have been incurred for wages or supplies in the operation of the property purchased." That includes just those debts which in equity they would have to pay in reorganizing. The courts have generally decided that this class of debts should be paid, though it has not been uniformly so decided; but the courts lean that way, and we can safely stand on that provision, and this the conference committee has done.

Now, who will say this is unfair? Is it unjust? I leave it to any gentleman here who thinks of the matter for a moment. The amendment leaves a debt to be paid by the new company which the law and the decisions of the court would leave for them to pay, and we do not undertake to go beyond that. Could anything be fairer? What more can be fairly required of this corporation?

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. BOATNER. Do I understand that this section 5, or proviso No. 5, is stricken out of the bill?

Mr. GROUT. With reference to the lands?

Mr. BOATNER. Yes.

Mr. GROUT. Certainly; because, as I have stated, in the first sentences I uttered, this matter is with the court. If the court says that this land grant is forfeited, it is gone. If the courts say it is not forfeited, then this company will have the rights which belong to it, and those rights will be determined by the court. Who will say he is afraid to leave this to the court?

Mr. BOATNER. Another question, if my friend will allow. If section 5 were retained in the bill and the company should refuse to make the conveyance which this calls for, would not that be a legislative admission on the part of Congress that the title to this property lies in the railroad?

Mr. GROUT. Oh, but the gentleman's position begs the whole question which is before the House now on the conference report. The report rightfully strikes out this section and leaves the matter where the court may leave it; and there, Mr. Speaker, is where we can safely leave it.

Now, the next point is on the watering of stock, concerning which my eloquent friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] waxed eloquent. He calls this a stock-watering scheme. Now, I never saw this conference report until twenty minutes ago, and I have read it carefully to see how it provides for this alleged scheme. Let us see. This is what the conferees have agreed upon and what you are to pass upon:

> That the capital stock of the corporation herein authorized shall be divided into shares each of the par value of $100, and shall not exceed the amount of the funded debt existing and unpaid at the time of the decree of foreclosure.

This proposed amendment of the conference committee will allow stock to an amount only equal to the funded debt. It provides for the usual conservative rule that the stock shall not exceed the bonds.

Now what becomes of all the eloquence of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT]?

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY. If I understand the report of the Railroad Commissioner aright, the funded debt of this corporation amounts to about $40,000,000.

Mr. GROUT. I do not know what it is. It does not matter what it is.

Mr. MOODY. When we are providing a limit for the issue of stock, does not the gentleman from Vermont think it is important for us to know what the limit is, and how it compares with the value of the property?

Mr. GROUT. They can not go beyond the funded debt. Here is the funded debt of the road which we are reorganizing, to which we are giving the rights of a corporation. And we say that we will not allow them to issue stock beyond the amount of the funded debt. From the very nature of the case we can not be exactly informed as to the value of the property.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I had not quite finished my question. Now, if it be true, as the report of the Commissioner of Railroads states, that the funded debt is about $40,000,000, and if it be also true, as my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] stated to the House, that this whole property has been sold for somewhere in the neighborhood of ten millions, ought this Congress to authorize the reincorporation to issue stock to the amount of $40,000,000 for property which has just sold for about $10,000,000?

Mr. GROUT. Well, the proposition of the gentleman rests upon the two lame legs of the two suppositions of the two gentlemen from Massachusetts. It is all supposition.

Mr. MOODY. Oh, no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GROUT. Oh, yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MOODY. I rested it on the truth of the report of the Railroad Commissioner on the one hand, and the truth of the statement of my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] on the other, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] whether these facts are true or not?

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I do not know, and so far as what I am saying, it is not necessary to know. When I find my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] arraigning this conference report as a stock-watering scheme, and in the report find there is no ground whatever for that charge, then a question arises in my mind as to the correctness of the gentleman's statement that the property has been sold for $10,000,000. Now, suppose it has been sold for $10,000,000——

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Vermont yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT]?

Mr. BARRETT. If the gentleman questions my statement, will he be kind enough to read this printed report?

Mr. GROUT. I have no time, Mr. Speaker; my time is limited.

But suppose it were true that that property has been sold for $10,000,000. It frequently happens that property is so situated that it has to be sold for far less than it is worth, and the bondholders of this road, encountering the strangely factious opposition which has disclosed itself in this House, in their attempt to obtain their legal rights might well ask themselves if they might not as well sell for anything they could get, no matter how little. This fact, if true, argues nothing. The conference report says the stock shall not exceed the amount of the funded debt, and when stock does not exceed the bonds it has always been considered a safe limitation on the issue of the stock, as I have always understood it.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Is it not very important that we should know the value of this property that the stock is to be issued on? As I understand, a railroad bases the rate of its charges upon the capital. That ordinarily is regulated by the amount of stock; and therefore if they are to issue new stock under the new charter, should we not know the actual and true value of the property?

Mr. GROUT. In answer to the gentleman from Nebraska, I will state that of course stock should not be issued to a greater amount than the value of the property. That is correct theoretically. But how can we determine the value of the property except to rely on the judgment of the men who took these bonds, on which they paid out their money—$40,000,000? They may have been misled, but presumably not; and whether or not, we could not determine. This may, however, be noted, that there is not a syllable uttered by anyone in this debate indicating that they were misled, and we can only assume that they acted prudently. Now, this is the only evidence we have as to the value of the property.

Mr. Speaker, the other day a Pacific Railroad bill was before us showing an expenditure of several hundreds of millions of dollars, but here is a Pacific railway with a bonded debt of but $40,000,000. It looks to me like a reasonable and honest sum beside the debt of the other road. But I can not stop to argue this. Here is a fact: Investors have put their money into this road to the amount of $40,000,000, expecting, if it was not paid, they were to have the road.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. He has put his money in, and money and interest have gone by the foreclosure.

Mr. GROUT. Not so, sir. They are the ones that are foreclosing. The stock has gone and all the interests of the stockholders. But not that of the bondholders who are now asking to be reorganized under authority of the charter they are asking.

Mr. BARRETT. But under the foreclosure their representatives have purchased it at $10,000,000.

Mr. GROUT. Who purchased it?

Mr. BARRETT. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe.

Mr. GROUT. I do not believe that anybody has purchased it; and I will state that my authority is my colleague, and he ought to know. He says that it is not true that this road has been purchased by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe road for $10,000,000.

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GROUT. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARRETT. I trust the gentleman from South Carolina will permit me. The gentleman has made a statement concerning my statement.

Mr. GROUT. I will yield to a question.

Mr. BARRETT. Does the gentleman from Vermont now speaking say that my statement that an agreement had been entered into for the sale of this road to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe is not true?

Mr. GROUT. I understood the gentleman to say it had been sold, but if he now says bargained to be sold, I say the road provided for in this bill certainly has not been bargained to be sold—only the Western Division, and that is not the road. It is only a portion of it.

Mr. POWERS. Will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. GROUT. I yield to my colleague, who was my authority.

Mr. POWERS. I say to the gentleman that no such agreement has been made, and that the paper that he reads from is only a notice to the holders of certificates of deposit, etc., to meet to-day in New York to consider a proposition of that kind.

Mr. GROUT. That is what I supposed was the fact.

Mr. BARRETT. I trust I may be permitted——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. BARRETT. I think the gentleman will yield after a question of veracity is raised in this House.

Mr. GROUT. I yield to a question.

Mr. BARRETT. I wish to say, and I make the statement at the same time——

Mr. GROUT. I can not yield for the gentleman to make a statement in my time; but if the gentleman will take the floor in his own time I will accommodate him, provided I am allowed to resume the floor when the gentleman is through; but I can not yield to an explanation in my time, which is limited. But anything to accommodate——

Mr. BARRETT. I will attend to it.

Mr. TALBERT. I just want to ask the gentleman from Vermont a question.

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TALBERT. I see, in reading the report of the committee here, that in July, 1886, there was passed what was known as the forfeiture act and that there is a case now pending in the court under that act, in which they have heard the arguments, but have not rendered their decision in the Supreme Court.

Mr. GROUT. That is right.

Mr. TALBERT. Is not this a proceeding in the dark, to consider this legislation before the decision has been rendered?

Mr. GROUT. That is just what I think, and I think it is just what all intelligent members will see.

Mr. TALBERT. I want to vote intelligently.

Mr. GROUT. I am obliged to the gentleman for mentioning that. It is right to the point.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Why not hold this bill until the court decides that case?

Mr. GROUT. No one knows when that decision will be handed down. And we are to adjourn in about thirty days. Is not the gentleman willing to trust the court? Mr. Speaker, I assert that the rights of all the security holders of this road are carefully and conscientiously preserved by this conference report. I notice signed to the report the name of a Senator, and while I know it is out of order to refer here to the action of the Senate, it is not out of order to refer to a citizen of the United States, on duty in another body, who stands very high in my estimation, and, I believe, in the estimation of all who know him—and thousands throughout the country do know him—I notice signed to this report the name of O. H. PLATT, a member of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and I want to tell this House that he is not the man to agree to any stock-watering scheme, such as the gentleman charges, nor to anything that is unjust or unfair, if he knows it, and he is intelligent enough to know it. So, saying nothing of our own conferees nor of the other Senate conferees, I am willing to follow where O. H. PLATT leads.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. I make the point of order that it is improper on this floor to allude to the wish or the sentiment of a member of the other branch of this Congress as to a measure of legislation, except where it is a matter of record.

Mr. GROUT. It is a matter of record. We have his name here before us duly and understandingly signed to this conference report, and we will all be safe to follow him.

Mr. BARRETT. The gentleman stated that he knew personally that the Senator whom he named did not favor the amendment proposed by the House.

Mr. GROUT. Oh, the gentleman did not understand me, or else I did not understand myself. I made no such statement. I spoke of the character of this report and of one of the signers of it; I said that I noticed appended to this report the signature of O. H. PLATT, a man who does not believe in stock inflation or stock-watering performances; a man who knows what he is about, and who will not approve that sort of thing nor anything else that is unfair or unreasonable. That is what I said, and I felt that in saying it I was within the rules of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, another thing. The gentleman [Mr. BARRETT] has referred to how the Atchison and Topeka people had been "swindled" by the directors of that company. I declare that charge to be entirely without foundation. New England has been largely interested in the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe road from its very inception, and is now. The people of New England, including those of my own State, hold largely the stock and bonds of that road, and except for a few slight changes have held them through all the dark days that have come upon that great company. They are looking confidently for better days for that road, and I believe those days will come. I believe in the near future all the securities of that road will yield an income to the holders.

Mr. Speaker, never before have I heard it said anywhere that the stockholders had been swindled by the directors of that company. The management of that road undertook to find a way from Kansas City, a great competing point in the Southwest, to Chicago, a great competing point in the Northwest, they having an immense network of tracks extending over the entire area of the great State of Kansas, and south by one line to Galveston Bay and by another to the City of Mexico, and by another still—two others, in fact—to the Pacific Slope; and to connect these two great competing points they built an air line from Kansas City to Chicago at immense cost. Why, the terminal facilities in the city of Chicago alone cost over $11,000,000. In the fierce competition that is going on between the great railroads in the West and Southwest, the directors of this, the greatest system of them all, felt that a Chicago connection was necessary. It placed an immense burden of debt on this road, which, followed by the collapse of business, in which many a corporation, as well as many an individual, has gone down within the last four years, was too much for the earning capacity of the road, and it went into the hands of a receiver. But it is already on its feet again, and with returning prosperity will take a great place in the future railroad history of the country.

Mr. Speaker, so much for that. I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that when he represents on this floor that the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe directors have been swindling the security holders of that company, he states something I never heard of before, and I believe he will find a thousand men in his own State of Massachusetts who will indignantly repudiate and deny the charge where he will find one man who will even so much as hint it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, reserving the balance of my time, I yield the floor.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, it is a grave thing when a member on this floor makes a statement for another member to rise in his place and deliberately assert that the statement made by the first member is untrue. When the first member asks the gentleman who denounces his statement as untrue if he has any knowledge on the subject and that gentleman blandly says he has not, that he simply relies upon some whispered statement that has been made to him, the matter is worthy of attention. Now, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] said that my statement that an agreement had been made to transfer this road to the Atchison and Topeka road was untrue. I simply state in reply that it is absolutely true, a fact known to all men who keep pace with the progress of railroad dealings in this country or who read what appears in the public press.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BARRETT. Certainly. I will do for the gentleman what he would not do for me. I will gladly yield.

Mr. POWERS. Oh, I yielded to you repeatedly. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman if the circular which he holds in his hand is not merely a notification of a meeting to be held on January 28 to consider certain propositions?

Mr. BARRETT. I will explain that before I get through, and I think the gentleman will be more than satisfied.

Mr. POWERS. I ask him if that is not the fact?

Mr. BARRETT. I will answer in my own way.

Mr. POWERS. And I ask the gentleman further if he has any information on the subject outside of that circular that he can give to the House?

Mr. BARRETT. Let me answer that in my own way. We all know how these railroads are reorganized. A reorganization committee is formed, in whose hands are placed all the securities, and authority is given to that committee in advance to make any arrangements they see fit which they think can get accepted. But this case goes further. These securities have been deposited in the hands of two committees, one in New York and the other in Europe. This notice simply calls for a meeting in New York to ratify the agreement, as is shown by the statement in the circular; that—

The bondholders represented by the Amsterdam and Frankfort committees, amounting to $14,567,000 (more than seven-eighths of all the issue), at meetings just held, have approved the proposed sale and authorized the committee to consummate it.

That is to say, the thing is practically disposed of; and this meeting of a few scattered bondholders in New York is held pro forma in order to approve and ratify what has already been done by more than seven-eighths of the bondholders under this agreement.

Now, I am willing to have a fair and honest debate on any matter in which I venture to intrude myself; but I suggest that for a member of this House to get up and denounce another man as telling an untruth, and then, when asked if he had any basis for it, to say he had none except the statement made to him by another gentleman, and then for the other gentleman to come over here and for the first time scan the document from which I was giving my authority, and then, not reading it through and overlooking the vital and essential points of it, to confirm the statement that I have tried to deceive the House——

Mr. GROUT. Do you refer to me in saying that a gentleman asserted that you had stated what was not true?

Mr. BARRETT. You stated that it was not true. I asked you if you made that statement of your own knowledge, and you said you were so informed.

Mr. GROUT. Certainly; that is precisely what I said—that there was not any truth in the statement. That is right, as I understand.

Mr. BARRETT. But I have here the agreement for the sale.

Mr. GROUT. But it has not been consummated. Your statement was that the property had been sold for $10,000,000, as I understood it.

Mr. BARRETT. I said the agreement had been made to sell it. I will read it again, so that everyone may understand:

The bondholders represented by the Amsterdam and Frankfort committee, amounting to $14,567,000, at meetings just held have approved the proposed sale and authorized the committee to consummate it.

Mr. GROUT. That applies to only a part of this line, anyway.

Mr. BARRETT. Over seven-eighths.

Mr. GROUT. Only a part of it.

Mr. BARRETT. The courts have decided over and over again that where a large majority of the parties in interest agree to a proposed sale in a matter of this sort, it is valid and binding.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman does not understand me. I say that it is only a part of the line that is to be conveyed, not the whole line.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, this matter ought to have been more fully explained to this House. Let me explain it. The bill applies to both parts of the line of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad. But the only part of it at all worth considering is the so-called Western Division, which the gentleman from Vermont has so eloquently described as "spanning the continent." How does it "span the continent?" It is a miserable little piece of track which "spans the continent" to the exact length of 565 miles, a "spanning of the continent" that has hardly paid its operating expenses, much less any considerable return on the investment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Vermont says that these people are entitled to a charter. I say that they are not. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company has bought or is about to buy this property, so that this company will shortly cease to be an independent corporation; it ceases to be an independent line; it becomes just as much a part of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad as all those other vast networks of tracks which that company has acquired at one time and another and merged into its system.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. BOATNER. What advantage will the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company acquire by the passage of this bill granting this new charter? What additional advantages will this bill give that road?

Mr. BARRETT. I will explain that; I have been trying to explain it all the time. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company are buying this property to-day in securities having a market value of $10,600,000. The bill now reported by the conference committee proposes to allow them to issue, as representing that value of $10,600,000, $16,000,000 in bonds and over $33,000,000 in stock; and the only contention made by us is that they shall not be allowed to issue any more securities than may be equivalent to the value of their road.

"But," says my distinguished friend, the second gentleman from Vermont who has spoken [Mr. GROUT], "how do we know what the value of this road is? How can we undertake to say what its value is?"

I answer: We do not undertake to say what is its value. We assume its value to be that which its own owners put upon it. They are selling it to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company for $10,600,000. Under this sale the parties who have had the control of this property pass entirely out of the calculation; they cease to have anything to do with it; their equity disappears; they sell the property absolutely and without any reserve; it becomes the property of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company.

Now, my friend has quoted from Mr. PLATT, a gentleman who represents the State of Connecticut in one branch of this Congress. I have as much respect for Mr. PLATT as any man on this floor; but when the gentleman from Vermont in charge of this bill has stated frankly that he did not know anything about this reorganization plan, it is not beyond the measure of belief that there may be other gentlemen in this House or in Congress, however wise in mind or great in ability and excellent in character, who may not have given to it that attention it requires in order to enable them to understand clearly the exact points involved.

Mr. POWERS. Does the gentleman say that I do not know anything of the matter?

Mr. BARRETT. My friend and colleague [Mr. MOODY] asked the gentleman a question, and the gentleman from Vermont, in response, said he knew nothing about it. I stated then that I had the information which would enable me to answer my colleague, and asked an opportunity of being permitted to present it to the House, but was refused by the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. POWERS. That was in answer to the question as to the proposed sale. I did not know anything about it at that time. But since then I have been informed that there has been no sale effected whatever.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, it is one of the strange things of men versed in the law that they sometimes seek on technicalities to give impressions that things are not as they are. I have already read this statement of the Atlantic and Pacific reorganization committee, including leading financiers of Boston and of New York, giving the statement that the agreement has been made just as I have stated. This agreement has been ratified by the old first-mortgage bondholders.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him to what part of the road this would apply?

Mr. BARRETT. To all of the Atlantic and Pacific road that was ever operated as an independent property, 565 miles in length, starting practically from Santa Fe and running west and connecting with the Southern Pacific at the Needles, between Arizona and California. Besides this there is, under the charter, a branch line of 112 miles, operated by the St. Louis and San Francisco road, which never possessed an independent equipment, never had rolling stock, but was conducted and is to-day conducted as a part of the St. Louis and San Francisco road, an independent corporation, and does not come within hundreds of miles of touching any portion of the real Atlantic and Pacific road.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will you permit another question?

Mr. BARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does that apply to the same road that the bill under consideration applies to?

Mr. BARRETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. For the whole of it?

Mr. BARRETT. Absolutely. And I will say, also, that there is a contract now under consideration for the transfer of this 112 miles to the St. Louis and San Francisco road; and the committee state in their report——

Mr. TAWNEY (interrupting). I have read the report, if the gentleman will permit me, and it does not indicate that the contract of which the gentleman from Massachusetts has read extracts applies to all the roads to which the bill applies. Therefore the alleged purchase of the road for $10,000,000 would not be a correct statement as to all of the road, as I understand it.

Mr. BARRETT. The gentleman from Minnesota, and I am glad he made the statement, for I certainly do not desire to mislead the House in the smallest iota, is absolutely correct, but it applies to all of the Atlantic and Pacific road that has been ever talked of or suggested in this debate, which is the line running between the two points I have already mentioned.

Now, the amount of bonds outstanding is $16,000,000, the first-mortgage bonds; $5,000,000 of second mortgage, and $18,000,000 of income bonds. These apply only to the 565 miles. On the other division of 112 miles an entirely different set of bonds was issued, entirely outside of this calculation, and to which I have not alluded in this debate. Do I make myself clear?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman conveyed the idea that $10,000,000 purchase money covered the whole road.

Mr. BARRETT. I conveyed, and sought to convey, the idea that the $10,600,000 covered every mile of the Atlantic and Pacific Railway on which there was a $16,000,000 first mortgage, a $5,000,000 second, and $12,000,000 income bonds. That is true.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. BOATNER. Does the gentleman understand the bill to be for the benefit of the bondholders and the stockholders of the Atlantic and Pacific road, or for the benefit of the purchasers of that property at foreclosure sale? And that is followed by another question: Do the purchasers represent the reorganization committee of the old company, or are they a separate and independent concern?

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I think I understand the gentleman's proposition; but in order to make it clear to the House I will explain it a little more fully than by direct categorical reply. The Atlantic and Pacific Railroad's first-mortgage bondholders have begun a suit in foreclosure, pending which they have agreed to sell the $16,000,000 of first-mortgage bonds of the Atlantic and Pacific to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad, for which the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad agrees to pay in securities which are to-day worth about $10,600,000. Upon that transfer the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad is to complete the foreclosure proceedings, and as the holder of the $16,000,000 of first-mortgage bonds, which it has bought on the terms which I have indicated, is to become the sole and absolute possessor of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, about whose bondholders and stockholders we have heard so much here to-day.

The present stockholders and bondholders of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad will not be affected one iota by this measure, because they have already agreed and directed their committee to proceed to the transfer of their property to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad. Is the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] satisfied?

Mr. BOATNER. Then I understand the object of the bill is to permit the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad to capitalize it at the amount of stock and bonds named in the bill, not to exceed the present bonded debt of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. BARRETT. That is right.

Mr. BOATNER. With which, however, the purchasers have nothing to do.

Mr. BARRETT. I do not understand the last statement of the gentleman.

Mr. BOATNER. That is, that the present purchasers of the road have no interest in the present funded debt of the Atlantic and Pacific beyond paying the stipulated price.

Mr. BARRETT. Why, Mr. Speaker, they have all the interest in the world, because they buy the first mortgage in a block. They buy these sixteen millions of first-mortgage 4 per cent bonds and put them into their own treasury, and instead of paying the owners of them what some people might think they were worth, what do they pay? They pay them in 52½ per cent of their own bonds, worth to-day 85 cents on the dollar, and they pay them in 57½ per cent of their own preferred stock, worth to-day 25 cents on the dollar.

Why, Mr. Speaker, if there is any man, woman, or child who has ever honestly invested a dollar in the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, he is getting out of it by this agreement, by which it is to be transferred to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company, so small a part of what he has invested that I should be glad to do anything that would increase their returns. But whatever is done is not done for them. It is done for the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad, which is to become the owner of the first-mortgage bonds of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company by the terms of the contract.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Would not the effect of the acceptance of this conference report by the House wipe out the entire indebtedness of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, with the exception of the first-mortgage bonds?

Mr. BARRETT. The gentleman asks, Would not the acceptance of this report wipe out the entire indebtedness of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, except the first-mortgage bonds?

Yes, Mr. Speaker; all other forms of indebtedness are going to be wiped out. The road is going to be purchased under foreclosure proceedings brought about by the first-mortgage bondholders, and the holder of the first-mortgage bonds is the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company. By foreclosing on the bonds which it holds it will acquire the entire ownership of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, and having by that process taken away every vestige of value in the second mortgage and in the income bonds, so that they will not be worth literally the paper on which they are printed, having taken away from these securities every cent of value, the committee of conference propose to allow the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad to issue, in behalf of and representing securities which have thus been absolutely wiped out, some $23,000,000 of new stock.

To that we object, Mr. Speaker. Having wiped out by proceedings in foreclosure millions upon millions of securities, and having divested the legitimate owners of them of every vestige of value, we object to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company being allowed to proceed to issue $23,000,000 of new securities to represent what has disappeared from existence.

Mr. HULICK. How much will be wiped out of the indebtedness which is now a lien on this road? In other words, what is the difference between the amount for which it is agreed to be sold and the amount of the outstanding liens and claims against it?

Mr. BARRETT. I will say, Mr. Speaker, although I am not a railroad man, and these are things that I have had to get in a very short period of study, that the first mortgage is $16,000,000, the second bond mortgage $5,000,000, and the outstanding receiver's debt certificates amount to some $1,200,000. In addition to that, there are some $30,000,000 of deferred interest accounts, and $79,000,000 of stock, which will be entirely eliminated; and $5,000,000 of second mortgage and $13,000,000 of income bonds which are altogether expunged from any human calculation.

Mr. BOATNER. Except the $10,600,000.

Mr. BARRETT (continuing). Except $10,600,000. They pay about $9,400,000 for the $16,000,000 of first-mortgage bonds; and $1,200,000 is to be paid to take up the receiver's certificates. As an actual fact, they only pay an actual cash value to the bondholders of about $9,400,000.

Mr. TRACEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. TRACEY. The people I represent are interested in the completion of this road. What effect may reasonably be expected to follow the rejection of the conference report and the restoration of the House amendments upon the completion of the road?

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask first how much time I have left, because I have some things that I desire to cover before I get through. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty minutes remaining.

Mr. BARRETT. In what way are the people interested in the completion of this road?

Mr. TRACEY. The Atlantic and Pacific begins at my town, the town in which I live.

Mr. BARRETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will say, in answer to the gentleman, that no human being that I know of can presage what will happen in railroad construction. But that division of the Atlantic and Pacific road has always been operated and controlled by the St. Louis and San Francisco road, which has recently been taken out of the hands of a receiver and placed in the hands of the security holders; and I have no doubt they will proceed to extend that road whenever they think it is possible to increase their business and to raise the necessary money to do it with.

Mr. TRACEY. But does not this proposition submitted as proposed in the House amendments affect the possibility of the company ever doing so?

Mr. BARRETT. Not at all. It simply says that they shall not issue any more watered stock and impose on credulous people, who have a right to believe when the Congress of the United States by deliberate enactment authorizes them to issue a certain amount of stock that it must contain some element of value. It is because we want to bring to the minds of the people of this country the belief that this Congress will not allow millions and millions of stock to be issued without full protection to stockholders that we insist upon this amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is there any class of bondholders and creditors that has not agreed to this reorganization plan adopted by the reorganization committee?

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, that is a question I can not answer.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand it is a fact that all the creditors, all the bondholders, as well as the certificate holders, have agreed to this plan of reorganization.

Mr. BARRETT. Why, Mr. Speaker, I assume they have, and I will tell you why. The Atlantic and Pacific has not paid interest on its bonded debt. It was paid for a term of years, I believe, under a contract with the St. Louis and San Francisco and Atchison roads. These poor bondholders of the Atlantic and Pacific can get nothing in any other way, and they are going to take this.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. BARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. I would like to inquire what way the Atlantic and Pacific or the stockholders therein will be benefited and how can it pay at all in any shape or form unless the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe does absorb it?

Mr. BARRETT. I want the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe to absorb it, but I do not want them to have the right, which this bill in its original shape would give them, to issue $100,000,000 of stock at a par value of $100 per share, when you can go into the New York market and buy all of that stock you want at a quarter of 1 per cent. I do not want the Congress of the United States to become a party to the issue of stock which represents no value whatever. I am simply contending for the proposition that the stock shall be issued, as nearly as may be, to represent actual value.

The gentleman from Vermont has inferred from what I said that the directors of the Atchison company had cheated the people of New England. Now, I want to say in regard to that—and it is a delicate subject—that it is the belief of many of the people of New England, who have invested hundreds of millions in Atchison securities, that contracts have been made by which the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad, which was at one time a solvent and splendid corporation, whose stock sold at $150 a share—it is the belief of those people that great reaches of railroad have been acquired and paid for by the issue of Atchison securities at prices far exceeding their actual value, or their present or prospective earning capacity. I know there have been expressions throughout the length and breadth of New England of the belief that the great expansions and extensions of the Atchison system, from a few hundred to many thousands of miles, have been made by the sale to that company, by persons concerned in its management, of properties which they owned and which they sold at prices far above their actual value. Other roads in the West have not shrunk in value as the Atchison has. Other railroads running from Chicago west have not shrunk in the same degree. They have suffered somewhat, but not to the same extent as the Atchison.

But, Mr. Speaker, what I said was in relation to the Atlantic and Pacific road, and I want to say about that that it was capitalized for $270,000 a mile, though it would not cost over $20,000 a mile to build it.

Now, to show what the capitalization of $270,000 a mile means, let me illustrate by comparison.

The Boston and Albany road is one of the most perfect railroads in the United States. It is a great road, laid with the most perfect rails, equipped with the most magnificent equipment in every respect, running through a very closely settled region, with all its stations and appointments of the highest order, and yet the Boston and Albany road, with all its expenditure for that splendid equipment, is capitalized at only $110,000 per mile.

Again, the Lake Shore road, running from Buffalo to Chicago, is regarded as one of the model railroads in the United States, and is often held up, both by our own people and by strangers who visit this country, as an illustration of what honesty and good judgment in railroad management can accomplish. It is a double-track road, thoroughly equipped in every respect. That road is capitalized, including stocks and bonds, at $86,000 a mile. Yet here is this Atlantic and Pacific road, which is laid with rails which, I am informed, have not been renewed for ten years, which has not a respectable depot on its whole line, which got its roadbed and right of way from the Government—this miserable apology for a railroad is capitalized at $270,000 a mile, and this bill as it originally came from the Senate, in spite of the close scrutiny which my friend from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] says must have been given to it there, that bill proposed to allow that that capitalization should not only be allowed to continue, but should continue under the patronage and indorsement of the Congress of the United States.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have taken more time on this matter than I ever dreamed of taking. I wish simply to say in conclusion that the bondholders and the security holders of the Atlantic and Pacific road have nothing to do with this matter. They have already entered into, and are about to consummate, an absolute sale of their property to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Company.

All that we ask, in insisting on this amendment, which has been already accepted by the gentleman from Vermont in charge of this bill—all that we ask is that this House of Representatives, in chartering this road anew, and starting it out once more, shall limit it to issuing only such securities as are represented by the mortgage debt, which in itself will make $70,000 a mile, almost equal to the capitalization of the Lake Shore Railroad.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have moved, subject to the vote to be taken before, that the House insist upon the amendment which it has already adopted, but after consultation with other gentlemen who agree with me on this subject, it seems to me best to say that if the House will vote to insist I shall then be ready to offer a resolution of instruction to the future conferees.

Mr. GROUT. I suppose the question is first on agreeing to the report.

Mr. BARRETT. If we do not agree to the report, we shall insist.

Mr. GROUT. Without instructions?

Mr. BARRETT. I simply say that, so far as I am concerned, the motion I made for instructions is not now pressed, but will be presented later.

The SPEAKER. With reference to the question of instructing a conference committee, the Chair desires to say that upon examining the case referred to in the Digest he finds that the statement of the Digest is not justified. The proper course of procedure in such a case as this is for the House first to vote upon agreeing to the report of the conference committee. If the report be disagreed to, then the House may insist upon its amendments and ask for a new conference; and pending the appointment of the conferees a motion may be made that they be instructed. The statement in the Digest is misleading.

Mr. BARRETT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the Chair hold that the motion for the previous question having been voted down, it is now competent to move it again?

The SPEAKER. It is competent for the gentleman in charge of the report to make any motion that he sees fit.

Mr. GROUT. I desire to be heard further.

Mr. BARRETT. I do not desire to have the previous question ordered on my motion. I simply want to ask the gentleman on the other side whether some agreement can not be made in regard to a vote? A good many of us have remained here until it is now 3 o'clock, and some of us would like to know how long the debate is likely to continue.

Mr. POWERS. I do not care to prolong this discussion for any length of time; but I want to occupy a few moments in reply to the gentleman's attack on this bill, and then I will move the previous question, if nobody else desires to speak.

Mr. MCRAE addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] is recognized.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty-four minutes left.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, the three principal objections which I have heretofore urged against this bill have been, I think, very ably and fully covered by my colleague from Arkansas, Judge TERRY, by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT], by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE], and by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], and I shall not now attempt to do more than to restate these objections in brief.

I do not believe that Congress should grant Federal charters at all. The exercise of such power was always of doubtful propriety and dangerous. The history of this road shows that Congress made a great blunder in granting it a charter. There is no necessity for the exercise of such power the second time in its behalf. The property rights of the mortgagees of this company can be maintained and protected by charters obtained from the States without coming to Congress, and, if necessary, Congress can give it the right of way through the Indian country. But when they come to us confessing that it is bankrupt, with a record showing that it has complied with not a single condition imposed upon it in the original grant, it is not only our right, but it is our solemn duty, in the first place, to see that the new company pays the debts which are due for labor, supplies, damages, and other debts incurred in connection with the operation of the road.

Second, that no benefit shall accrue by reason of the reorganization to the faithless stockholders who have wrecked the road. If the stock is worthless, it should not be recognized in the reorganization. The property is not worth more than one-fourth of the funded debt and not as much as the mortgage debts; and it is the duty of Congress to see that in authorizing stock no more shall be issued than the cash value of the property the company really owns. The House conferees have abandoned the House amendment in this regard.

Third, we should see to it that the settlers along the line of this road who want the land under the public-land laws are not further harassed by lawsuits and contests of a concern whose mismanagement and bankruptcy are so notorious and outrageous. We have the power to say to this company before we give it a new lease of life: "You must pay these debts and refund at the actual value of the road and give peace and quiet to the settlers and to the United States as well, so far as the lands in controversy are concerned, by releasing all claim, and thus make the forfeiture act of July 6, 1886, effectual."

More than ten years ago Congress, after due deliberation and extensive discussion, determined that a forfeiture should be declared. And yet for all that time the Government and the people along the line of this road have been defiantly told by this company that the forfeiture is worthless and that the lands belong to it, although no road has been constructed, and they have assumed to sell the lands. The conference report pretends to protect the settler. How? By compelling them to pay this faithless company and its assigns for lands the title to which was resumed in 1886. It is nothing less than an indirect method of yielding the claim of the United States and admitting the contention of the railroad company. It confirms the sales made by the company and puts settlers at its mercy.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the House fairly understands what this bill means, and that it will not pass it. It is an effort to rehabilitate a defunct corporation that does not deserve to live a day.

It will have the effect to continue litigation that ought never to have been commenced. It gives something to a lot of men who deserve nothing. If the bondholders are honest, invested their money in good faith, and shall purchase at foreclosure sale, then Congress, if it deems proper, may give them the right to reorganize. But until they have done that, and as long as they seek in collusion with the old stockholders of the concern to reorganize on a basis that contemplates the issue of watered stock, it is our duty to do nothing to aid them.

I hope the House will vote down the report, and that then we will instruct the conferees to insist upon the amendments of the House to the bill.

Mr. GROUT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE].

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, if I gather the substance of the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT], his chief objection to the bill as it comes from the conference committee grows out of the fact that some of his constituents were so unfortunate as to lose some money in investments in Santa Fe stock. It is to be regretted that any portion of our people should be so unfortunate as to lose any investments they have made. But that happens everywhere among men who transact business. But because his constituents have lost some money is no reason why he should antagonize the measure at this time, when it is satisfactory, as I understand it, to all of the creditors who have claims against this corporation. There is no one here complaining that any creditor would be wronged by this settlement if this bill becomes a law. On the other hand, I understand that all of the creditors are entirely satisfied with the measure.

The people of Kansas, and they are interested in the operation of this road, are entirely satisfied with this proposition. The great corporation created under the laws of the State of Kansas, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company, forming a large business factor in the transaction of all of the business of that great State, will operate this road if it can be purchased under the provisions of this act, and I apprehend will operate it successfully.

The provision authorizing the issuance of stock is a well-guarded measure. I call the attention of the House especially to it. It provides that—

> The capital stock of the corporation herein authorized shall be divided into shares each of the par value of $100, and shall not exceed the amount of the mortgage debt due and unpaid at the time of the decree of foreclosure: Provided, That additional stock and bonds may be issued by the corporation upon the payment into its treasury therefor the full par value thereof in cash. No stock shall be issued until the Secretary of the Interior shall approve its issue and certify that it is issued in conformity to the provisions of this act. The total stock issued under the provisions of this act shall not exceed $100,000,000.

I call the attention of the House to the fact that this is a well-guarded provision, so that investors, before they purchase, will have the assurance that labor, or money, or property has been given for the value of the stock.

I apprehend, also, Mr. Speaker, that a purchaser who takes stock buys it on the market of the country. It is no part of the business of the Government of this country to become the guardian of the business people of the nation as to what they shall purchase or what they shall not purchase. The purchaser of stock on on the market is like the purchaser of all other property—he takes his chances. The argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts is without merit or force.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BLUE. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Does the gentleman propose to say that the creditors of this road, or the people of this country, would support this measure that sanctions the further issue of stock at a par value of 100 cents on a dollar when it is quoted now in the market at less than 2 cents on the dollar?

Mr. BLUE. Ah! but the gentleman is mistaken. So far as that is concerned, I do not know at what price the stock of the old company is quoted. But the reorganization provides for the issuance of new stock, and the creditors of the company are satisfied to take it and pay cash, property, or labor therefor.

The old stock will doubtless be funded in new stock at its cash value. This idea that some gentlemen have that the cost of transportation to the parties who carry on traffic over a railroad—those residing along its line and who use it—that the cost of transportation of freight and passenger traffic is gauged by the extent of the bonded indebtedness and stock of the road is a mistaken one. It is no more true as a matter of fact that the cost of transportation is measured by the actual cost and indebtedness of the railroad than that wheat raised on lands which cost $100 an acre should rise in price proportionately above wheat raised on land that cost but $2.50 an acre. These are matters of competition among the railroads that run into competitive points like Kansas City, Chicago, New York, or the other great centers of trade in this nation. They are not controlled in their charges by the cost and indebtedness of the road, but by the law of supply and demand, and by the rules that govern in the competition of the world. So far as that is concerned, there is no argument in it; it falls to the ground.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a well-guarded measure. The opposition to it springs out of the belief that some one has in the past secured an undue advantage under a former enactment, and that he ought to be punished. These opponents seem to think that if he can not be punished, somebody else should be. Let us legislate, Mr. Speaker, from a higher standpoint. Let us meet the requirements of the people on this subject; let us do as we ought to do, regardless of any desire to punish any company or set of individuals.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROUT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN].

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I realize, residing in the Territory where I do, that it is absolutely necessary for Congress to grant a Federal charter to the Central Division of this railroad. It is operated in the Indian Territory, and without the consent of Congress it can not extend or operate its road. I feel what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] has said with reference to the bonding and the increase of stock, but I desire to call his attention to this fact: The people who live along these lines of railroads are not responsible for that. It is the people who live in his State of Massachusetts who are responsible for bonding the road and increasing the indebtedness to $270,000 a mile. This stock has been sold to servant girls in that State, and they are entirely wiped out if Congress does not at this time, or at some time, authorize a reorganization of this company.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FLYNN. I have but five minutes. It is not our fault if the New England States, and more especially the State of Massachusetts, watered this stock until all the servant girls in that country were bankrupted. Now, when honest men, interested in the development of this road, when settlers living along it, who can not afford to pay these interest charges on a bonded indebtedness of $270,000 a mile, come to Congress and ask the granting of this new charter, to see if something can be saved out of the wreck, I believe it should be granted to them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with reference to what the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] said, I venture the assertion that this conference committee have gone further in this matter than any mortgagee taking possession of this property would have gone. They specify in this bill that the company shall be liable for the wages and supplies of operation of the road legally chargeable against the old company. As lawyers, you all know that there is no legal obligation with reference to those items that this company would be compelled to assume. With reference to the increase of the stock, all I have to say is that the gentleman from Massachusetts evidently desires to have stricken out the safeguard which the conference report retains, so that the stock can be again watered, and then repudiation charged to the people of the West who live along the road. The conference committee provide in their report that the stock shall be restricted to the actual value of the property when exchanged therefor. How? As ascertained by the Secretary of the Interior, regardless of the original and the probable increased cost. In other words, that a disinterested officer of the Government shall say what the value of the property is and the amount of stock which may be issued, prohibiting the New England gentlemen, as he presumes to call them, from again watering this stock up to $270,000 a mile.

With reference to the clause concerning the settlers along the line, the conference report amply protects the only men whom Congress is in reality morally bound to protect, and those are the poor settlers living along it who are trying to eke out an existence. What do the conferees say with reference to that?

> With respect to executed land contracts, the conference committee believed that such liability should extend to actual settlers and occupants purchasing in tracts of 640 acres or less.

In other words, the homestead settler on the 160 acres of land should be protected in the passage of this bill. Why should not these people be allowed to reorganize on an honest, fair basis, subject to the approval not of the stockholders or bondholders, but subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

This road, gentlemen, as a matter of fact, has two divisions, and without being operated by either the Frisco or the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, it begins nowhere and ends nowhere. We in my section are interested in having the road extended 70 miles, in order to connect with other lines in Oklahoma Territory. They can not extend it, and can not reorganize and operate there without a Federal charter.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the point the House wants to keep in mind is that we as a body are under obligations to extend and make sure to the security holders of this road, the bondholders under the mortgage which we authorized, every right which they had good reason to expect when they took these securities. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN] has stated a fact that makes it improper to remit this company to charters to be granted by the States. So the argument of the gentleman from Arkansas that this is bad policy is answered by the statement of the gentleman from Oklahoma. It is also answered by the further fact that Congress has a specific duty to perform in this particular railroad case, because it first chartered this company, and it should see that all the rights of all the security holders under that charter are suitably protected now.

Now, a word in reference to the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT], in which he arraigned me for having asserted that he had made an untrue statement on the floor. Let us see about it. He stated to the House as a fact that this road had been sold, as I understood it, though afterwards he changed the statement to the effect that arrangements had been made for its sale—and he may be correct in this—that it had been contracted for sale at $10,000,000. On looking into the facts, it appears that only one division of the road had been under negotiation. That is the Western Division. The Central Division, of equal or perhaps greater length and value—I am not acquainted with the mileage of the two divisions—is not at all included in that agreement. And yet the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] assumed that to be the value of the road, and then with a statement of the amount of the funded debt, which is some forty million dollars, put to me the question he did as to the amount of stock that ought to be issued.

Mr. Speaker, it is now plain how utterly lame was his proposition, when it now appears that only one division of the road had been talked about for $10,000,000.

Mr. BARRETT. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly; always.

Mr. BARRETT. The Western Division is that to which I alluded and the bonds and securities to which my colleague [Mr. MOODY] alluded. He alluded only to the securities which pertain to the road to which I had alluded

Mr. GROUT. He referred to the bonds of the road, and presumably the whole road, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] spoke of a sale of the road, and presumably the whole road, when it turns out that there has been no proposition for the sale of but the Western Division. Now, I will leave to gentlemen on the floor whether I was justified in saying that the gentleman's statement that the road had been sold for $10,000,000 was not true. And as to whether the gentleman said sold, or bargained to be sold, I will leave to the gentleman's colleague [Mr. MOODY], who stated in his question to me his understanding to the effect that the gentleman said the road had been sold for $10,000,000. Mr. MOODY seems to have understood the gentleman precisely as I did, that the road had been sold—not, as the gentleman now says, bargained to be sold.

Mr. BARRETT. Why, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to correct that statement?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. BARRETT. He says at least only one-half.

Mr. GROUT. Only a division.

Mr. BARRETT. It is nearly six-sevenths.

Mr. GROUT. Well, I am differently informed.

Mr. BARRETT. Let the gentleman read the report of the Commissioner of Railroads.

Mr. GROUT. I can not stop for that now. The gentleman from Arkansas says that it should be disposed of in a way so that the rights of the landholders shall be preserved. Will gentlemen give their attention to the clause in the report which fully provides for this. It is as follows:

> That in case any uncompleted contract for the purchase of land shall be pending at the time of such foreclosure sale, such new company shall, upon payment to it of any unpaid balance of purchase money for such land at the time provided in such contracts for the sale thereof, convey and release to the holders of such contracts all its title, interest, and estate in and to the land embraced in such contracts.

What more for the protection of the landholders can the gentleman ask? There is, however, in the report of the conference committee a clause expressly extending this protection "to any bona fide settler and occupant on a tract of 640 acres of land or less," in the foregoing language, making certain its application to the occupant of a piece of land, however small, held under a grant from this railroad. How can the gentleman from Arkansas ask for more?

Mr. McRAE. Will the gentleman from Vermont allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. McRAE. Does not that amendment in itself concede to the road the right to sell and make title to the very land in question, thereby confessing the contention of the railroad?

Mr. GROUT. But it compels, Mr. Speaker, the railroad to carry out the contract of the former corporation. That is what it does; no more and nothing less. Do we want to impose upon them any larger duty? I believe not.

Mr. McRAE. If my friend will allow me, my question is whether they have the right to sell it. It leaves them with the money which they get and takes title from them, which is denied by many of us.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman is evidently proceeding on the supposition that this land grant should be forfeited.

Mr. McRAE. It has been forfeited.

Mr. GROUT. If the Supreme Court forfeits it, then nothing more can go to the road and the land grant fails, of course, because they have no right or title to convey. Now, as to another amendment that is in line 31 of the bill, in the early part of the report. The gentleman who moved that amendment has said upon the floor that this covers all he sought to cover in his amendment, which is to protect the wage earners and those furnishing supplies for the operation of the road.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has the approval of every security holder of this road. They are all satisfied with it, and it would seem upon the most careful examination that nobody is given any opportunity to practice mischief, unless he does it in spite of law. It preserves to those bondholders what they thought they had when they took the bonds, when they took the road, namely a corporate existence. That is all it confers. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the report will be approved by the good judgment of the House, as I believe it will. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has six minutes remaining.

Mr. GROUT. I yield the balance of my time to my colleague [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been very fully debated by the House, and I have now no doubt that members are anxious to get rid of it and to come to a vote. I wish in the brief time given me to simply review the provisions of this bill.

The bill has been carefully examined, not only by every party in interest in this property, and by the various security holders, but the conference committee of both Houses have taken two days' time in the careful examination of these various amendments, and putting them in shape so that they will carry out what they deem to be the good sense of the greatest numbers of the parties in interest of this railroad.

Now, what is the history of that road? In 1866, or thereabouts, the charter for the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company was granted. It started from the city of Springfield, in the State of Missouri, and ran through to the Pacific Ocean. It was fully supposed by the men in the management of the road at that time that the road could be built upon capital stock. They started in, but, like the best laid plans of men, they failed. They were obliged to come to Congress and get the right to issue a mortgage.

That was done in 1871. That mortgage right was granted to them. This mortgage in question that we are now dealing with was issued under the provisions of the act of 1871, to enable this company to push the enterprise toward the Pacific Ocean. But the money realized upon the sale of those bonds proved to be insufficient. This road, like many other struggling railroads in the infancy of their construction, was unable to complete its line. It went into the hands of other corporations. It was obliged to invoke their aid in order to complete the line, and so the road has been split up into two or three different sections. That portion of it running from Springfield, Mo., to Albuquerque, N. Mex., is under control of one corporation, the portion of the road from Albuquerque west for a certain distance is under another corporation, and thence on westward it is under still a third control.

The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad, a competing line running from about the same terminal points east and west, got control of a portion of this line, and that brings me to the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT], that the Atchison Company are interested in this road. They are interested in it. They have taken control of a section of it. They furnished the money. The bondholders' rights in the first mortgage have become insignificant in value. The first-mortgage bonds are selling in the market at a small fraction of their face value, and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Company are the only parties in the world that can take this line and push it along as it was originally designed. The people along the line of this road are clamoring for its completion.

This bill provides that the bondholders, or the purchasers from them, may organize into a corporation, may issue stock up to the amount of the funded debt of the original company, and additional stock, on a cash basis, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of completing the line. The gentleman from Oklahoma, the gentleman from New Mexico, all the gentlemen coming from the region of country interested in the road, are clamoring to have something done by Congress for the relief of the settlers along the line. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] says that the rights of these settlers are being put in jeopardy. How are they being put in jeopardy? The bill provides that the rights of homesteaders along this line, up to the amount of an entire section of land—640 acres—shall be protected. If these settlers purchased from the old company, the new company is brought in to perform the contract. That provision covers nearly double the limitation ordinarily contained in bills of this nature. I undertake to say there is not an act of Congress in the world in which it is provided that the rights of a settler to more than 320 acres—half a section of land—are protected under such circumstances. This bill goes far beyond that, and is most liberal in its provision for the benefit of homesteaders along this line.

Mr. McEWAN. Does not the approval of the Secretary of the Interior of the issue of stock apply only to the additional stock for new road and equipment? It does not refer at all to the stock to be issued to the amount of the funded debt.

Mr. POWERS. It does not refer to that. The bill gives the new corporation the right to issue stock up to the limit of the funded debt; and that is proper, because a share of stock, even though it sells for 10 cents on the dollar, is still counted as a share representing $100 face value. These parties simply get the right to issue new stock up to the amount of the original stock, whether it is good, bad, or indifferent. Is not that proper? It is further provided in this conference report that the rights of every wage earner and every man who has furnished supplies to the old company shall be recognized by the new company, and that he shall be paid. That is a provision of eminent justice to the poor settlers along the line, and to the section men and the others who have worked night and day to serve the traveling public.

Now, the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] is that the right to the land grant which was granted to the projectors of this enterprise by the original charter, and was by them mortgaged to these bondholders, shall be preserved, to the extent that the Supreme Court of the United States, upon a question now pending before it, shall determine.

Mr. McEWAN. One other question—and my vote will depend upon the gentleman's answer. I ask him to point out the provision in this conference report and in the bill by which the laborer is secured to be paid.

Mr. POWERS. If the gentleman has the conference report before him and will turn to page 6, about three-quarters of the way down the page, he will find this language:

Strike out the word "not," in line 31 of the bill, and in place of the language stricken out by the amendment insert the words "except such as may have been incurred for wages or supplies in the operation of the property purchased."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a moment more.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. POWERS. I will ask for ten minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that he be allowed ten minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. BARRETT. I will not object, Mr. Speaker, provided the gentleman will allow ten minutes to anybody on this side who may desire to reply to him.

Mr. POWERS. I will make no objection to any request of that kind.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. POWERS. Now, then, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this House ought not to be taken off its feet by the clamor of the gentleman from Massachusetts, who, I suppose, represents some of the security holders in some enterprise antagonistic to the rights of these purchasers. I do not know whom he represents. He professes to be loaded down with information—information that there is some great rascality in this proposition. Now, I ask the good sense of this House to examine the proposition. Gentlemen on this floor are capable of judging for themselves whether the language of this bill, read carefully, read as sensible men would read language, carries anything in it that threatens the rights or the property interests of any body of people on the face of the earth. There is not a word susceptible of such construction.

But the gentleman comes here with his charges that there is "something rotten in Denmark." Has he proved anything of that kind? The man who gets up on the floor of this House and states that a proposition is loaded down with iniquity is bound to prove his proposition. How has the gentleman proved it? He has proved it, he says, by citing a circular letter addressed to the security holders of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company in which they are invited to attend a meeting to be held in New York yesterday to confirm a proposition for the sale of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Company. Well, is there anything criminal about that? I put it to the good sense of every man here, is there anything criminal in the proposition of these poor bondholders who are struggling to get something out of the property in which they have buried their money by selling it out to a corporation that can buy and pay for it; and if they sell a bond of the par value of $100 for 5 cents, have we any right or obligation to inquire into it, provided they see in the sale something that probably will be a benefit to them?

That is the simple proposition made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, which he says shows "the African in the wood pile" in this transaction. There is no "African in the wood pile," so far as this committee is aware. We have prepared a bill here which on its face, in its letter, and in its spirit works out substantial justice and right to everybody interested in this property. And if anybody has come here representing any secret interest, if any Massachusetts interests are involved in this matter, they are not involved in the direction of the public good. As was suggested by the gentleman from Oklahoma, all the iniquity that has ever been practiced on the line of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad dates from the city of Boston and its immediate environment. There is where the men live who wreck railroads. There is where the money comes from that creates all the rascality that the gentleman is scolding about. And, sir, it has been said many and many times that "it is a dirty bird that fouls its own nest." [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not stand here to criticise the action of Massachusetts. Massachusetts has furnished too much talent, too much respectability, too much honor to the great Republic under which we live for me to undertake anything of that kind. She furnished two Presidents, the older and the younger Adams. But, Mr. Speaker, we are forced to admit that they are both dead. [Laughter.] She furnished to us the greatest lawyer, the greatest statesman, the most magnificent expounder of our organic law that ever lived—Daniel Webster. But, sad as it may seem, Daniel Webster is dead. [Laughter.] She furnished us the most classic, the most learned and erudite statesman that ever sat in the halls of Congress—Charles Sumner. But, alas! Charles Sumner is dead. [Laughter.] And we are to-day left only to bask in the sunshine of the gentleman from Massachusetts who has come here to Congress recently by a strong vote of his constituents to learn how to do right and practice righteousness in the ways of legislation. He is not content to go to work and try to accomplish something for the public good; but he stands here as a censor upon the doings of this body. Why, Mr. Speaker, I have the greatest respect for him and his abilities. I have known him for many years. He might be one of the most useful men on this floor, but the trouble with him is he assumes that there is nothing on this floor that is worth respecting. He came here to shed light. He knew that this was a chaos of darkness when he came. He was born, Mr. Speaker, to be a rose, with the destiny of blooming and blushing upon this floor, but his fate has been to wither and waste his beauty on a desert air. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire simply to have this House examine this bill on its merits. If the bill has in it the elements of intrinsic justice to these poor bondholders who have put their money into this property thinking they were going to make a good investment and get good returns and have been disappointed, do not turn them away from the doors of Congress under a provision that unless they will surrender a part of their mortgage security they shall have no right to reorganize. That is not a proposition that sensible men can ever present to an intelligent body for purposes of legislation.

This bill, as I have already said, Mr. Speaker, more than once, meets the approval of the security owners of this property. If it be opposed by anybody, it is opposed by some secret influence that has not shown itself upon the floor of the House. No interest has ever come before the committee having charge of the measure in either House to oppose it. It has been approved by everybody in interest. The people on the line of the road are longing to have the much-promised road to the Pacific completed; and notwithstanding that fact, men stand up here and scold about the security holders and other matters, and reflect sometimes severely upon gentlemen who do favor the bill, when their objections have nothing whatever to do with the road itself. The people all want the road constructed; and, as I have said, the security holders are all satisfied with this settlement. The basis of the agreement is made in justice, and works out justice to all. The bill is in accordance with precedents you have each one of you many and many a time on the floor of this House admitted by your action here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, unless some other gentleman desires to be heard further upon this question, I will ask the House to come to a vote upon it.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, when I had the temerity to rise in the House this morning I suggested to the House that some old and wise member of this body whose head is silvered over with gray, and whose legal reputation far outspans the narrow confines of his own State, would probably find something humorous in the position taken by those who did not agree with them on this particular question. I did not think, however, that that would be the case with my friend from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] or that humorous remarks were to come from him with reference to those who differed with him on this question, for I thought he at least would remember the delicacy of his position by reason of the fact that I submitted to him this very proposition when the matter was under discussion in the House on the 15th day of December last, and he said then that it was entirely satisfactory to him. The amendment was submitted to him before it was presented to the House on the 15th day of December, and I repeat he said that he accepted it. So his argument to-day, Mr. Speaker, seems as if it must have come from some further conferences than those which he had on that occasion, and from some other source than gentlemen on this floor.

I propose before I get through to reply to the suggestions made by him. I do not believe in personalities on the floor of the House, but in view of the fact that the gentleman has seen proper to refer to me as being "interested" in the matter, I propose to draw a parallel which I think the gentleman will be able to understand. He has introduced personalities; I shall refer to them as slightly as possible.

I wish simply to say first that the only matter in which I am especially interested includes amendments 3 and 4. This road is about to pass, as I have already stated, into the hands of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe road. In return for $10,600,000 this road—that is to say, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe—will receive $16,000,000 of the first-mortgage bonds of the company, with the right to issue without consideration a large amount of stock. I took it for granted that the amendment which regulated that issue would receive the sanction of the chairman of the committee, since it had met his approval in December last. Various attempts have been made, Mr. Speaker, to obscure the issue that is presented to-day, but the fact remains the same, and the House must vote upon it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my friend from Vermont has intimated to the House that I am actuated by motives other than those of the public good in my opposition to this scheme; in other words, that I am representing some security holders who are opposed to this transaction.

I can state to the House and to the gentleman that not a single security holder of any character or description or of any kind whatever has ever spoken to me on the subject. The only gentlemen up to to-day with whom I have conversed were my friend and colleague, Mr. MOODY, from Massachusetts, and my friend and associate, Judge POWERS, of Vermont, of the committee. My colleague, Mr. MOODY, and myself did, in December last, prepare and present the amendment to the gentleman from Vermont, and it was then accepted by him. Yesterday Mr. MOODY and I still further conferred on this subject, and we came to the conclusion that this change which had been made by the conference committee simply authorized an additional issue of $12,000,000 worth of stock, which represents no value whatever.

Now, if nobody ever came to me on this subject, why was I interested? I will tell you. I had the honor—and I esteem it a great honor—to serve in the legislature of Massachusetts, and in that body, while I was a member of it, we passed some very important legislation regulating security issues by corporations. It met not only with the approval of all the people of Massachusetts, but with the approval of all public writers everywhere. I have not, by coming here, forgotten the lessons that I learned there; and when I found pending here a proposition which in Massachusetts would be illegal and everywhere would be esteemed by most men as questionable, to authorize a corporation to issue millions upon millions of stock without any value whatever behind it, I took occasion, as I had a right to do, in spite of my being in my first term in Congress, to advocate an amendment regulating the matter.

Now, that is where my interest lies in this matter, and I defy any man whatever to prove in any way whatever that any person whatever, under any guise or form whatever, has ever spoken a single word or addressed a single communication to me on this subject, except my friend Mr. MOODY and my friend Judge POWERS.

I did this morning think it was rather strange that, having advocated an amendment which the gentleman from Vermont had then accepted, and he having now reported to emasculate it, he would not allow me a few moments for debate—which he tried to cut off by the previous question—to express my views on the subject. Surprised? No, I was not surprised. I have noticed since my arrival in this Congress that my friend from Vermont is chairman of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and I have seen that, as chairman of that committee, no proposition, however unfavorable to the interests of the Government of the United States and however advantageous to the railroad corporations with which it has relations, has failed to receive his hearty and constant support.

Talk about my representing interested parties! Do you remember the debate that went on here a few weeks ago, when a proposition came up here which was called the Huntington funding bill? Have you forgotten that debate? Was not the grave statement made that that bill did not fairly protect the interests of the Government? And yet my friend from Vermont was the gentleman who reported it and the gentleman who advocated it. Did not the House reject it by an overwhelming majority? It hardly comes with good grace for the gentleman from Vermont to question the motives of a member who is advocating a policy formally adopted by his Commonwealth as against the advantage of a great railroad corporation.

He talks about Massachusetts men as having wrecked railroads. Why, Mr. Speaker, Massachusetts men are the last men to want to wreck railroads. Massachusetts men, by the hard work of their arms and heads, accumulate by industry and labor capital which they strive to invest, not to have it wrecked, but to have it protected, and Massachusetts men have been trying through all these hard times, by contributions and by surrender of interest and dividends, to protect and maintain what they have accumulated, and not in any way to strike down or to wreck. The corporation laws of Massachusetts, thoroughly imbued with the idea of making investments safe and permanent, are so perfect that they are the models of all the other Commonwealths of this country. In no States in the Union are property and the rights of the individual investors so carefully guarded from being wrecked as in the State of Massachusetts.

But how is it with the gentleman from Vermont? He alludes to me with withering sarcasm as having come here and withered away. I may have withered away. I never came here with very much to wither. I am still a young man, and I had no great reputation, except the reputation, if it may be called a reputation, of having served in my local legislature. I trust I shall never serve so long as to try to cover a bad case by an attempt at ridicule of a new member who is trying to do his duty. My friend came here with the record of a long term of service on the supreme bench of Vermont. What is the record of that court? Does it justify his attack on my State? Ask any honest man in New England who, led by false statements and interested assertions, invested his hard-earned money in the securities of the Central Vermont Railroad, and who has it taken from him by decisions which have never been approved by any other judicial tribunal on earth, what he thinks of Vermont railroad wrecking. To-day the Central Vermont Railroad, under the decisions of the supreme court of Vermont, is a synonym for all the quintessence of railroad wrecking. Let him indeed talk to me about Massachusetts men "wrecking railroads!"

Mr. GROUT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I will get through, and then you can answer me. Yes; I will yield to my friend.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. BARRETT. I said I was perfectly willing to yield.

Mr. GROUT. It seems to me that we had better not have the war of the States over again.

Mr. BARRETT. I did not inaugurate this war. The members of the House know that. The war was made by the gentleman's colleague upon Massachusetts men as being wreckers of railroads, and I say——

Mr. GROUT. It seems to me, further, it is out of order. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. One moment.

Mr. GROUT. That is, when a member is speaking in this House he can not put in question the dignity and integrity of the courts of any of the States.

Mr. BARRETT. This is not to come out of my time.

Mr. GROUT. I say that the gentleman has no right in this place to make a deliberate attack upon the judiciary of any State.

Mr. BARRETT. Why, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GROUT. I repudiate what the gentleman says absolutely as false.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont must confine himself to the point of order.

The Chair hardly thinks a member can be declared out of order on a question of that kind.

Mr. BARRETT. I do not object to the ridicule that has been heaped upon me and the comparison made with Daniel Webster and other great men of Massachusetts. It is not funny and not killing. But when the charge is made against Massachusetts of railroad wrecking—of Massachusetts, whose laws, whose courts, and whose people have always stood strong and steadfast against railroad wrecking—is dragged in here for the sake of producing prejudice in this House, I propose to have it understood that the greatest illustration of railroad wrecking known in all the annals of New England is the case of the Central Vermont Railroad, which, under a receivership conducted by the supreme court of Vermont, was about the biggest stench in the nostrils of honest men ever recorded in this country. Let anyone dispute that!

Mr. GROUT. I dispute it, Mr. Speaker. [Laughter.] It is false, and absolutely so. [Laughter.] Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement? [Cries of "Go on!" to Mr. BARRETT.]

Mr. BARRETT. I will allow the gentleman from Vermont time if I can have the same amount of time.

Mr. GROUT. Those decisions were rendered by a court which were elected annually until the recently changed constitution of the State. But since then they are biennially elected, and all the judges of the supreme court were repeatedly reelected without opposition. I say that no decision such as stated by the gentleman could have been made by that court and not be challenged by the people of that State, and especially by their representatives, when the judges came up for reelection. The decisions of the supreme court in the Central Vermont Railroad matter are in accordance with the decisions in all the States. If those decisions had been a stench in the nostrils of all decent men, as stated by the gentleman, they could hardly be in accordance with decided cases in other States, and I assert that they are. I can not present in detail the facts and the law of those decisions, but an analysis of them would absolutely refute the statement of the gentleman; and it seems remarkable to me that he should impute dishonorable and dishonest motives to a judicial tribunal of any State.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I impugn the motives of no tribunal. I said, when the gentleman from Vermont raised a question of railroad wrecking, that I referred to a fact that is known to all intelligent men in New England, that of all the railroad wrecks that were ever made through decisions, carried through series of years in the Supreme Court of the United States——

Several MEMBERS. Vermont.

Mr. BARRETT. Vermont. The greatest illustration was in the case of the Central Vermont Railroad, which for a period of twenty years dragged its slow length through legal meshes of complication, while the honest investors in that property were deprived of their investments by the men who managed it under the management of the supreme court. The road became known in that connection wherever railroad management or mismanagement was ever discussed. I do not question the legislature of Vermont; I impugn the motives of no member of that court; but I do say you can not go into Vermont and find one lawyer out of four who will not say that the record made in connection with the Central Railroad litigation was one in which the honest sons of the Green Mountain State had cause to blush.

Mr. GROUT. Will the gentleman permit a question? [Cries of "Go on!" to Mr. BARRETT.]

Mr. BARRETT. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GROUT. Did the Vermont court make any decision from which an appeal would not lie to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I am not a lawyer; I can not answer his question; but I know that the State of Vermont was agitated and torn so that families were rent asunder, all politics divided on railroad lines, and at times men were in fear of bodily violence because they dared to take issue with the railroad bosses of that period. Talk about the legislature of Vermont! I will say in all kindness that the majority of that body, I am afraid, when they elected judges and other officers, were not unmindful of the fact that the great railroad corporations were the parties who controlled the politics of the State. And that legislature, within my memory, refused to reelect a judge who had honored the supreme bench for years, simply because he had fallen under the displeasure of the railroads.

Mr. Speaker, I love Vermont. I lived there two years.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman has a strange way of showing his love for Vermont. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARRETT. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, I love Vermont. I lived there for two years, and I would not say, unless provoked, a word in criticism of her. But I love Massachusetts better, and when you place Massachusetts and Vermont side by side, when you compare the judiciary of those two States, when you compare the record for railroad management of those States, when you contrast the records and the traditions of Vermont and of Massachusetts, let me say that it comes with very ill grace for any man from Vermont to attempt to throw mud upon Massachusetts, as my friend Mr. POWERS has done.

It would be an act of recreancy if any son of Massachusetts—even though he be so poor and unimportant as my friend from Vermont from his elevation of long service pictures me—it would be an act of recreancy did he not hold up his hand and raise his voice in humble eulogy of his State, whose judicial decisions have never been called in question, but rank in the minds of all lawyers with those of the Supreme Court of the United States, and whose legislation regarding the control of corporations is a beacon light to legislators here and elsewhere. [Applause.]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, unless some gentleman desires to occupy further time, I will ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on agreeing to the conference report, the Speaker declared the ayes seemed to have it.

Several members called for a division.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, we shall save time by taking the yeas and nays at once. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Pending the roll call,

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry which I want members to hear.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARRETT. I want to ask the Speaker whether, if this report is rejected, it will not then be in order to move to instruct the committee in further conference to insist upon the amendments of the House?

The SPEAKER. It will be, if the House insists upon its amendments and asks for a conference. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 71, nays 142, not voting 142; as follows:

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my vote, as I find I am paired with the gentleman from Maine, Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. HICKS. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BROMWELL.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BINGHAM, and withdraw my vote. I wish to announce that if he were present, I would vote "no."

Mr. COX. I desire to inquire if my colleague, Mr. RICHARDSON, is paired on this vote?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that he is paired.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House insist on its amendment, and ask a further conference; and on that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken on the motion to insist and ask a further conference; and it was agreed to.

Mr. BARRETT. I now offer the following resolution of instructions.

Mr. THOMAS. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BARRETT. This is the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the instructions offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the House its conferees on the bill S. 1832, "An act to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company," should insist on striking out Senate amendments Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7.

Mr. POWERS. I think, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts has misconceived the scope of the report. I suppose he means to insist on the House amendments. These are House amendments stricken out by the Senate.

Mr. BARRETT. I did not draw the resolution myself, but supposed, from the source it came from, that it was right. But I will amend the resolution and offer it in the amended form.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the House its conferees on Senate bill 1832, "An act to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company," should insist on the House amendments numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7.

Mr. TERRY. I offer the following amendment to the instructions proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts:

The Clerk read as follows:

And the conferees on the part of the House are further instructed to insist upon a provision——

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Arkansas has offered an amendment, and was recognized for that purpose before the demand was made. The Clerk will report the amendment to the instructions.

Mr. BARRETT. But I called the previous question when I offered the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not move it in time.

Mr. BARRETT. I think the Chair misconceived my statement. I asked for the previous question when I first got up.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the gentleman can not insist on a demand for the previous question that neither the Chair nor the House has heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BARRETT. I made the request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, of course, must take the word of the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIS. I can testify that the gentleman made the motion, for I heard it.

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman made the motion for the previous question on his motion that the House insist on its disagreement, and ask a further conference, but not on the other.

Mr. BARRETT. I made it on both, I am satisfied.

The SPEAKER. The matter is easy of correction. If the House desires further instruction, it can vote down the previous question.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and on a division there were—ayes 39, nays 82.

So the demand for the previous question was rejected.

Mr. TERRY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment I send to the desk as additional instructions to the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

The conferees on the part of the House are further instructed to insist upon a provision to secure the payment of all debts, demands, and liabilities which were due or owing by the old company which were contracted, accrued, or were incurred or are due or owing for tickets and freight balances, or for wages, work, labor, materials, machinery, fixtures, and supplies of every kind and character done, performed, or furnished in the repair, equipment, operation, or extension of said road and its branches, and all liabilities incurred by said old company in the transportation of freight and passengers, including damages for injuries to employees or other persons, and to property, which have accrued or upon which suit had been brought or was pending, or judgment rendered, within twelve months prior to the appointment of a receiver or receivers in the foreclosure proceeding or since the appointment of any such receiver.

Mr. TERRY. I suppose debate is in order.

The SPEAKER. Debate is in order.

Mr. TERRY. As this amendment is rather long, I wish to state its effect. It proposes to extend the provision of the bill so as to cover operating expenses, wages, material furnished, and work done, and also injuries to person or property, within twelve months prior to the appointment of a receiver. It does not go back of that; but it applies also to such claims arising since the appointment of a receiver.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to; there being—ayes 71, noes 38.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon agreeing to the proposed instructions as amended.

The question was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. BARRETT. I move that the various votes taken on this question be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back the Military Academy appropriation bill, with the amendments of the Senate. I am directed to ask that the amendments be nonconcurred in, and that we ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Senate.

The amendments were disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS] that a conference with the Senate be requested on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. CURTIS of New York, Mr. GRIFFIN, and Mr. TYLER as conferees on the part of the House.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the House should refuse to go into Committee of the Whole on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], will not the unfinished business then be taken up under the regular order?

The SPEAKER. It will be.

Mr. THOMAS. I hope the motion of the gentleman from New York will be voted down.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 90, noes 52.

Mr. THOMAS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. THOMAS. Very well; I withdraw the call.

So the motion of Mr. WADSWORTH was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. PAYNE in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9961) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898.

The Clerk read the following:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Office of the Secretary: For compensation of Secretary of Agriculture, $8,000; Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $4,500; chief clerk, who shall be superintendent of the Department buildings, $2,500; private secretary to the Secretary of Agriculture, $2,000; stenographer to the Secretary of Agriculture, $1,400; private secretary to the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $1,000; one appointment clerk, $2,600; one chief of Supply Division, $2,000; one telegraph and telephone operator, $1,200; one clerk class 4, $1,800; three clerks class 3, $4,800; four clerks class 2, $5,000; nine clerks class 1, $10,800; nine clerks at $1,000 each, $9,000; five clerks at $840 each, $4,200; one engineer, who shall be captain of the watch, $1,600; one fireman, who shall be steam fitter, $900; one assistant fireman, $720; one assistant fireman, $900; four night watchmen, at $720 each, $2,880; messengers, laborers, mechanics, four day watchmen, and charwomen, $19,000; in all, $87,100.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word.

Yesterday distinguished Representatives from Ohio arose on this floor to defend that great State from certain attacks made upon Ohio and Indiana by the governor of Illinois, Mr. Altgeld. In the speech made by Mr. Altgeld he severely criticised the elections in Ohio and Indiana. But I do not believe that this is the place nor the time to "wash the dirty linen" of the politics of any State. I stand on this floor to defend Indiana if she needs defense, as Daniel Webster stood in the Senate to defend the State of Massachusetts. "I will enter upon no encomium upon Indiana. She needs none. There she is. Behold her! and judge for yourselves. There is her history. The world knows it by heart."

But, Mr. Chairman, with permission of the House, I desire to occupy the few moments allotted to me to say a few words upon the Cuban question.

Mr. Chairman, during the first session of this Congress a concurrent resolution was almost unanimously adopted by both Houses expressive of the sympathy of the Congress, as representatives of the American people, with the patriots of Cuba in the heroic struggle in which they were then, and still are, engaged in behalf of human liberty and the right of self-government. The sentiments expressed in that resolution received the indorsement of a very large majority of the citizens of the United States, and was only subjected to criticism because it was not a joint resolution and not stronger in expression. The people of this country have watched with deep interest the contest which has been waged in Cuba during the past two years between the patriots and their Spanish oppressors, and the demand of the people is almost unanimous that the time has now arrived for this Government to take such action as will stop the shedding of blood, stop the slaughter of the innocents by the Spanish barbarians, stop the devastation of the fair isle, and secure to Cuba the independence to which she is entitled by the laws of God, of justice, and humanity.

There can be no question about the justice of the Cuban revolution. Mr. Hazeltine, in the North American Review, in an able article, shows that taxation without representation is the Spanish policy of government in Cuba. At no time has the native Cuban representation in the Spanish Cortes, a body comprising 430 members, ever exceeded six, and has seldom exceeded three. With a population of 1,600,000, only 9.3 per cent of the population being Spaniards, the right of suffrage has been restricted to only 53,000 inhabitants of the island, or about 3 per cent of the population. While denied the right by the Spanish parliament to exercise any voice in the control of her own affairs, Cuba has become the "treasure island" of Spain, to be pillaged and robbed at will, which is done by the mother country imposing enormous budgets on the island.

In 1880 Spain commanded Cuba to furnish her $46,000,000 of revenue. In 1893 the budget was reduced to $26,000,000, but only because the island was unable to meet a greater exaction. In 1880 the deficit had reached $20,000,000; and all the deficits since 1878 amount to $100,000,000. With such management Cuba's debt has increased from $20,000,000 in 1868 to $190,000,000 when the present war broke out in 1895, and on the 31st of July, 1896, the debt was computed to have reached the fabulous sum of $290,000,000, and is to-day much greater. The interest on this debt imposes a burden of $9.79 on each inhabitant. Not a dollar of this enormous debt has been spent in Cuba to advance the work of improvement or civilization.

The salaries drawn from Cuba to pay the Spanish rulers of the island are shameless and almost incredible in extortion. The governor-general of Cuba is given a salary of $50,000 a year, besides a palace in Habana and a country house, servants, coaches, and a fund for secret expenses. The director-general receives a salary of $18,500 per annum. The archbishop of Santiago and the bishop of Habana get $18,000 each. The commander-general of the naval station has $16,393 a year. The general who is second in command upon the island and the president of the "Audiencia" receive $15,000 each; the governor of Habana and the secretary of the general government, $8,000. The major-general gets $7,500; brigadier-general, $4,500; the captains of the largest men-of-war receive $6,300; the captains of frigates, $4,560; the government clerks of the first class obtain $5,000 each, and those of the second class $4,000 each. All of these public functionaries receive, in addition to their salaries, free lodgings and domestic service paid by the state.

Under these officials is a multitude of minor employes, all munificently provided for. Employment by the Spanish Government in Cuba is far more lucrative than to be an officeholder under the United States Government at this capital. The minister of the colonies, who resides in Madrid, receives a salary of $96,800 a year, which is taken from the treasury of Cuba. Not only are these enormous salaries paid to the Spanish officials in Cuba, but the Cuban treasury has been plundered by the Spanish ministers time and time again. As recent as 1892 Minister Romero Robelodo took a million dollars belonging to the Cuban treasury from the vaults of the Bank of Spain and lent it to the Transatlantic Company, of which he was a stockholder. When threatened with prosecution, he replied that if prosecuted, all of his predecessors from every political party would have to sit beside him in the prisoner's dock. In 1890 it came to light, through a debate in the Cortes, that $6,500,000 had been abstracted from the Caja de Depositos, although the safe was locked with three keys, each of which was in possession of a different high Spanish official. It was learned at the same time, that through false vouchers for transportation and fictitious bills for provisions alleged to have been furnished during the ten years' war in Cuba, the Cuban treasury had been robbed of $22,811,000. Not one of these Spanish officials implicated in these robberies of the Cuban treasury has ever been punished.

The administration of law in Cuba is a terrible injustice. The lives and property of Cubans receive no protection from the Spanish Government even in times of peace. Personal safety is a delusion. While it is said that executions for political offenses up to the opening of the present rebellion had not taken place since 1878, yet it is well known that the Spanish Government has resorted to a simpler method of removing political offenders—by assassination. The attorneys-general and the presiding judges receive their instructions from the governor-general's office. Imprisonment without warrant and for an indefinite time is common.

No people yearning for liberty have had better cause than the Cubans of to-day. They have a hundred times more provocation than had the English colonies of America in 1775. The revolution has attained a measure of success that deserves to at least be recognized as belligerence. [Applause.] In two years the Cuban insurgents have overrun and continue to hold a greater portion of the island, while the Spanish control no considerable section of the island outside of the seaports and a few strongly fortified towns in the interior. The recognition of the Cubans as belligerents would be in strict conformity with the policy of our Government. James Monroe acted upon a principle propounded by himself when he declared that—

> As soon as the movement assumes such a steady and consistent form as to make the success of the province probable, the rights to which they were entitled by the law of nations as equal parties in a civil war have been extended to them.

Again, in a dispatch dated September 20, 1836, and addressed by Mr. Forsyth, Secretary of State, to the Mexican plenipotentiary in Washington, the habitual attitude of our Government toward Spanish-American revolutionists is thus defined:

> It is a well-known fact that the vessels of the South American provinces were admitted into the ports of the United States under their own or any other flags from the commencement of the revolution; and it is equally true that throughout the various civil contests that have taken place at different periods among the states which sprang from revolution the vessels of each of the contending parties have been alike permitted to enter the ports of this country. It has never been held necessary, as a preliminary to the extension of the rights of hospitality to either, that the chances of the war should be balanced and the probability of eventual success entertained. For this purpose it has been deemed sufficient that the party has declared its independence and was at the time actually maintaining it.

Another application of this principle was made in the case of Texas. The Texans declared their independence from Mexico on March 2, 1836. This was signed by but sixty men, of whom only two were of Mexican nationality. Nevertheless, just six months afterwards the United States recognized the belligerent rights of the Texans by proclaiming the neutrality of the United States in the contest between them and Mexico.

Why, in view of well-established precedents, should this Government longer hesitate to recognize the belligerency of Cuba? It can not be longer said that war does not exist on the island, because we admit the existence of war when our southern coast is patrolled by United States cruisers to stop the infraction of the neutrality laws. Until we recognize the existence of a state of war in Cuba we can not be neutral. Diplomats and American statesmen who are inspired in their opposition to recognition by the wines and cigars consumed while their legs cross under the mahogany of the Spanish minister can no longer make the people believe that Spain is merely engaged in the pastime of chasing down "a few marauding bands of Cuban bandits." We must not forget that Spain has shipped to Cuba since March, 1895, a dozen great expeditions, aggregating nearly 150,000 troops, officered by over 10,000 skilled soldiers; also 170,000 magazine rifles, hundreds of pieces of field artillery, and over 75,000,000 cartridges. Besides, Weyler has under arms a "volunteer" corps, mostly Spaniards, of 50,000 residents of Cuba. The battle of Gettysburg presented no better evidence of the existence of war in our own fair land than does the presence of Weyler and his 200,000 soldiers in Cuba. War does exist in Cuba—terrible, cruel, relentless, bloody war—a war of oppression on the side of Spain against as brave and patriotic a people as ever wielded a sword in behalf of justice and human liberty.

Our commercial interests, the interests of humanity, the well-defined principles of the Monroe doctrine, and the patriotic desire that is found in the heart of every American citizen to see the dominion of Spain cease to exist on the Western Continent and the isles adjacent thereto demand that the great power of our Government be extended to the Cuban heroes who are struggling to establish upon their fair island home a government founded, like our own, upon principles of universal liberty. [Applause.]

In 1823 John Quincy Adams, then Secretary of State, in instructions to our minister at Madrid, said:

> Those islands, from their local position, are natural appendages of the North American continent, and one of them (Cuba), which is almost in sight of our shores, from a multitude of considerations, has become an object of trenscendent importance to the commercial and political interests of our Union. Its commanding position with reference to the Gulf of Mexico and the West Indian seas; the character of its population; its situation midway between our southern coasts and the Island of Santo Domingo; its safe and capacious harbor of the Habana, fronting a long line of our shores destitute of the same advantages; the nature of its productions and of its wants, furnishing the supplies and needing the returns of a commerce immensely profitable and mutually beneficial—all these things give it an importance in the sum of our national interests with which that of no other foreign territory can be compared, and little inferior to that which binds the different members of the Union together. Such, indeed, are between the interests of that island and of this country—the geographical, commercial, moral, and political relations—gathering in the process of time and even now verging to maturity, that, in looking forward to the probable course of events for the short period of half a century, it is scarcely possible to resist the conviction that the annexation of Cuba to our Republic will be indispensable to the continuance and integrity of the Union itself.

If for no other reason, humanity demands that blood should cease to flow in Cuba. The world knows well the character of the Spanish people; educated from infancy to the horrors and cruelties of the bull ring, they are a people of blood and treachery. In all the annals of history since the dawn of civilization, no nation laying any claim to enlightenment and Christianity has equaled Spain in its terrible and infamous record of brutality, rapine, and bloodshed. Its original possessions in the Western Hemisphere were obtained by conquest and lost by revolution. It was in Spain during the fifteenth century that the Tribunal of the Inquisition appointed by the Spanish Government commenced its terrible career under which tens of thousands of Christian men and women were condemned to the torture of the rack and the flames. It was under Spain in the sixteenth century that Pizarro, the conqueror of Peru, seized the Inca Atahualpa and treacherously put him to death, and whose career of blood and crime in Peru only ended with his own violent death. It was under Spain that the infamous Duke of Alva, prime minister and general of the Spanish army under Charles V, gained the victory of Muhlberg over John Frederick, elector of Saxony, in 1547, and had the elector condemned to death, which was only averted by the commutation of the sentence by the Emperor. When the Netherlands revolted against the tyrannies of Spain, it was this same Alva who was sent there with unlimited power, and who established the Bloody Council, over which he at first presided. This tribunal condemned all without distinction whose opinion appeared dubious or whose wealth excited jealousy. The present and the absent, the living and the dead, were subjected alike, and their property confiscated. Alva put to death on the scaffold the Counts of Egmont and Horn, and when he left Holland he boasted that he had executed 18,000 men besides those killed in battle.

Spain stands before the world to-day a nation of assassination, and the victims of her crimes in Europe, on the South American continent, and in the isles of the sea are as countless as the sands of the ocean. [Applause.] Spain is by instinct and by education a nation of bloodshed and brutality, where children are educated in the use of the dagger and stiletto before they learn their alphabets, and their Sabbath diversions are the orgies and cruelties of the bull ring.

Since the landing of Columbus in 1492, the Spanish nation has constantly and devilishly pursued a reign of rapine, ruin, and murder against the original inhabitants of this continent and the honest immigrants that sought these shores.

Four hundred years of robbery, torture, and assassination has been the rule of this cruel and unrelenting harlot of monarchy. Haiti, Santo Domingo, Mexico, Brazil, Chile, Peru, Florida, and calamitous Cuba have been despoiled of more than 30,000,000 of human beings, through the prison, the lash, the torch, the bloodhound, the sword, the matchlock, and the cannon of these pirates of the seas and bloodthirsty bullfighters of the land. The great and good Las Casas shows that more than 12,000,000 of Indians and negroes were destroyed in the space of thirty years by the ravenous freebooters from Spain in her early conquests on this continent, and this good priest appealed to Ferdinand and Isabella to put an end to the human slaughter, but without avail. From Cortez, Pizarro, Balboa, and Velasquez, down to the red-handed assassin, Weyler, a terrible track of smoldering ruins and murdered millions has been left in the wake of these Spanish fanatics and incarnate fiends.

Cortez and his warriors tore down and ruined the Aztec Empire, invading and destroying the blooming fields and dazzling halls of the Montezumas, and through treachery, greed, and murder roasted the Aztec king on a bed of live coals while plundering the palace of his ancestors. Pizarro and his religious renegades roasted and robbed the peaceful inhabitants of the Peruvian Empire, leaving a pillar of fire by night and a cloud by day to signalize the march of his conquering columns.

Velasquez desolated the fertile islands of the West Indies and Cuba, while other Spanish marauders and adventurers, in the name of God and Spain, killed and robbed the happy inhabitants of Florida and Louisiana.

With the crucifix in one hand and the sword of a tyrant in the other, the minions of this bastard monarchy nearly exterminated the original inhabitants of Central and South America, and all for sparkling silver and glittering gold to decorate and enlarge the churches, convents, monasteries, mansions, and palaces of Barcelona, Saville, Genoa, and Madrid. Here was truly "a crown of thorns and a cross of gold," the tortured getting the thorns and the tyrants getting the gold.

At home and abroad, throughout the world wherever the dominion of Spain has held sway, her record has been written in cruelty and blood.

The Spanish soldiery at home and abroad have never hesitated to snatch the sucking babe from its mother's breast, dash its brains out, and then outrage the shrieking mother; set fire to the wigwam of the Indian or the palace of the prince; imprison, starve, and garrote those who righteously struggle for liberty and will not bow in abject submission to the Spanish yoke. But the day of the Spanish dynasty is nearly over and she hastens to that setting sun that shall be for her eternal. [Applause.] She belongs to the bull-fighting, licentious race of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, and in the category of civilized nations of the nineteenth century there is no place for her. Her pride and poverty go hand in hand, and while putting on the airs of a Roderick and the prancing antics of a Bucephalus, she is only a poor imitation of Don Quixote and Rosinante.

Before the dawn of the twentieth century upon a progressive and enlightened world the power of Spain shall surely disappear from the American continent [applause], and in a short time she will be blotted from the map of Europe, torn to pieces by internal conflict, corruption, and conspiracy. The crimes she has committed for a thousand years cry to heaven for vengeance, and some modern Cæsar, Sulla, or Napoleon shall yet batter down her gates, towers, and battlements, and there shall cease to exist the most tyrannical, cruel, corrupt, and licentious monarchy that has ever disgraced the earth.

The foul treachery by which Antonio Maceo, that soldier of genius, the Sheridan of Cuba, was lured to his death is but in keeping with the Spanish idea of honorable warfare. Sweet to Spanish chivalry was the news of Maceo's assassination. The streets of Madrid, the Spanish capital, were aflame with bonfires glorifying the event. The treachery of Spain was sounded with praise; the Spanish minister to the United States congratulated his colleagues of the diplomatic corps over the death of this Cuban patriot. Weyler, the Spanish butcher, who has never fought a battle in honorable warfare, rides as a conqueror, a hero, through the streets of Habana, while men cheer, maidens sing songs of praise, and white-robed children scatter flowers to be crushed under his horse's feet.

Maceo is dead; slain as was Inca of Peru four centuries before; slain as was the gallant Colonel Crittenden and his fifty Kentuckians in 1851. Falling as a martyr to the cause of liberty, his blood, like the blood of other martyrs, will be the seed of the revolution; and the thousands that will rise to take his place, filled with a patriotism that can not be conquered by Spanish armies or overcome by Spanish treachery, will struggle on, guided by the hand of a just God, until the flag of free Cuba floats over the palace now occupied by the Captain-General of the island.

It is the right and duty of the American Congress to recognize the independence of Cuba, and the President of the United States must and will execute the law when it is constitutionally enacted. If he does not, there is a constitutional remedy ready at all times to meet just such cases. Cuba must and shall be free. The beautiful queen of the Antilles will soon rise from her crimson couch, and, like Aurora, tripping o'er the mountain tops of morn, she shall walk the vales and hills of Pinar del Rio, and blossom into beauty as a new State in the Western Hemisphere, dedicated forever to liberty, and as she lifts her eyes to the north, may she ever behold the Star Spangled Banner waving her a warm welcome as the youngest child in the galaxy of American Republics. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARDY. I ask unanimous consent for ten minutes more.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If I can be recognized, I will yield my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. TALBERT. I move that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARDY] be allowed to make a few more remarks before he says anything. [Laughter.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HARDY. I ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] to allow me ten minutes. If for no other reason——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARDY. I have asked unanimous consent for an extension.

Mr. TALBERT. I insist on my request that the gentleman be allowed to continue his remarks.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARDY] be allowed to continue for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Chairman, this talk is irrelevant and out of order. We are here to consider the Agricultural appropriation bill. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. HARDY. Then I give notice that no bill shall go through this House by unanimous consent during this session. [Laughter.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to bring to the attention of the gentleman in charge of this bill, for information, the language of the bill, beginning in line 18, on page 2:

Messengers, laborers, mechanics, four day watchmen, and charwomen, $19,000.

I understand, Mr. Chairman, that it is the fixed policy of Congress to make these appropriations specific. I find here, in the latter part of this paragraph which has just been concluded, the language which I have read. Now, Mr. Chairman, this appropriation of $19,000 for laborers and messengers is for the Secretary's office. The number of messengers or the number of laborers should be specified. It is a large sum of money to give to the Secretary's office indiscriminately and in bulk in this way, and I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why it is appropriated in this form, when it has been so long the fixed policy of Congress to make specific appropriations? How many laborers does the Secretary want? How many messengers and how many charwomen does he want?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That sum represents the amount necessary to take care of the building.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to ask the gentleman if he knows that to be true?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is to include cleaning and the laborers around the building. The item of $20,000 was reduced to $19,000.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I direct the gentleman's attention to the other paragraphs of the bill, which also contain appropriations for laborers and messengers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Some of them are on the statutory rolls and some of them are not. This lump sum is used to cover emergencies.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Do you not know, as chairman of the committee, how many laborers and messengers are necessary for the Secretary's office?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not exactly; no.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Does not the Secretary know?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suppose he does. Sometimes he requires more and sometimes less, according to the exigencies of the occasion.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Well, I want to say to the members of the committee that this is bad policy, to be appropriating money in bulk for messengers and laborers without knowing the number or the necessity for one or three or four or five.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will say to the gentleman that this item is in exactly the same language as last year, and the year before that, and the year preceding that.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I understand, but we might just as well improve as we grow older.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, that is for the House to say. The committee felt that that appropriation was not excessive. We have reduced it $1,000 from last year.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Well, if the chairman of the committee thinks $19,000 is not excessive, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. HULL. I would like to suggest to my friend from Georgia another proposition, that after the 4th of March next we will have a Secretary of Agriculture whom my friend and others will have confidence in.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Do you mean to say that this appropriation is intended for that purpose?

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is the opinion of the Secretary.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There is no more necessity for it than before. You make mention of every kind of employee that you have now. I want to say that just such appropriations as this create a great many of the scandals that affect the offices in this Government. And here is the harm of it. A barber, or a carriage driver, or anybody can be brought in under this appropriation and can be put down as laborers and messengers and paid out of this $19,000. It is not the best way of appropriating this money, and I do not think it ought to be done.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of Accounts and Disbursements: Chief of division and disbursing clerk, $2,500; one assistant chief of division, $2,000; one cashier, $1,800; two clerks class 3, $3,200; four clerks class 2, $5,600; one clerk class 1, $1,200; in all, $16,300.

Mr. DOCKERY. I reserve the point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. HARDY. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana.

[Mr. HARDY addressed the committee. His remarks appear in another part of to-day's RECORD.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of Publications: Chief of division, $2,500; assistant chief of division, $1,800; one editorial clerk, $1,600; one proof reader and indexer, $1,400; two clerks (one of whom shall be a stenographer), $2,000; in all, $9,300.

Document section: One superintendent, $1,800; one clerk, $1,000; one chief folder, $1,000; one folder, $840; five folders, at $600 each, $3,000; four copyists, at $840 each, $3,360; in all, $11,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I offer the following substitute for the section:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all between lines 5 and 18, inclusive, and substitute as follows:

"Division of Publications: Chief of division, $2,500; assistant chief of division, $1,800; one editorial clerk, $1,600; one proof reader and indexer, $1,400; two clerks (one of whom shall be a stenographer), $2,000.

"Document section: One assistant in charge, $1,800; one foreman, $1,400; one clerk, $1,000; one chief folder, $1,000; one folder, $840; four folders, at $600 each, $2,400; three copyists, at $840 each, $2,520; in all, $20,200."

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is the same thing as before, and makes a saving of $40 in salary.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee why the requirement in this bill that does not appear in the current law that one of the clerks provided at $1,000 is required to be a stenographer? It seems to be new language and not in the current law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was put in at the request of the superintendent of that division. He said a clerk who could write shorthand would be useful. That calls for no increase of expense.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order merely to inquire if the amendment changed existing law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. None at all; and it is actually a saving of something in salaries. It is simply a recasting of the salaries; that is all.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of Statistics: One Statistician, who shall be chief of division, $3,000; one assistant statistician, $2,200; one clerk class 4, $1,800; three clerks class 3, $4,800; five clerks class 2, $7,000; five clerks class 1, $6,000; seven clerks at $1,000 each, $7,000; four clerks at $840 each, $3,360; in all, $35,160.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, to come in after the word "sixty," in line 2, page 4.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after the word "sixty," in line 2, the word "one," and after the word "dollars," "eighty-seven cents: Provided, That the additional sum provided for by this amendment shall be immediately available, to enable the Department to supply the information asked for the use of the Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I raise the point of order against that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STEELE. What is the point?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is an increase of expenditures and changes existing law.

Mr. STEELE. It does not change existing law. I desire to call attention to the necessity for this small increase.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. STEELE. I will have a letter read.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1897.

DEAR SIR: Will you please inform me how many bushels of castor beans have been raised in this country each fiscal year from 1876 to 1896, inclusive, and such other information as you can give me relative to the possibility of producing enough of these beans to supply the demands of the United States?

I am, yours, very respectfully,

GEO. W. STEELE.

Mr. HENRY A. ROBINSON,
Statistician, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Mr. STEELE. The reply of the Statistician is embraced in the letter which I subsequently addressed to the Secretary of Agriculture, which I now ask to have read.

The letter was read, as follows:

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1897.

DEAR SIR: On the 21st instant I wrote to the Statistician of your Department as follows (quoting letter to Mr. Robinson, as above).

This morning I received from the Statistician a letter stating that "the clerical force and appropriation for this office are not sufficient to warrant me in making investigations in regard to any but the principal farm crops."

As a member of the Ways and Means Committee the information as indicated above is considered desirable, and it is hoped that the Secretary may be able to overcome the difficulties which seem to beset the Statistician in his Department.

I am, yours, very respectfully,

GEO. W. STEELE.

Hon. J. STERLING MORTON,
Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Mr. STEELE. I ask now to have read the letter which I received from the Secretary in reply.

The letter was read, as follows:

Subject: Investigations in regard to production of castor beans.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 26, 1897.

SIR: In response to your letter of the 25th instant, in regard to making investigations in regard to the production of castor beans in the United States, I have to inform you that I have referred the matter to the Statistician of this Department, who states that he is very anxious to make an investigation bringing out the information desired by you, and also investigations relative to sugar, poultry, dairy products, fruits, hops, hemp, alfalfa, the canning industry, truck farming, and intensive farming; but as the clerical force of the Statistical Division of this Department are now taxed to their utmost capacity, it is impossible to undertake any of the above-mentioned investigations.

Respectfully,

J. STERLING MORTON,
Secretary.

Hon. GEORGE W. STEELE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. McMILLIN. What appropriation does the gentleman require?

Mr. STEELE. I think the amount will be about $1.87.

Mr. McMILLIN. Only $1.87?

Mr. STEELE. That is all.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then I would suggest to the gentleman, as he seems to think that the necessary expenditure will not be exorbitant, that the appropriations in this bill take effect only at the beginning of the next fiscal year, and as the Ways and Means Committee are now at work with such vigor upon a tariff bill to be considered by a future Congress——

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I have not yielded to the gentleman for a speech.

Mr. McMILLIN. Very well, Mr. Chairman; I will not ask the gentleman to yield, but will make my speech when he gets through.

Mr. STEELE. I would state to the gentleman from Tennessee that I ask to have this appropriation made immediately available. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, I had intended to say something severe about the action of the Secretary of Agriculture in refusing the Committee on Ways and Means this information, which it would take so little time or trouble to supply, and I might do so but for the castigation administered to him by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] yesterday, although I must add that that castigation was administered for some of the public acts of the Secretary which most commend him to me. [Laughter.]

In the matter in question it would have taken the Secretary no longer to have supplied this important piece of information in relation to the production of castor beans than it took him to write this letter. It is a matter of importance, because if castor beans are not being produced in sufficient quantity for American consumption, the committee ought to be informed of it, so as not to impose an unnecessary duty upon the imported article; and the Secretary need not have taken more time to give the desired information than he consumed in giving us the information that he desires to make investigations as to sugar and poultry and intensive farming. For that reason I think the Secretary is open to criticism, and that is why I offer this amendment providing that he shall have as much money as I think will be really necessary to pay the expense of the work which he says he has not money to pay for.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I was seeking to get information concerning this question when my kind friend from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] suggested that he would not yield to me, and therefore I am compelled now to take a little of the time of the House, which I do reluctantly. I was proceeding to say when the gentleman cut me off that without some provision to make this appropriation immediately available the Committee on Ways and Means could not get the benefit of it until long after the tariff bill will have been framed; that, is if the majority of the committee proceed with that work with the industry and dexterity which they have manifested heretofore and which they seem inclined to continue.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman overlooks the fact that I propose to make this appropriation immediately available. Besides, if necessary, I will advance the money to the Department myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. I have not yielded to the gentleman from Indiana, but I will be more courteous than he was and will yield to him, if he desires. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. And I will apologize for not having yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact that he and I were called upon to forego our Christmas turkey at home and stay here through the recess and make these investigations ourselves. Therefore instead of castigating the Secretary of Agriculture for not doing what the gentleman himself and I have failed to do, he might just as well have summoned somebody from the uttermost parts of the earth to testify in relation to castor beans, as has been done by the committee in so many other matters, and I think that even now if he will lay the matter before the chairman of the committee the chairman will have a hearing upon that subject and the gentleman from Indiana can have castor beans ad libitum and possibly ad nauseam. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I fear the gentleman from Tennessee has taken the advantage of me, as I understand that he has been having his Christmas holidays since Christmas. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. I had supposed from the very elegant—I will not mention the reason—but I had supposed that the gentleman from Indiana had been having his Christmas for some time past.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman is right in that respect.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of Statistics: One statistician, who shall be chief of division, $3,000; one assistant statistician, $2,200; one clerk class 4, $1,800; three clerks class 3, $4,800; five clerks class 2, $7,000; five clerks class 1, $6,000; seven clerks at $1,000 each, $7,000; four clerks at $840 each, $3,360; in all, $35,160.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that paragraph. This provision, from line 18 to line 25, inclusive, appears for the first time in the bill. I am advised, however, by the chairman in charge of the bill that these employees were on the force last year in the office of the Secretary, and that this is simply a rearrangement of the force and not an increase.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the fact.

Mr. DOCKERY. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill to the fact that there is another head of "Experimental gardens and grounds" on page 12, and I suggest that the appropriations under this head ought to be concentrated under one heading.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will say to the gentleman that the appropriation on page 12 is the lump sum, while the other is the salary list only.

The Clerk read as follows:

Library: One librarian, $1,800; one assistant librarian, $1,400; one cataloguer, $1,200; one cataloguer, $1,000; one clerk, $840; one messenger, $720; in all, $6,960.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the point of order on that paragraph until I get some information in regard to it from the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it is now very near 5 o'clock, and I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill H. R. 9961 (the Agricultural appropriation bill), and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A bill (H. R. 7781) to grant an American register for the barge Black Diamond;

A bill (H. R. 8296) relating to mortgages in the Indian Territory;

A bill (H. R. 9710) to authorize officers who served during the war of the rebellion in the Regular Army to bear the title and, on occasions of ceremony, wear the uniform of their highest rank;

A bill (H. R. 130) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Augustus P. Burditt;

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 2,000 additional copies of the Annual Report of the Treasurer of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, for the use of the Treasury Department.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 2469) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to quitclaim and release unto Francis Hall and Juriah Hall and their heirs and assigns all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the east 20 feet front by the full depth of 100 feet of lot 2, in square 493, in the city of Washington, D. C., as laid down on the original plan or plat of said city—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RINAKER, for to-night, on account of sickness.

To Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut, for one day.

To Mr. VAN HORN, for to-night's session, on account of sickness.

To Mr. WILSON of New York, for three days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. HAINER of Nebraska, for the balance of the day.

To Mr. WATSON of Ohio, for to-night, on account of important business.

To Mr. TAFT, for the evening session, on account of important business.

To Mr. BROMWELL, for the evening session, on account of important business.

To Mr. FLETCHER, for one day, on account of illness.

To Mr. WHITE, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. NOONAN, for one day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. TAYLER, for this evening, on account of public business.

To Mr. BARTHOLDT, for three days, on account of important business.

The House then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE, by unanimous consent (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes), took a recess until 8 p. m.; the Speaker having designated Mr. LACEY to act as Speaker at the evening session.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. LACEY as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the rule under which the House meets this evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House shall, on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m., take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider business on the Private Calendar in accordance with the rule just read.

Mr. MEREDITH. If the gentleman will kindly withhold that motion for a moment, I should like to ask unanimous consent to take up a bill to which I think there will be no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall be willing to do that after the Committee of the Whole rises.

Mr. MEREDITH. The bill which I desire to bring up is a Senate bill which has been favorably reported upon in the House.

Mr. THOMAS. There is a great pressure to bring up bills by unanimous consent. I hope the gentleman will not urge this request at present, though I should very much like to accommodate him.

Mr. MEREDITH. I am obliged to my friend; and understanding his situation with respect to these matters, I withdraw my request for the present.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. THOMAS, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House (Mr. WELLINGTON in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the first bill in order.

SILAS M. STEVENS.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a Senate bill; but I do not wish to have the request put until I have made a statement. The bill which I desire to bring up was introduced by Senator GALLINGER, of New Hampshire, chairman of the Senate Committee on Pensions. It is a bill in which he has a very great interest; and he earnestly desires its passage. He has extended courtesies to perhaps every member on this floor; and I hope that, in view of the fact that this bill comes from the Senate Committee on Pensions with this request from its chairman, there will be no objection to its present consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will read.

The bill (S. 2331) granting an increase of pension to Silas M. Stevens was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Silas M. Stevens, late of the U. S. S. Lackawanna, and grant him a pension at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. ERDMAN. Pending the reading of the report, I reserve the right to object.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2331) granting an increase of pension to Silas M. Stevens, having carefully considered the facts in the case, respectfully report:

The claimant enlisted in the United States Navy October 19, 1862, and was discharged October 20, 1864, serving on the U. S. S. Lackawanna. He was wounded very severely at the battle of Mobile Bay, and was pensioned shortly after leaving the service for shell wound of head, of right side, shoulder and thigh, rheumatism, and resulting disease of heart. His pension was gradually increased to $30 per month, and on January 22, 1894, he made application for further increase, which was rejected.

The questions involved in this case are purely medical, there being scores of affidavits on file from reputable persons showing that claimant is confined to his bed most of the time, requiring the aid and attendance of another person. On that point there is no difference of opinion.

It is proper to say that at the time the rejection was made the claim was approved for the additional disability of disease of eyes, it being shown that iritis existed as a result of the rheumatic attacks for which claimant was in part pensioned.

February 20, 1894, one of his physicians certifies:

"At present the soldier is confined to his bed all the time, and has been more than three-fourths of the time during the last year, his disability being total and permanent."

March 13, 1894, another physician says:

"During the whole of my attendance he has needed constant assistance at the bedside, and has, in my best judgment, been confined to his bed at least seven-eighths of the time. In my opinion his disability is complete and permanent. From a history of claimant's case, and my knowledge of the man, I have no hesitancy in saying that his disabilities are the result of wounds and disease contracted while in the United States service and in strict line of duty."

A test examination was made by direction of the Pension Office, and the surgeon reports:

"This applicant has been confined to his bed a long time and is extremely weak and emaciated; think he is bedridden, and can't make much effort to move. * * *

"Applicant is wholly disabled for manual labor and requires frequent and periodical personal aid."

It appears that the claimant has six or more scars, from 2 to 3 inches in length, on different parts of his head and body caused by the bursting of a shell during the battle of Mobile, as before stated, and there is no doubt in the minds of your committee that his present helplessness is the result of his pensioned disabilities.

The bill passed the Senate in its present form, and we respectfully recommend its passage by the House.

There being no objection, the committee proceeded to the consideration of the bill, and the question being put, it was ordered to be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. In behalf of the chairman of the Senate Committee on Pensions, I thank the House for the action it has so kindly taken.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAHON. I desire to make a motion; and if the Committee of the Whole should vote it down, all right. I do not wish to consume very much time in my statement of the matter. I am in a position which enables me with propriety to make this proposition because its adoption will interfere with a bill of my own which would probably be reached to-night in regular order.

We have recently been passing a great many House bills granting pensions—I think somewhere in the neighborhood of 400 have passed. Now, the Senate has been very kind to the House, in passing our bills. Senator GALLINGER, whose bill has just been passed, has been, as the gentleman from Missouri has remarked, very courteous in these matters. When our bills are sent over there, they are taken up and passed; but when the Senate bills come here, they often remain a long time on the Calendar without being considered. Now, if we do not show some disposition to reciprocate in this matter and give due consideration to Senate bills, the chances are that House bills going over to the Senate may, as the session approaches its close, remain in the committee. I am in favor of extending proper courtesy to the Senate. I move, therefore, that this evening Senate bills alone be considered.

Mr. DANIELS. I object to that. I have been in attendance here every night, waiting for the consideration of bills in which I feel an interest. I see no reason why we should give any bill a special privilege.

Mr. MAHON. I am not asking a special privilege for any particular bill. I am proposing to consider this evening a certain class of bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] will please state his motion.

Mr. MAHON. It is that we consider this evening, in Committee of the Whole, Senate bills in their order upon the Calendar.

Mr. DANIELS. I object.

Mr. MAHON. The Committee of the Whole can control its own business.

Mr. BLUE. Before we vote upon this motion, I should like to know something as to the number of these bills upon our Calendar. I do not know any reason why we should give preference to Senate bills over House bills unless they are superior in merit. I hope the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not be adopted. It is a well-known fact that so far as the Senate is concerned, it can readily take care of all the bills that pass here. It is a smaller body than this; and its rules and practices are such that when a bill has passed this body there is never any difficulty under the rules in disposing of it there. The fact that they have passed some bills there in their way, and sent them here, does not necessarily require of the House to show that extreme courtesy of passing over their own bills and considering only those sent over from the Senate. And, Mr. Chairman, I not only oppose the motion at at this time, but shall insist upon it, and I do it not to be captious, but on principle.

I dislike very much indeed to oppose this motion, because I want to do what my friend from Pennsylvania, who offers the motion, desires; but it seems so manifestly unreasonable and at variance with the dignity of this body, that I must oppose it, and I trust the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not compel us to use extreme measures on this motion.

If anyone here has an extremely meritorious bill for some soldier, I am perfectly willing that it shall be taken up out of its regular order and considered; but I do oppose the adoption of this motion.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, by looking at the Calendar of unfinished business it will be found that the House has taken pretty good care of the Senate bills. I find fourteen Senate bills on the Calendar of unfinished business; and we passed probably an equal number through the House the last time the unfinished business was considered. I suggest, therefore, that the Senate is not suffering at the hands of the House at all.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I believe we have already adopted a rule upon this subject; at least if we have not adopted a rule, it is a practice that has been observed at almost every meeting during the Congress that when a House bill is reached, if there is a like Senate bill upon the Calendar, it can be substituted, and hence in that way we have taken care of nearly all of the Senate bills that come over. It seems to me that that is enough to concede. If we adopt the proposed rule, you will find that Senate bills will be coming over here steadily because they are easily gotten through the Senate under its rules, and you will have the pension business of the House blocked by the consideration of such measures.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Let me ask the gentleman if it is not true that the Senate bills sent over will go to the foot of the Calendar, and fail or die with the session? If we send bills over to the Senate they will fail too for the same reason, and hence we will get no pensions at all, while if we pass the Senate bills now which have already been adopted by that body, it would take care at least of that much of the pension business that comes into our hands.

Mr. McRAE. If a bill goes through the Senate you will generally find that there is a House bill on the same subject, and if we take up the Senate bill it will be almost equivalent to passing a House bill, because in nearly every instance these bills are introduced in both bodies at the same time, and in that way a large number of the House bills can be taken care of.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and the motion was rejected.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the motion that I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the roll be called in the usual order and each member, when his name is called, be permitted to call up one bill that is now on the Calendar and in order under the special rules for Friday night sessions, and which was introduced by him or one of the Senators from his State.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I raise the question of order on that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. EVANS. I do not think we can change the rule of the House on this subject in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. What rule of the House does it change?

Mr. EVANS. The rule of the House under which we are operating to-night, which says that the bills shall be taken up on the Calendar in their order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think so.

Mr. EVANS. Very well; I submit to the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, under an identical rule in the Fifty-third Congress we endeavored to proceed, and those whose names came early on the roll, those that were called, got their bills considered, and those whose names were lower down on the Calendar were left.

Mr. EVANS. And I observe that the gentleman who offered the resolution will come early on the list. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDREWS. I introduced the resolution for the purpose of giving each member an opportunity of getting his bill through the House, those who attend these Friday night meetings, and who make up the meetings, so that they may get through the business that they have attended to so faithfully.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. ANDREWS; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ERDMAN) there were—ayes 44, noes 23.

Mr. ERDMAN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count the committee.

The Chairman, having counted the committee, announced the presence of 101 members.

So the motion of Mr. ANDREWS was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

RACHEL WADDELL.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9683) granting a pension to Rachel Waddell, of Newport, Tenn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Rachel Waddell, daughter of John Waddell, sergeant in Capt. William Cherry's company, Fourth Virginia Regiment of Foot, commanded by Cols. Robert Lawson and Thomas Elliott, Revolutionary war, at the rate of $20 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension law.

The Committee on Pensions recommended an amendment as follows:

In line 8 strike out "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof "twelve."

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, let us have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the gentleman's time.

Mr. ERDMAN. Yes; and I reserve the balance of my time. I may want to say something.

The report (by Mr. LOUDENSLAGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9683) granting a pension to Rachel Waddell, have considered the same and report:

The claimant is the daughter of John Waddell, deceased, who is shown by the records of the War Department to have served as a sergeant in Capt. William Cherry's company, Fourth Virginia Regiment of Foot, commanded by Maj. Isaac Beall, and also commanded at different times by Cols. Robert Lawson and Thomas Elliott, Revolutionary war.

He was appointed June 10, 1776, to serve three years, and his name appears on the rolls for the period from April, 1777, to May, 1778.

The claimant, who is 70 years old, nearly totally blind, and dependent upon the charity of her friends for care and support, was never married. Her brothers and sisters are all dead.

The claimant's relationship to the soldier and all the facts relative to her physical and financial condition are fully attested under oath by old friends of the family who have known her for many years. One of the witnesses knew the soldier himself.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended with an amendment striking out the word "twenty," in line 8, and substituting therefor the word "twelve," so as to fix the rating at $12 per month.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, there was so much confusion in the Hall that no one has heard the reading of the report; at least, I could not hear it, and I should be glad if the gentleman in charge of the bill would make some explanation.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, this is the daughter of a Revolutionary soldier. She lives in my town, and I know her well. She is a very respectable old lady, 72 or 73 years of age, and almost totally blind. She has no means of subsistence whatever. She is now being supported by the charity of the town. This is a case of exceptional merit, and I trust that the bill will pass.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the rule that has just been adopted, I desire to say that heretofore I have prepared myself and looked over the cases, thirty or forty of them, each week, which would probably be reached at the Friday night session. I have collected the reports in each of the cases, in order that I might see what was in them and what was not in them, and what merit they possess. Under the rule that has been adopted it has become practically impossible for me to do anything at all. I want to give notice, therefore, that hereafter a quorum will have to be here before going into Committee of the Whole, and that if objections are made to requests for unanimous consent they will be made for the reason that I have no opportunity to examine these bills. I will place it purely on this ground.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE W. FERREE.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 10040) granting an increase of pension to George W. Ferree.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee ought to be in order and pay attention to these bills, so that there will be no necessity for a second reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. Members will please take their seats and cease conversation.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Ferree, late a private in Company E, Twenty-second, and first sergeant in Company E, Fifty-ninth, Regiments of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30 per month.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the report be read. It is brief.

The report (by Mr. ANDREWS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10040) granting an increase of pension to George W. Ferree, having considered the same, report as follows:

The soldier enlisted September 28, 1861, and was honorably discharged November 1, 1864. He is now pensioned at $12 per month "for gunshot wounds of left hand and forearm, and for vertigo, result of sunstroke."

It appears that one of his applications for increase, although finally rejected, was submitted for admission for the following reasons:

"Rheumatism, palpitation of heart, sunstroke, partial paralysis of right side, impaired hearing of right ear, impaired vision of right eye, headache (vertigo, result of sunstroke), prostration, and general debility."

Affidavits of reputable physicians and others show that the vertigo, resulting from sunstroke received while in the service and in line of duty, has developed into frequent and very severe attacks of true epilepsy; that he is totally unable to perform any manual labor, and that he frequently requires the aid of a physician, his family, and friends.

Your committee therefore urgently recommend the passage of said bill at $30 per month.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have something more to show why this soldier is entitled to $30 a month, an amount above that received by tens of thousands of others similarly situated. This is a very brief report, and it endeavors to conceal, instead of setting forth sufficient facts to entitle this soldier to receive a pension of this magnitude under principles of justice and equity. I think we ought to have something more than is contained in this report to justify us in giving this large pension.

Mr. ANDREWS. I have nothing to add beyond the statements in the report. The facts are fully stated in the report and sustained by the evidence.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I move that we rescind the resolution that was adopted on the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS] and return to the regular rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that such a motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. EVANS. If it is not in order to rescind it in Committee of the Whole, how was it in order to adopt it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is not in order to make this motion at this time. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. EVANS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that instead of proceeding as we now are doing that we call up the bills on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman submit his motion in writing?

Mr. COLSON. Mr. Chairman, we have adopted a rule here, and some have been benefited by its operation this evening.

Mr. MILES. Some never will be.

Mr. COLSON. Now, it is unfair for the other members of this committee to rescind this order. I ask my colleague to withdraw his motion.

Mr. EVANS. I will not do it for this reason: On two Friday evenings I have come here with a bill at the head of the Calendar in which I am interested. To-night I am compelled to leave, and can not stay until my name is called. With my bill ahead of all others on the Calendar, I shall lose the opportunity to have it considered under this rule, without any fault of mine, for I have always attended the Friday night sessions. Now I am cut off from reaching the bill which, under the regular rule, would be the first one.

Mr. COLSON. The gentleman's name comes very early in the list of members.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to the fact that the House very courteously allowed him to have unanimous consent a week ago to call up a bill, and I hope that he will not block legislation.

Mr. COLSON. And once this week.

Mr. EVANS. I am not blocking legislation; I am simply trying to prevent legislation from being blocked on me.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has also had unanimous consent once this week.

Mr. EVANS. I want to say that by the gentleman's courtesy this bill was laid aside, because on the call of the regular order on last Tuesday I was too sick to be here, and it is that bill I have specially attended for two Friday nights to get it acted upon first. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McRAE. The point of order, Mr. Chairman, is that the motion made by the gentleman from Kentucky is in effect a motion to reconsider a vote already passed by the committee, and that is not in order in Committee of the Whole. You can not reconsider in Committee of the Whole. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Allow me to make a suggestion which will bring quiet to my friend and everybody else. [Cries of "Regular order!"] That is that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] may have unanimous consent to call up his bill before he goes home.

Mr. WOODARD. I second that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will submit his motion in writing to the Chair.

Mr. EVANS. All I want this committee to understand is that I was at the head of the list to-night and that I am compelled to go away. I am the last man in this committee to attempt to block legislation. I was only entering a very humble, and I thought modest, protest against having business blocked on me under the circumstances. Now, that is the whole of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky submit his motion in writing? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. PARKER. I desire to make a further point of order. [Cries of "Call the roll!"] I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. COLSON. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Kentucky has not submitted his motion in writing.

Mr. PARKER. I desire to make the point of order that this committee can not set aside the order of the Calendar except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CROWTHER. That point of order has been ruled upon.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order for the gentleman to move to change the rule that the committee has adopted, and if the gentleman will put his motion in writing it will be submitted.

Mr. TALBERT. To obviate all difficulty, I ask unanimous consent that the bill of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] be allowed to come up, and then we can get rid of it and let him go home.

Several MEMBERS. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask unanimous consent that the bill of the gentleman from Kentucky be considered, and then we will get rid of it and go on our way rejoicing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the bill referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky be considered now.

Several MEMBERS. I object.

Mr. MILNES. As the gentleman has had recognition in the last two weeks, I object.

Mr. TALBERT. It is too late. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, does not the objection come too late?

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the Clerk will call the roll.

WILLIAM N. WELLS.

Mr. ATWOOD (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6268) to increase the pension of William N. Wells.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and regulations of the general pension laws, the name of William N. Wells, late acting master, United States Navy, at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension now paid him.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I call——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ATWOOD. The report is very short, and I ask that it be read.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6218) granting increase of pension to William N. Wells, having considered the facts presented, respectfully report as follows:

William N. Wells was appointed acting master of the United States Navy September 19, 1861, and faithfully served as such until October 26, 1865, when honorably discharged.

He filed an application for pension April 27, 1891, under act July 14, 1862, alleging that on April 18, 1864, during the engagement between the Miami and the rebel ram Albemarle, he was injured, receiving a right inguinal hernia, a scrotal hernia, injury to testicles and right thigh, causing varicose veins and loss of muscular power; also contracted malarial poisoning in service.

His claim was admitted October 31, 1895, for "malarial poisoning," at $5 per month from April 27, 1891; at $6 from March 21, 1895, and at $10 from August 5, 1895. The claim for other disabilities was rejected on ground of insufficient proof of origin in service, after special examination.

Several witnesses testified to claimant's falling down the hatchway of the vessel during the engagement referred to and incurring alleged rupture and other severe injuries; but on cross-examination by special examiner they admitted that they could not specify the particular injuries received, as they did not examine the parts injured.

The affidavit of Dennis Harrington, an officer of the vessel Miami, filed with the committee, says:

"That about 3 a. m., while engaged fighting the ironclad Confederate ram Albemarle, April 19, 1864, near Plymouth, N. C., William N. Wells received a severe injury in right side of his body (leg, hip, loin, and arm) by being thrown and falling down across the hatch combing by the companionway stairs, slipping outward, then down upon the lower deck and hatch combing of lower deck hatchway aft. It was a fall that seriously crippled him. I, being a commissioned officer of the same ship, was near him at the time of the incurrence of the injury, having charge of the fire-hose division. Claimant was senior officer of the ship and in command, Commander Flusser having been killed."

E. F. Hilferty also files affidavit of being an eyewitness to the occurrence.

The Boston (Mass.) board of surgeons rated claimant August 5, 1895, ten-eighteenths for malarial poisoning, six-eighteenths for disease of heart, four-eighteenths for varicose veins, four-eighteenths for hernia, right side, ten-eighteenths for scrotal hernia, and two-eighteenths for varicocele, and say: "in our opinion, entitled to full pension of his rank, $30;" and the same board, in certificate of examination of September 18, 1895, say: "He is permanently incapacitated for manual labor, by reason of malarial poisoning, heart disease, right inguinal and ventral hernia, left varicocele, and varicose veins."

In view of the difficulty of accurately establishing disabilities of this character by the usual proofs, your committee believe the claimant should be given the benefit of doubt, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following motion. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That bills be considered in the following order: The Clerk to call the first bill on the Calendar, announce the number of it, the Calendar number, and the name of the member who introduced it; and upon his failure to respond "Present," the bill to be passed without prejudice, and the next bill be called in the same way. This not to apply to Senate bills.

[Cries of "Withdraw it!"]

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to the members of the committee——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I desire to say that this is a very equitable and just disposition to make.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, a question of order.

Mr. MILES. I rise to a question of order. There is so much disorder that we can not hear. I desire to give notice that if there can not be order nothing shall be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is made, and well made, that the committee is not in order. Gentlemen will please take their seats.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that this is an equitable way for the Committee of the Whole to proceed in the consideration of bills on the Calendar. It takes them up in their regular order, and gives to those present a chance for the consideration of their bills on the Calendar, and it does not present that unfair proposition which is presented by the call of the roll method, whereby a member well up in alphabetical order on the list, although he may have a bill only third or fourth on the Calendar, is enabled to call up a bill which is at the foot of the Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GIBSON. I insist that the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey is not in order.

Mr. PITNEY. The point comes too late, Mr. Chairman. Debate has intervened.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I should be glad to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is too late with his point of order, and the gentleman from New Jersey will proceed with his statement.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I was saying, Mr. Chairman, that the plan proposed in my resolution is much more fair and equitable than that under which we are working. The present plan gives a member whose name happens to be well up on the list the privilege of calling up a bill which may be No. 1400 or No. 1500 on the Calendar, while at the same time he may have a bill that is third or fourth on the Calendar. I insist, sir, that in the interest of the old soldier and of legislation in his behalf the Committee of the Whole ought to adopt this rule.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The question being taken on the resolution offered by Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER and Mr. MILES asked for a division.

Several members again addressed the Chair, amid much confusion.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILES. I have several times addressed the Chair, and, although my voice is, perhaps, as loud as that of any gentleman in this Hall, I have been unable to attract his attention.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that he did not see him nor hear him, but the Chair is now prepared to hear the gentleman upon his point of personal privilege.

Mr. MILES. My point was that I was entitled to be heard. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman from Maryland has been heard. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILES. I called for a division on the last question, and if it is not too late, I ask for a division now.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 74.

Mr. MILES. I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused, and the resolution of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will continue the call of the roll.

MRS. LAURA A. NELSON.

Mr. AVERY (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (S. 2126) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Laura A. Nelson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $25 per month, the name of Laura A. Nelson, widow of the late Capt. Theodore Nelson, Company E, Twenty-sixth Michigan Infantry.

Mr. MILES. Let the report be read.

The report by (Mr. THOMAS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2126) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Laura A. Nelson, having considered the same, refer to Senate Report No. 1048 for a statement of the facts and evidence in the case, and recommend the passage of the bill after being amended as follows:

Strike out the words "of the," following the name "Nelson," in line 6, and insert in lieu thereof the words "Company E."

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, let me ask what is the number of that bill on the House Calendar?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that it is No. 1503 on the House Calendar.

Mr. ERDMAN. Has this bill ever been considered by the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently so, as the report has just been read.

Mr. ERDMAN. The report handed to me is the Senate report, not a House report.

Mr. AVERY. The House report is here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House report is in the hands of the Clerk.

Mr. ERDMAN. I have a word to say about this bill, Mr. Chairman. It seems that the Commissioner of Pensions and the medical authorities found that the cancer of the stomach was not the result of the nasal catarrh. It seems to me that it would require very deep medical learning to determine that fact, and yet this House proposes to set itself up in this matter and say that the cancer of the stomach was the result of the nasal catarrh, and that the nasal catarrh was the result of service in the Army, and was therefore indirectly a disability contracted in the service.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Invalid Pensions is in the habit of overruling all the decisions of the medical bureau and of the Pension Bureau for the last fifteen or twenty years, irrespective of the political character of the administrations that may have been in control. All that is necessary is for some member to appear here and press a claim and present one or two examinations of the pension board which are favorable, and the bill is passed. I have given some little attention to this kind of legislation, and I desire to illustrate it by a case that I investigated recently. To that end, I will ask the Clerk to read, in my time, a report made by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and I will follow that up with the true report of the case. I ask the Clerk to commence reading where I have made a pencil mark.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8451) granting an increase of pension to Samuel McConaughey, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The soldier enlisted August 22, 1861, and was honorably discharged June 17, 1865. The soldier's captain, F. S. Whiting, says:

"He (Samuel McConaughey) was a good soldier, of good habits, and a straightforward man."

Said soldier was pensioned under the general law at $8 per month, from February 8, 1890, for "disease of eyes and slight deafness of both ears," and at $12 per month under the law of June 27, 1890, from July 20, 1890. He is now 75 years of age, totally blind, poor, and permanently helpless, requiring constant attendance.

His application for increase of pension under the general law was rejected March 26, 1896, on the alleged ground that "alleged total loss of vision is due to senility and its results."

If the soldier's conceded blindness is due to his army service, he is entitled to $72 per month.

The allowance of his claim under the general law concedes that "disease of eyes" was of service origin. The evidence on file shows that said "disease of eyes" was permanent, progressive, and resulted in total blindness.

His captain, F. S. Whiting, testifies that the soldier's eyes became affected at Helena, Ark.; that they were treated by the regimental surgeon during the months of January, February, and March, 1863; that his eyes remained weak during the balance of his service, and that on a subsequent raid he wore a handkerchief to shield his eyes.

It is shown that his eyes were sound when he entered the service.

His brother, Thomas McConaughey, who was the soldier's bunkmate, testifies that the soldier's eyes became sore in the service, that they grew worse, and that total blindness ensued.

William Scott, a neighbor both before and after the war, and who knew him well, swears he was strong, robust, healthy, and free from disability at enlistment, but that on his return, and until 1870, he was "troubled with weak and inflamed eyes and was frequently disabled from work. * * * Can not name the specific disease, except weak and inflamed eyes."

Early in the seventies the soldier removed to Nebraska. The testimony is ample that his eyes continued to fail until about four years ago, when total blindness ensued.

J. H. Hines, special examiner, who was charged with the investigation of continuance of disease of eyes, reports, after examining numerous witnesses:

"While not particularly biased (the witnesses) in any way, yet the awful affliction of claimant could not but tinge their feelings with sympathy. The testimony clearly shows continuance of disease of eyes since 1871."

Mr. ERDMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, to show how utterly deceptive that report is, I desire to have read a correct and true report prepared from evidence in the Pension Bureau.

The Clerk read as follows:

Samuel McConnaughty, late private Company M, Fourth Iowa [illegible] Cavalry, applied for pension under general law for disease of eyes. His declaration was filed February 8, 1890. He alleged that his "eyes became sore and inflamed and grew weak; and disease has become permanent. Claims pension on disease of eyes."

Capt. F. S. Whiting, of Company M, testifies that "during the months of January, February, and March, 1863, while in camp at Helena, Ark., Private McConnaughty was treated for sore eyes by Assistant Surgeon Dr. Robinson." He further says: "I have an impression that he had weak eyes during the balance of his term of service."

His brother, Thomas H. McConnaughty, testifies that his eyes were inflamed in 1864, and thinks he was suffering some weeks with his eyes; that "he recovered," and "had no more trouble with them in the service."

Henry Shreiver, a comrade, testifies that "the lids of his eyes looked inflamed."

Samuel V. Turner, a comrade, says "his eyes looked inflamed." (See report Special Examiner N. C. Phillips.)

The evidence of Dr. F. J. Greer shows that at the time of his first acquaintance with soldier in the fall of 1863, the claimant had "sore eyes;" that they were "much inflamed"—severe conjunctivitis—and not until between 1890 and 1894 did cataract affect vision. Claimant testifies that the right eye became blind from cataract about 1888, and was operated on by Dr. Allen, oculist, Omaha, Nebr., in 1892, and that he "did not lose the sight entirely of the left eye till the fall of 1893." The first medical examination was had September 10, 1890, which showed "complete opacity of lens of right eye and almost complete opacity of lens of left eye; vision, 3-50." "Eyeballs are congested and inflamed; lids very much inflamed, with tendency to granulations; lower lids thickened." Age of claimant, 69 years. The examination of March 14, 1894, gives age of claimant 72 years, and shows "complete opacity of cornea of right eye; lens has been extracted by an operation, and vision entirely gone." "There is no vision of left eye, as the result of cataract; opacity complete. The lids, both eyes, are inflamed, granulated, and very much thickened in lower lids; eyeballs somewhat inflamed. There is total blindness both eyes. Left eye has not been operated upon."

Examination December 18, 1895, shows the same condition of each eye.

On February 28, 1896, he was examined by an expert oculist, Dr. W. L. Dayton, Lincoln, Nebr., who says that there exists "slight ectropion of lower lids, both eyes, has both canaliculi slit up, has probably had stricture of nasal duct. Palpebral conjunctiva atrophied, cicatricial. Cornea both eyes clear. In left has had a large iridectomy done in upper segment. Right iris drawn up so there remains a total occlusion of pupil. This condition resulted from inflammation following extraction of cataract. Left lens cataractous, over mature, senile, good light perception, but no shadows." "Right lens, not able to see, owing to occlusion of pupil, absolutely no vision either eye."

He was granted a pension of $8 on June 8, 1895, to date from February 8, 1890, the date of filing claim, for disease of eyes, senile cataract excluded. This included the condition of the superficial structures, the sore eyes, inflamed lids and eyeballs, of service, the chronic conjunctivitis. It is neither claimed nor shown that soldier had any disease of the deeper structures while in service nor since discharge, until about 1888, when he first noticed that his vision was becoming impaired, and which he soon learned was due to a cataract forming in the right eye, to be followed by one in the left eye. Cataract is, as a rule, a disease of old age. It is never due to any disease of the superficial structures of the eye. There is nothing whatever but advanced age to account for the cataracts in this case, and they are characteristic of senile opacity of the lens.

The rate, as allowed, was fully commensurate with the degree of disability from pensioned cause, and the disability from senile cataracts was properly excluded.

DISEASE OF EYES.

[Fuch's (1893), page 381.]

"Opacity of the lens, called cataract, may be situated in the lens itself or in the capsule."

1. Congenital cataract is caused by "either a disturbance of development or an intranterine inflammation of the eye."

2. Senile cataract is by far the most frequent form of cataract.

"Indeed, it occurs very frequently in old people. * * *

"It usually does not make its appearance until after the fiftieth year of life, but is exceptionally observed in the years between 40 and 50."

Senile cataract always affects both eyes, but rarely at the same time, so that generally one eye is in advance of the other in respect to the development of its cataract.

Besides the congenital and senile, two other varieties of cataract are recognized—the traumatic and acquired.

The "traumatic cataract results from injury to the lens, either by the actual contact of the foreign body or by rupture of the capsule." (Fox & Gould, Philadelphia.)

All injuries which make an opening in the lens capsule result in opacity of the lens.

The opening of the capsule usually occurs through direct injury inflicted by means of a punctured or incised wound. Contusion of the eyeball also may cause opacity of the lens. (Fuchs, page 382.)

Acquired cataract—Occurring as result of other diseases.

Diabetic—Most frequent, mainly developed when the amount of sugar in the urine is nigh, and matures rapidly.

Disease of deeper structures of eye, in the posterior sections, such as choroiditis (particularly iridor choroiditis chronica), myopia of high degree, retinitis pigmentosa, detached retina, glaucoma. (Fuchs.)

Not from any inflammation of the superficial structures, such as inflammation of lids or mucous membrane of ball, conjunctivitis, commonly called "sore eyes."

Mr. ERDMAN. Now, sir, from a comparison of those reports it would appear that the medical authorities at the Pension Bureau know a little more about medicine than the Invalid Pensions Committee, and that the House would be very much safer in following the judgment of the medical authorities in the Pension Bureau than that of a committee of this House or the testimony of outsiders offered before the committee indiscriminately.

I cite that as an instance of the recklessness with which we overrule the Pension Bureau on technical questions. Whether the case under consideration now is a similar case or not, I can not tell. Under the rule in accordance with which business is now progressing, I have not had an opportunity to inform myself on that point. It may be that this is a meritorious case; or it may be entirely without merit. I shall try in future to inform myself on the cases that will come up for consideration on Friday nights, if they come up at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments proposed by the committee.

Mr. AVERY. Mr. Chairman, I merely desire to state to this committee that the reports which have been read in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania are not reports made in the case now under consideration at all. The report first read is the report upon this case. The physicians whose testimony is there cited are among the most eminent in the profession in the United States. Professor Vaughn is known everywhere where medical science is known or taught throughout the country. With this statement, and with the assurance to the House that this is a meritorious case, I ask a vote upon it.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I have only one thing to say about this bill and the report, and it is that I do not know anything about it. I do not believe there are half a dozen members present who do know anything about it. That is the difficulty I have about this bill. I wish to say in all candor that I have been trying to-night to do the very best I could to obstruct legislation. I have done so for the first time since I have been a member of this House. I have tried to do it in the interest of the public; I have tried to do it conscientiously. I do not believe that it is our duty as members of Congress to sit here and vote in this irregular way upon legislation about which, because of the rule of proceeding which has been adopted to-night, it is simply impossible for us to know anything.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER] offered a while ago a very sensible resolution. Under that resolution, which was analogous to the regular rule of the House giving preference to members who are present over those who are absent, it would have been possible for us who have no special bills in which we are particularly interested to understand upon what we are voting. That resolution, however, which was so much more reasonable than the one under which we are now acting, did not meet the favor of the Committee of the Whole. Gentlemen here seem to think that members who have no bills to submit have no rights here; that Representatives who have no pension legislation to ask for are not entitled even to have an opportunity to understand and vote intelligently upon the measures coming before the House.

This is all I desire to say, Mr. Chairman. I wish I were more loquacious; I wish I could talk here about nothing for an hour; I should be very glad to do so, if thereby I could obstruct legislation and prevent this Committee of the Whole from passing bills about which I do not believe any member here knows enough to vote intelligently.

The question being taken, the amendments of the committee were agreed to.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is not in order. The question is upon laying aside the bill as amended to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Chairman, as the House seems to have gotten into a little snarl, I should like to make an attempt to pour oil upon the troubled waters. I ask unanimous consent to take up a bill——

Several members called for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

MICHAEL LOCHARD.

Mr. BAKER of Kansas (when his name was called). I call up the bill (H. R. 7627) granting an increase of pension to Michael Lochard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Michael Lochard, late a private in Company H, Third Regiment Ohio Cavalry, at the rate of $12 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, we possibly might hear the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to hear the report. The Clerk will read it.

Mr. ERDMAN. And I reserve the balance of my time.

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7627) granting a pension of $12 per month to Michael Lochard, late private in Company H, Third Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, having examined and considered the facts presented, respectfully report:

Michael Lochard enlisted August 20, 1861, and was honorably discharged October 3, 1864.

He filed a claim for pension April 13, 1888, alleging measles in service, resulting in disease of lungs and heart, and an injury to back. His claim was admitted January 9, 1891, at $4 per month from April 13, 1888, for disease of lungs.

The board of examining surgeons at Osborne, Kans., March 1, 1890, rated him four-eighteenths for disease of lungs and four-eighteenths for lumbago, which diseases were fairly established by proof as due to army service.

He filed claim April 13, 1892, under act of June 27, 1890, for disease of lungs, disease of heart, sciatica, and general debility. This claim was rejected March 2, 1894, on the ground of "no ratable disability shown under act of June 27, 1890."

The board of examining surgeons at Stockton, Kans., December 2, 1891, rated him four-eighteenths for disease of lungs, six-eighteenths for disease of heart, and four-eighteenths for rheumatism and lumbago.

Two other boards examined him since, and find disease of lungs, disease of heart, and rheumatism or lumbago; and the last one finds chronic bronchial catarrh, and rheumatism affecting arms, shoulders, hips, back, and legs, and chronic diarrhea, but, under instructions, give no rating, but leave the impression that this man was rated too low.

Other testimony filed clearly shows this man suffers much from the disabilities alleged, and the committee unhesitatingly recommend the passage of the bill without amendment.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, of course, from the brief examination of the report that I have been able to make it is not possible to say whether there is any merit in this bill or not. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BAKER] who made the report says there is merit in it. I have not been able to examine it for myself. The gentleman from Kansas belongs to that element in the Invalid Pensions Committee that is very favorable to the granting of pensions to all those who ask to be pensioned. Latterly I think he has become a little more conservative, but whether this report was made in his former or later condition I do not know.

Now, in casting around for the objects of the bounty of the Government we have exhausted pretty nearly all of the fields; but I have observed that in the Senate, in a bill numbered 1978, another class or category of people is found who are to be pensioners upon the Government's bounty, if that bill can be enacted into a law. I will read this remarkable bill, and I have no doubt that we are coming to it.

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons released from involuntary servitude, commonly called slaves, in pursuance of the proclamations of ex-President Abraham Lincoln, dated, respectively, September 22, 1862, and January 1, 1863, and in pursuance of amendments to the constitutions of the several States wherein slavery or involuntary servitude formerly existed, recognized by the Federal Constitution and laws of the United States, or by any law, proclamation, decree, or device whereby persons once held as slaves or involuntary subjects in consequence of race or color, or Federal or State recognition of involuntary servitude, except for the commission of crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall be, and hereby are, made pensioners upon the bounty of the United States, and also such persons as may be charged by laws of consanguinity with the maintenance and support of freedmen who are unable by reason of age or disease to maintain themselves.

SEC. 2. That any person who may have been held as a slave or involuntary servant under and by reason of any law of the United States, or of either of the States of the United States, or in consequence of any device or custom prevailing within such States or the United States, except for the commission of crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, and who shall have been released from such servitude in manner before stated, and who shall at the date of the passage of this act have reached the age of 70 years, shall be entitled to and receive the sum of $500 from the Treasury of the United States, hereby authorized to be paid out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, and to the sum of $15 per month during the residue of their natural lives. This provision shall apply to male and female freedmen alike; and all persons so released from servitude who shall be less than 70 years of age and of the age of 60 years or over shall be entitled to and receive the sum of $300 and also $12 per month until they shall reach the age of 70 years, when they shall be entitled to and receive the greater sum hereinbefore stated as a monthly payment; and all persons released from servitude as before stated who shall be less than 60 years old and of the age of 50 years or over shall be entitled to and receive the sum of $100 and also $8 per month until 60 years old, when they shall receive $12; and all persons released from servitude as before stated who shall be less than 50 years of age shall be entitled to receive $4 per month until 50 years old, when they shall receive $8; all moneys herein authorized to be paid shall be dispensed from the general funds of the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 3. That relations or others who may be charged with the support of aged or infirm persons released from involuntary servitude in manner aforesaid shall be entitled to and receive the monthly pension awarded to such aged or infirm persons in whole or in part upon showing, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, that such support is afforded in a humane and becoming manner, the amount of such payment being under the control and direction of the Secretary aforesaid.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior shall have power to prepare all needful rules and regulations for the carrying into effect of the provisions of this act according to the true intent and meaning thereof, and to designate proper officers or agents through whom freedmen and other persons may make application for payment and receive moneys authorized to be paid by the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. That all needful rules and regulations for the carrying into effect of the provisions of this act shall be approved by Congress before the taking effect thereof.

SEC. 6. That the compensation of agents charged with the enforcement of this law shall be recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and approved by Congress.

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1891.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these people are as much entitled to pension as many of those we are putting on the rolls at the present time. The freedmen would be, in my judgment, as much entitled to pension as a gentleman who intended to go into the war, but never did. The ex-slave and the aged and infirm of that race are as much entitled to a pension as the servant girl and the "coffee cooler," to use the language of my distinguished friend from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT]—much more entitled.

Now, I say, extend the bounty of the Government to some such objects as these, and not so much of it to the bounty jumpers, the deserters, the coffee coolers, and the like.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I move that this bill be laid aside without prejudice, in order that those of us who have not had any opportunity of obtaining information about it may have a chance to look into its merits.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent——

Mr. MILES. No, sir; I make the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. That is out of order. You must have unanimous consent to do what you suggest.

Mr. MILES. Then I ask unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland that this bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. HOWE and others objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill with favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL C. TOWNE.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 146) granting an increase of pension to Samuel C. Towne.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel C. Towne, late of Company G, Eighth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. MILES. I move that this bill be laid aside——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire has the floor, and has requested the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 146, having carefully considered the same, respectfully report:

Claimant was a member of Company G, Eighth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, serving from July 26, 1862, to June 10, 1865. He was pensioned for chronic diarrhea, piles, and injury to back, first receiving $4 per month, which was subsequently increased to $10. His necessities were such that he took advantage of the act of June 27, 1890, and was granted a pension under that act at the rate of $12 per month, which amount he is now drawing.

The pensionable disabilities have continued, and in addition soldier is practically blind, requiring some one to care for him. He is also in destitute circumstances.

There is medical testimony on file to the effect that the blindness resulted from the injury to the back. That is possible, but the proof is not conclusive on that point.

Being now pensioned at the maximum rate under the act of June 27, 1890, no increase can be secured through the regular channel, and hence an appeal is made to Congress.

The bill passed the Senate February 19, 1896. After a careful examination of the evidence, your committee are unanimously of the opinion that the bill should pass, and so recommend.

Mr. MILES. I respectfully submit, Mr. Chairman, that the motion I made, and which I now renew, that this bill be laid aside so that we may have an opportunity to investigate it, is in order. I make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his motion.

Mr. MILES. That the bill be laid aside without prejudice, in order to have an opportunity to examine into it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent——

Mr. MILES. No; I make the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is out of order. He can not make a motion of that character.

Mr. MILES. Why can I not move that the bill be laid aside? I respectfully submit that the motion is in order, to lay the bill aside without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Maryland that in order that the bill should retain its place upon the Calendar there must be unanimous consent, and for the same reason there must be unanimous consent to displace it upon the Calendar.

The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the committee divided, on the demand of Mr. MILES.

The CHAIRMAN (having counted the affirmative). Ninety-one members have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. MILES. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not make that point of order, because the vote has not been announced; he does not know whether there is a quorum or not. [Applause.]

The Chair sees one in the negative.

Mr. BARRETT. The Chair, I trust, will count gentlemen present and not voting.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon this question the yeas are 91, nays 1. The Chair will proceed to count the committee.

Mr. HOWE. No point of a quorum has been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The point not being made, the ayes have it, and the bill is laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MILES. I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is too late, and the Clerk will continue the call of the roll.

MARY O. H. STONEMAN.

Mr. BARHAM. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (S. 205) granting a pension to Mary O. H. Stoneman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary O. H. Stoneman, widow of the late George Stoneman, a major-general of the United States Volunteers in the late war for the Union, and pay her a pension from the passage of this act at the rate of $75 per month, in lieu of any other pension.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 9 strike out "seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof "thirty."

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, let us have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN] asks that the report be read. The Clerk will read it in his time.

The report (by Mr. ANDREWS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 205) granting a pension of $75 per month to Mary O. H. Stoneman, widow of Maj. Gen. George H. Stoneman, having considered the same, respectfully report:

George H. Stoneman graduated from the United States Military Academy and was appointed second lieutenant of First Dragoons July 1, 1846; promoted through the various grades, and was commissioned colonel "for gallant and meritorious services at the battle of Fredericksburg, Va.;" appointed brigadier-general "for gallant and meritorious services in the capture of Charlotte, N. C.," and major-general March 13, 1865, "for gallant and meritorious services in the field during the war." He was appointed colonel of infantry February 9, 1891; retired February 24, 1891, and died September 5, 1894.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "seventy-five," in line 9, and substituting the word "thirty" therefor, and that as amended the bill do pass.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BENJAMIN L. NOLAN.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 3745) granting a pension to Benjamin L. Nolan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Benjamin L. Nolan, late of Company E, Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry, a pension at the rate of $—— a month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 4, after the word "directed," strike out the balance of the bill and substitute therefor the following: "to place upon the pension roll, subject otherwise to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Benjamin L. Nolan, late a private in Company D, Eighth Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and Troop G, Third United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $12 per month."

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, let us have the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN] requests that the report be read. The Clerk will read it in his time.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3745) granting a pension to Benjamin L. Nolan, having carefully considered the facts in the case, respectfully report:

Claimant served in Company D, Eighth Massachusetts Infantry, from September 11, 1862, to August 7, 1863; in Company A, Seventeenth Massachusetts Infantry, from January 14, 1864, to July 11, 1865; in Troop E, Fourth United States Cavalry, from November 11, 1865, to November 11, 1868; and in Troop G, Third United States Cavalry, from August 9, 1870, to August 9, 1875.

He filed an application under the general law, alleging disability resulting from a cut on the left hip. This claim was rejected May 4, 1893, on the ground that the wound was not incurred while in the line of duty.

The soldier also applied under the act of June 27, 1890, but was twice rejected on the ground of no ratable degree of disability.

The medical board which examined him last, October 6, 1895, gives the following rating: Wound of left hip, six-eighteenths; lumbago, four-eighteenths; eczema, eight-eighteenths; rheumatism, four-eighteenths; in all, twenty-two eighteenths. No vicious habits.

Your committee believe that the claimant is justly entitled to $12 per month under the act of June 27, 1890, and therefore respectfully recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

In line 4, after the word "directed," strike out the balance of the bill and substitute therefor the following: "to place upon the pension roll, subject otherwise to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Benjamin L. Nolan, late a private in Company D, Eighth Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and Troop G, Third United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $12 per month."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ABNER ABERCROMBIE.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 4076) for the relief of Abner Abercrombie.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Abner Abercrombie, of Monroe County, Ga., late a private in Captain Asheot's Company of Alabama Volunteers in the Indian war of 1836, at the rate of $12 per month.

The Committee on Pensions recommended an amendment, as follows:

Strike out the word "twelve," in line 9, and substitute therefor the word "eight;" so as to fix the rate of pension at $8 per month.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN] calls for the reading of the report. The Clerk has it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman calls for the reading of the report. The Clerk will read it in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN].

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. He may read it in my time.

The report (by Mr. BLACK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4076) entitled "A bill for the relief of Abner Abercrombie," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass with an amendment.

The muster roll of Capt. M. T. Ashurst's company of Alabama Volunteers reports the claimant enrolled May 11, 1836, at Mount Meigs, and discharged June 7, 1836, at Montgomery, Ala. The records show further that the company was ordered into the service by Governor C. C. Clay, and marched from Montgomery May 11, and were on duty in the Creek Nation until June 7, 1836, when they returned to Montgomery and were discharged. Mr. Abercrombie filed an application at the Pension Office under the Indian war act of July 27, 1892, but the same was rejected on the ground that his service was two days short of the time required by that act.

There seems, however, to be some question as to the correctness of this action in the light of the fact that the twenty-eight days expired while he was still in the Creek Nation, and it was not until after that that he was discharged at Montgomery, Ala.

The testimony of W. A. Worsham and W. C. Cleveland, citizens of Monroe County, Ga., shows that the claimant is about 78 years old, in feeble health, and entirely unable to do anything by which to earn a support for himself and his aged wife.

A similar bill was reported by your committee in the Fifty-third Congress, and passed the House, but failed in the Senate from lack of time to consider it before adjournment.

The following amendment is recommended:

Strike out the word "twelve," in line 9, and substitute therefor the word "eight;" so as to fix the rate of pension at $8 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to correct a clerical error in the printed bill. The word "Asheot," in line 7, should be "Ashurst," and I ask that that correction be made.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the correction will be made as indicated by the gentleman.

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PATRICK CLABBY.

Mr. BELKNAP. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 5499) for the relief of Patrick Clabby.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now on the records of the War Department against Patrick Clabby, late a private of Company I, Fifth Regiment Infantry, New York Volunteers, and grant him an honorable discharge.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. TRACEY) was read, as follows:

Your committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5499) to grant an honorable discharge to Patrick Clabby, late a private of Company I of the Fifth Regiment of New York Infantry Volunteers, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report as follows:

Patrick Clabby was mustered into service as a private of Company I of the Fifth Regiment of New York Infantry on the 28th day of March, 1865, to serve one year. He rendered faithful service until July 31, 1865, when he is charged with desertion.

The testimony appears to show conclusively that claimant took sick and was given a pass on a United States transporting vessel to New York July 31; that he was absent at Glencoe Island about two weeks, until he was able to return, and that he did return to Harts Island, where he left his command, and found that his company and regiment had been mustered out of service.

Your committee therefore report the bill favorably and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is a bill that should not be passed by the committee to-night. I am sorry that it has been brought up. It seems to me that there are other bills and more meritorious bills which might have been brought up to-night. I do not think this bill comes properly before the committee, anyway. As I understand it, this claimant has slept over his rights. I do not know anything about it, and have not learned anything from the short report. It may be that the gentleman advocating the bill has some further information, and may be able to say something which will satisfy me that it is a meritorious bill. But, as I understand the matter, he was not absent from his command after having been wounded or having been sick.

Mr. BELKNAP. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. TALBERT. I believe he did claim to have been sick, but it seems you have no evidence of that fact except the statement of the man himself.

As I understand it, several bills have been passed which allowed deserters to come in and have the charge of desertion removed. The first step in that direction, I believe, was a proclamation in 1862. A great many availed themselves of that proclamation of Mr. Lincoln. Then it seems to me there was an act passed in March, 1882, allowing those who had the charge of desertion standing against them to come in and file certain evidence before the War Department which, if satisfactory, gave the claimants an honorable discharge and allowed them, if otherwise entitled, to be placed upon the pension roll. But the law says that those who did not avail themselves of this opportunity within five years after the passage of the act should be forever barred. That act, I believe, was passed in 1882.

Then, again, in 1884 there was another act passed, opening the doors again and allowing all these men against whom a charge of desertion had been made to come in and produce satisfactory evidence before the War Department and still again have the charge of desertion removed. A great many availed themselves of that opportunity. There was a proviso in that law that those who did not avail themselves within five years afterwards were to be forever barred, and so on. The last act that I can find upon the books was passed in 1889, again opening the doors to those men against whom the charge of desertion had been made, and providing that if they could produce satisfactory evidence they could have the charge of desertion against them removed. Many of them availed themselves of the law, which they ought to have done. It was right and proper. But there was a proviso put in that law that those who did not avail themselves of that legislation within three years were to be forever barred. A great many came in and availed themselves of that law, which they ought to have done.

Now the limit has passed; they are barred by the statute of limitation, and it is not right for members here or elsewhere to continue to bring in such bills as this, for the removal of the charge of desertion against men, when there are a number of others, patriotic and brave soldiers, whose cases could be brought up here and they could be given pensions. I hope this committee to-night will sit down upon measures for the removal of charge of desertion, and not let them get in the way and block legislation against honest soldiers and brave soldiers who ought to be pensioned and who will get their pensions if these bills are kept in the background.

These are my views, which I submit without any feeling and without any prejudice against this man who deserted. I know nothing of his case except what I have heard read from the desk; but I submit that these men have had the chance time and again to have the charge of desertion removed, and I think that the time ought to be and ought to come sooner or later, according to the law, when the door should be closed at last against men who deserted their flag, unless they can show satisfactory reasons why the charge should be removed; and it seems to me that this man has had sufficient time. He has now slept on his rights from, I believe, 1889 to 1892, and slept on his rights for five long years, and now he comes here and gets in the way of some honest soldier who ought to have a pension. This is blocking legislation. I submit, and I hope that this committee will see to it to-night that it will put its foot down on this character of legislation. You can do as you like. I have said what I think about the matter, and if you see proper to pass it, why I have nothing further to say. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TALBERT. I move that the committee report this bill to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the committee report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TALBERT. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 82.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask unanimous consent that it be passed without prejudice.

Mr. BELKNAP. I object.

Mr. TALBERT. I hope that request will be granted. This is the first time I have made such a request for some time in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I object.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LAURA C. DODGE.

Mr. BISHOP (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (S. 2347) for the relief of Laura C. Dodge.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, to increase the pension of Laura C. Dodge, dependent widow of the late Capt. Frederick Laighton Dodge, United States Army, from $30 to $40 per month, said increase to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, let us have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The report (by Mr. LOUDENSLAGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2347) entitled "A bill for the relief of Laura C. Dodge," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass, with an amendment fixing the rate of pension at $30 per month:

This is a bill enacting that the pension of Laura C. Dodge, widow of the late Capt. Frederick L. Dodge, be increased to $40 per month.

The bill is accompanied by Senate Report No. 455, this session. That report (except so much of same as recommends a rating of $40 per month) is adopted by your committee as their report.

[Senate Report No. 455, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2347) granting a pension for the relief of Laura C. Dodge, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant under this bill is the widow of Capt. Frederick L. Dodge, whose volunteer military service is as follows:

Statement of the military service of Frederick L. Dodge, late private, Forty-fourth Massachusetts Militia, and first lieutenant, Eighteenth New Hampshire Infantry Volunteers.

Frederick L. Dodge was enrolled at Boston, Mass., August 20, 1862, and mustered into service September 12, 1862, as a private, Company F, Forty-fourth Massachusetts Militia (Infantry), to serve nine months, and was mustered out of service with his company, as a private, June 18, 1863, at Readville, Mass.

He is reported present on the company muster rolls from date of muster in to date of muster out.

Frederick L. Dodge was mustered into service at Concord, N. H., March 22, 1865, as first lieutenant Company I, Eighteenth New Hampshire Infantry Volunteers, to serve one year, and was mustered out with his company as first lieutenant July 29, 1865, at DeLancy House, District of Columbia.

He is reported present on the muster rolls of his company from date of muster in to date of muster out.

F. C. AINSWORTH.
Colonel, United States Army, Chief Record and Pension Office.

War Department, January 5, 1895.

After retiring from the Volunteer Army soldier joined the Regular Army, his record in the Regular Army extending from 1867 to 1891.

The following report from the office of the Adjutant-General gives a detailed account of his services:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,

He was examined by a retiring board March 17, 1891, and the board found in his case as follows:

"That Capt. Frederick L. Dodge, Twenty-third Infantry, is incapacitated for active service by reason of Bright's disease of the kidneys; that the incapacity is permanent, and that it arose from causes incident to the service, viz. worry and overwork in the line of duty during the summer of 1890."

He died September 11, 1891, at Detroit, Mich.

J. C. GILMORE,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

After the war, in recognition of his services, he was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Regular Army, and was subsequently promoted to first lieutenant and captain.

He served in every part of the country, from New York to Oregon and Arizona, and endured the severest hardships of Indian warfare and frontier service. From time to time he filled nearly every position of responsibility and trust incident to his rank, until by overwork, long continued, he wrecked and ruined his health.

Mrs. Dodge shared the hardships and suffering of her husband in many of his campaigns. She is now a resident of Detroit, Mich., in very straitened circumstances, and appeals to Congress for relief. She is now receiving a pension of $20 per month, and asks that it be increased to $50.

In view of the long and distinguished services of Captain Dodge and the necessities of the widow, your committee recognize the case as one of special merit, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill, after being amended by striking out the word "fifty," in line 7, and substituting therefor the word "forty."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The question was taken on laying aside the bill as amended with a favorable recommendation; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MILES. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 0.

So the bill was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. LUCY ALEXANDER PAYNE.

Mr. BLACK (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (S. 1501) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lucy Alexander Payne, widow of Capt. J. Scott Payne, Fifth United States Cavalry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to put the name of Mrs. Lucy Alexander Payne, widow of Capt. J. Scott Payne, Fifth United States Cavalry, on the pension roll at $50 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. MILES. Let us have the report read, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from Maryland.

The report (by Mr. COFFIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1501) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lucy Alexander Payne, have considered the same and report:

The claimant in this case, Mrs. Lucy Alexander Payne, is the widow of Capt. J. Scott Payne, Fifth United States Cavalry, who graduated from the United States Military Academy and was appointed second lieutenant, Fifth Cavalry, June 18, 1866; promoted first lieutenant May 23, 1867; resigned September 12, 1868. Appointed second lieutenant, Sixth Cavalry, February 3, 1873, and first lieutenant September 8, 1874; promoted to captain June 4, 1875, and retired as of that rank April 24, 1880, on account of disability originating in the line of his duty.

Captain Payne's record is a very honorable one, and he rendered very brilliant and gallant service in the campaign against the Utes, especially in what is known as the Milk River fight, wherein the gallant Major Thornburgh lost his life. After the fall of Major Thornburgh the command devolved upon Captain Payne, who made a gallant and successful resistance against overwhelming numbers of Indians, bringing his command out of the dangerous position with great credit. He was particularly mentioned by his commanding officer for his conduct in this affair, and was recommended for promotion, which, for some reason, never came to him.

He was twice wounded during the fight referred to, and was a great sufferer before his death. His widow is now in feeble health, suffering from the strain brought on by her faithful attendance on her husband during his last illness. She is without means and dependent upon her pension for the support of herself and two minor children.

Captain Payne died December 19, 1895, from disease originating in the service, and his widow is now receiving the pension of $20 per month provided by the general law.

In view of the conspicuous and valuable service rendered to his country by the deceased officer, and in the light of the widow's invalid condition and pressing necessities, your committee recommend the passage of the bill, amended, however, by fixing the rate of pension at $30 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

AMANDA M. WAY.

Mr. BLUE (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 5898) granting a pension to Amanda M. Way, as army nurse.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. MILES. I have nothing to say now, Mr. Chairman. I thought I was recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland will observe that before he spoke the Chair had recognized the gentleman from Kansas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Amanda M. Way, of Los Angeles, Cal., on the pension roll as army nurse, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 a month from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let the report be read, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. KIRKPATRICK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5898) granting a pension to Amanda M. Way, having carefully considered the same, respectfully report:

This claimant asks a pension by Congressional legislation on the ground of having served as a volunteer army nurse for a period of six months during the war of the rebellion.

She applied for a pension August 2, 1893, alleging service at Nashville and Murfreesboro, Tenn., also on the steamer City Belle, hospital boat, on the Mississippi River, and at Mound City, Kans.

Her claim was rejected on the ground of insufficient proof of appointment by proper authority and requisite length of service.

She sets forth in her affidavit that she tendered her services to the late Governor Oliver P. Morton, of Indiana, and was assigned to duty in the hospitals of Tennessee, transportation and subsistence being furnished upon requisition.

James F. Hibberd, M. D., testifies that he was surgeon in charge of hospital corps at Murfreesboro, Tenn., and that he knows of his own knowledge that claimant rendered efficient services under his direction, and that she was appointed to this duty by Governor Morton. He further testifies that this service began in January, 1863.

John W. Botkin, M. D., testifies that he was surgeon in charge of hospital corps on hospital steamer City Belle in June and July, 1863, and that claimant rendered efficient service as army nurse under his direction.

John B. Routh, late regimental quartermaster Twenty-sixth Indiana Volunteers, testifies that of his personal knowledge claimant was called upon by the late Governor Morton to look after the sick and wounded on the battlefields. He particularly remembers her valuable services at Vicksburg. He also testifies that she spent most of her time during the war in nursing soldiers.

Hon. Jeff. Fleming of Mound City, Kans., testifies to claimant's valuable services among the wounded at the battle of Mine Creek, Kansas, and in the hospital at Mound City, Kans., in October, 1864.

Robert Fleming, esq., testifies to the same services, and particularly mentions her work among the sick and wounded at Mound City, Kans.

While it is true that no record of her services appears, and doubtless her appointment was somewhat informal, yet the fact that she performed the services of an army nurse for a period of six months and more is clearly established, and in equity places the Government under obligations to recognize the same.

Claimant is 68 years of age, poor, and needy.

In view of all the facts, your committee recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment striking out the word "twenty-five," in line 6, and inserting "twelve" in lieu thereof.

The amendment recommended in the last paragraph of the report was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MILES, the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

A MEMBER. A division!

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MILES] demands a division.

Mr. MILES. The Chair is overcourteous to me now. I have made no demand for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Maryland to demand a division, but is glad that he did not. The motion that the committee rise is lost.

CHARLES A. NAZRO.

Mr. BOWERS (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 6071) for the relief of Charles A. Nazro.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Charles A. Nazro, a lieutenant in Companies F and L of the Twenty-sixth Illinois Infantry Volunteers in the war of rebellion, at the rate of $72 per month.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. ANDREWS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6071) for the relief of Charles A. Nazro, report thereon as follows:

This officer served from August 29, 1861, to June 18, 1862, when he resigned on account of a wound causing entire loss of sight of one eye (left) and serious impairment of sight in the other. He is now pensioned at $17 per month for loss of left eye with deformity from pistol wound.

In addition to the entire loss of left eye, claimant has impairment of sight of right eye, which has been admitted by the medical officers of the Pension Bureau as a result of the loss of left eye. When the left eye was removed a piece of metal was found in the optic nerve which had been there since the wound was received, and which had been a constant source of nervous irritation, and caused serious impairment of his nervous system.

Besides the affection of eyes and practical loss of sight, he has rheumatism, which he swears he contracted in the service, and the evidence, which shows that he entered the service sound, and that he had a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism very soon after leaving the service, too soon, in fact, to have had its origin anywhere except in the service, proves his assertion. He is now totally disabled and so nearly blind that if he uses his one eye for any length of time for reading it becomes inflamed and he is obliged to stay in a darkened room.

At his medical examination in 1891 he was rated seventeen-eighteenths for loss of left eye, and first grade for rheumatism and resulting heart disease. On February 20, 1896, he was found totally disabled, a terrible sufferer from rheumatism, and unable to dress and undress himself without assistance. This committee are satisfied from the evidence that this officer's helpless and disabled condition is due to his army service, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

Before the word "lieutenant," in line 5, insert the word "first," and in same line strike out the words "in Companies F and L" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and quartermaster."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments recommended by the committee.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS] has personal knowledge of this case, and I should be glad to hear his statement.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, the beneficiary of this bill is a neighbor of mine in California, and I am personally acquainted with his condition and circumstances. His left eye was shot out, and a piece of metal, as stated in the report, affected the optic nerve so that he is to-day, or was two months ago, when I left home, totally blind, totally helpless, and has to be taken care of like an infant. He probably can not live more than a short time. He and his people are poor and the neighbors have to help to support him, and the case seems to me a proper one for favorable action by this committee. I state these facts from personal knowledge.

The amendments recommended by the committee were adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN J. CROSS.

Mr. BURRELL (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 2321) to increase the pension of John J. Cross.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of John J. Cross, late a member of Company H, Eighth Cavalry, Thirty-ninth Indiana Volunteers, from $8 to $35 per month, subject to the conditions and limitations of the Pension Bureau.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. WOOD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2321) to increase the pension of John J. Cross, submit the following report:

John J. Cross enlisted August 28, 1861, in Company H, Thirty-ninth Indiana Volunteers. This regiment reenlisted and became the Eighth Indiana Cavalry. The soldier was honorably discharged June 30, 1865. He was captured at the battle of Bentonville and was confined in Libby Prison until April 2, 1865, where, from unwholesome food and privation, he contracted chronic diarrhea and disease of rectum, for which he was pensioned at $4 from August 31, 1883, and $6 from March 20, 1890, which was increased to $8 from September 9, 1891. Application for increase has been rejected.

He was in sound health on enlistment. Since 1880 he has been a confirmed epileptic. He is now totally incapacitated for manual labor. His last medical examination, May 17, 1893, shows that he is entitled to a pension of second grade—$30 per month—for chronic diarrhea and epilepsy and hemorrhoids.

Two hundred and forty-nine citizens petition for the increase of his pension. There is no question but that he is totally incapacitated for manual labor. There is considerable evidence that his epilepsy results from diseases contracted in the service for which he is now pensioned.

The committee are unable to say from this evidence that the epilepsy is actually the result of diseases contracted in the service, but as the soldier is conclusively shown by the evidence to have been sound on enlistment we can find no other cause. As he honorably served three years and ten months, and is now helpless, we recommend that the bill be amended by inserting the word "private" in lieu of "member," in fifth line, and striking out the word "five," in sixth line, so as to increase his pension to $30 per month.

The amendments recommended in the last paragraph of the report were adopted.

Mr. BURRELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "Bureau," at the end of the bill, and insert "law;" so as to read, "pension law."

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I observe in the report that two hundred and odd citizens have petitioned for the granting of this pension, and that seems to be the chief reason why we are to grant the pension. Has it come to this, that instead of requiring the foundation for a pension to be laid, as is required in other cases, by sworn testimony, satisfactory testimony, we are going to abandon that rule and grant a pension upon the petition of a couple of hundred citizens? Let it go forth to the world that this Congress is willing to grant pensions upon the petition of citizens and not upon evidence, and we shall have plenty of that kind of work to do. I think it is a fair inference from this report that that is what we are asked to do in this case.

I should be glad to have had time to examine this report to ascertain whether there is any merit in this case, but there has been no time for that, and there is no opportunity under the peculiar system by which we are trying to rush bills through to-night. Gentlemen must therefore expect casual remarks and reflections upon these bills, and probably before they get through the House an opportunity may be presented to some gentlemen who have investigated these cases to look into them further.

The amendment of Mr. BURRELL was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANDREW J. MOLDER.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri (when his name was called). I call up the bill (H. R. 6757) granting a pension to Andrew J. Malder.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew J. Malder, late a private in Capt. John Miser's Company, Hempstead County Arkansas Militia, and to pay him a pension of $12 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," in lines 4 and 5, and strike out all the printed bill after the word "month," in line 8; also amend by substituting the name "Molder" instead of "Malder;" and amend the title so as to read as follows: "A bill granting a pension to Andrew J. Molder."

Mr. ERDMAN. I desire that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. CROWTHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6757) granting a pension to Andrew J. Molder, late private in Capt. John Miser's company, Hempstead County Arkansas Militia, having examined and considered the facts presented, respectfully report.

Claimant testifies that he enlisted in Capt. John Miser's company on or about November 1, 1863, and served until on or about April 1, 1864; that he was wounded in the left hip by gunshot in an action between Captain Miser's company and Capt. Buck Brown's guerrillas, near Pea Ridge, in Benton County, Ark., and that his company was at the time serving under orders of Col. Loren Harrison, of the First Arkansas Cavalry. The company was so depleted by killed and wounded in this action that it was never called into active service again.

Claimant's testimony is corroborated by J. S. Vansandt, who was a member of same company, and by J. H. Moore, who lived near Pea Ridge and who testifies to claimant being wounded near where he lived.

Dr. Joshua G. Morgan, of Barry County, Mo., testifies that claimant's disability is total from the gunshot wound of hip. The ball entered the lower part of hip and ranged upward, lodging in the groin, he having evidently been in a stooping position when the wound was received.

Applicant filed claim for pension March 18, 1892 (No. 1102632), which was rejected July 2, 1892, on the ground that claimant was not in the military service of the United States.

For many years the precedent has been followed of granting pensions to officers and soldiers of militia who received wounds or injuries in battle, it having always been regarded that a gunshot wound received in action was equivalent to muster in.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill, after being amended by striking out "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," in lines 4 and 5, and by striking out all the printed bill after the word "month," in line 8; also amend by substituting the name "Molder" instead of "Malder;" and amend the title so as to read as follows: "A bill granting a pension to Andrew J. Molder."

Mr. TALBERT. I do not know that I understood fully the facts from the reading of the report. It would seem that this man was never in the military service.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. He was a member of a militia company which was called into actual service. He was wounded in battle, but he has been prevented from obtaining a pension because of the fact that he was never mustered into the service of the United States. It has always been the rule, I believe, under such circumstances, for this House to grant a pension.

Mr. TALBERT. There is no record of his company having been mustered into the service?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. No record in the War Department, but there is plenty of outside testimony to that effect.

The amendments reported by the committee were adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MALACHI SALTERS.

Mr. CALDERHEAD (when his name was called). I call up the bill (H. R. 9319) granting a pension to Malachi Salters, a sergeant of Company F, Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place the name of Malachi Salters, late a sergeant of Company F, Ninth Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, upon the pension roll of the United States and grant him a pension of $72 a month.

Mr. TALBERT. Let us hear the report.

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9319) granting a pension to Malachi Salters, having carefully examined the papers in connection with the same, submit the following report:

Malachi Salters served in Company F, Ninth Illinois Cavalry, from October 7, 1861, to October 31, 1865, when he was discharged with the rank of sergeant. He also served in the war with Mexico. He is pensioned at $17 for rupture and rheumatism. The lieutenant commanding his company testifies that in the battle of Wyatt, Miss., his (claimant's) hearing was affected by the concussion of the cannon where he was stationed. He was sickly after that and was put on duty as company clerk, as he was not fit for any other duty. Five of his comrades testify to his deafness incurred at that time, and that he complained of injury to his eyes, and soon after that he had weak eyes, and that his eye trouble and impaired hearing continued until his discharge.

Upon examination by special agent of the Pension Bureau witnesses testify to his soundness prior to enlistment, and to existence of hernia and rheumatism, severe deafness, and injury to his sight on his return from the service. He has a bayonet wound received while in action. April 8, 1891, his examination rated him eight-eighteenths for hernia, twenty-two thirtieths for severe deafness, first grade for blindness, and ten-eighteenths for rheumatism.

One physician testifies that he found senile cataract of both eyes, and upon this the Pension Bureau rejects the blindness or disease of eyes, and notes that the blindness is due to age. Five witnesses testify to incurrence and continuance of deafness and disability of eyes from the time he received them in the service; yet the Pension Bureau rejects the deafness.

Claimant is 88 years old, and has been totally blind since 1890. His eyes are constantly inflamed; he is helpless with rheumatism. The testimony of three physicians shows that his present physical condition is such that he should have a constant attendant in addition to his wife. He occasionally has attacks which render him unconscious. His entire property has not been of more value than $100 at any time within the last ten years. He is dependent on the charity of the Grand Army of the Republic post of his town, Clay Center, Kans. In view of the testimony of one lieutenant and several comrades to the incurrence of the eye and ear trouble, and the fact that he has continued to suffer from these troubles and is now totally disabled therefrom, your committee consider this a meritorious case. We therefore recommend the passage of the bill as amended.

Amend by striking out the word "seventy-two," in line 7, and inserting the word "fifty" in place thereof.

Amend the title so as to read: "Granting a pension to Malachi Salters."

The amendments reported by the committee were read, and agreed to, as follows:

Strike out the word "seventy-two," in line 7, and insert the word "fifty" in place thereof.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Malachi Salters."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ANNA G. VALK.

Mr. COFFIN (when his name was called). I call up the bill (H. R. 7055) increasing the pension of Anna G. Valk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Anna G. Valk, widow of William W. Valk, late surgeon of the Fourth Maryland Volunteer Infantry, United States Volunteer Army, to the sum of $50 per month.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 insert the word "Volunteer" before the word "Infantry," and strike out the words "United States Volunteer Army."

In line 7 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

Mr. ERDMAN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MILES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, having considered the evidence relating to the bill (H. R. 7055) increasing the pension of Anna G. Valk, report:

William W. Valk served about four years and was honorably discharged as surgeon of the Fourth Maryland Volunteer Infantry. He never applied for pension. Had he even filed a claim his widow could have completed it and drawn the accrued pension from the date of his discharge, in 1865, to the date of his death, in 1879, as she has since established the fact that he died from disease of the lungs contracted in the service, and is now in receipt of a pension of $25 a month, total of rank of her husband as a surgeon. This is not enough to provide for her necessities, as she is now 61 years of age, and has dependent on her two young daughters. Her only income or means of support are her pension and the aid given by an older daughter.

The above facts are established by the evidence, and in view thereof it is believed that her pension should be increased, and to that end it is recommended that the bill pass, after being amended as follows:

In line 6 insert the word "Volunteer" before the word "Infantry," and strike out the words "United States Volunteer Army."

In line 7 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

NANCY ROBERTS.

Mr. COLSON (when his name was called). I call up the bill (H. R. 8633) granting a pension to Nancy Roberts, of Manchester, Clay County, Ky.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of Nancy Roberts, widow of Jesse Roberts, late a private in Company A, Forty-ninth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, on the pension roll at $20 per month.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying this bill aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. ERDMAN and Mr. MILES. Let us have the report.

The CHAIRMAN proceeded to put the question.

Mr. ERDMAN. The reading of the report was called for.

The CHAIRMAN. The point was not made in time.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM EDWARDS.

Mr. COOK of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I call up the bill (H. R. 7333) granting a pension to William Edwards, Company D, Tenth Regiment Vermont Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Edwards, of Company D, Tenth Vermont Volunteer Infantry.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

At the end of the bill add, "and pay him a pension of $12 per month."

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen who were so anxious to change the usual rule, and whose names do not happen to begin with A, B, or C, can at this time of the night, when it is within three or four minutes of the time when the committee must rise and the House adjourn, see that the prediction I made before we went into this system was correct. They must feel that they have been "bunkoed" by it, just as I told them in the beginning they would be. I presume that on next Friday night it will be perfectly fair to commence the call of the roll where we leave off to-night.

Several MEMBERS. Certainly.

Mr. ERDMAN. And I want to say that if you want to do that, you should try to have at least 178 members present in order to do it.

Mr. THOMAS. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. LACEY] having resumed the chair, Mr. WELLINGTON reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report with amendments and as so amended with favorable recommendation bills of the following numbers: House bills 9683, 3745, 4076, 5898, 6671, 2321, 6757, 9319, and 7055; and Senate bills of the following numbers: 2126, 205, 2347, 1501.

Also the following bills without amendments and with the recommendation that they do pass: House bills Nos. 10040, 6268, 7627, 5499, 8633; and Senate bills Nos. 2931 and 146.

Also that the committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7333) granting a pension to William Edwards, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WILLIAM EDWARDS.

Mr. COOK of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 7333) granting a pension to William Edwards, Company D, Tenth Regiment Vermont Volunteers, which was the unfinished business in the Committee of the Whole when the committee rose, be taken up and considered by the House at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

And then (the hour of 10 o'clock and 30 minutes having arrived) the Speaker pro tempore under the rule declared the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 30, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HENRY A. WEBB.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1256) for the relief of Henry A. Webb, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman interested in this bill what change is made by the Senate amendment from the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. BULL. The Senate amendment reduces the amount.

Mr. DOCKERY. The amount of what?

Mr. BULL. Reduces the amount that the House bill calls for by $650.

Mr. DOCKERY. The Senate amendment does not describe the same bonds that the House bill describes?

Mr. BULL. It describes the same bonds, but simply reduces the total by the amount of the bonds that were redeemed at the Treasury.

Mr. DOCKERY. Reduces the indemnity bond?

Mr. BULL. Not the indemnity bond, but the amount of the bonds that were stolen, by the sum of $650. The indemnity bond remains double the amount just the same.

Mr. DOCKERY. It having been ascertained that the $650, the difference in the amount, had already been paid?

Mr. BULL. Yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. In all other respects, the description of the bonds is the same?

Mr. BULL. Is the same; yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. The same as carried in the original House bill?

Mr. BULL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman move to concur in the Senate amendment?

Mr. BULL. Yes.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

ERIE CANAL.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a resolution for the printing of a House document.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of Thomas W. Symons, Corps of Engineers, upon House bill No. 7775, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, providing for widening the locks of the Erie Canal, in the State of New York, with the accompanying diagrams, be printed as a House document.

Mr. TERRY. I should like to ask the gentleman what is the estimated cost of this printing?

Mr. PERKINS. One hundred and eighty-five dollars.

The resolution was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

And then, on motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9961) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, with Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The Clerk (resuming the reading of the bill) read as follows:

Salaries, Bureau of Animal Industry: One Chief of Bureau, $4,000; one assistant chief, $2,500; one chief clerk of Bureau, $2,000; one chief of inspection division, $2,500; one assistant chief of inspection division, $1,800; one chief of dairy division, $2,500; one assistant chief of dairy division, $1,800; one chief of pathological division, $2,500; one assistant in pathological division, $1,400; one assistant in pathological division, $840; one chief of biochemic division, $2,500; two assistants in biochemic division, at $1,400 each, $2,800; one assistant in biochemic laboratory, $720; one chief of miscellaneous division, $2,000; one zoologist, $2,250; two veterinary inspectors, at $1,800 each, $3,600; two veterinary inspectors, at $1,400 each, $2,800; one assistant at veterinary experiment station, $1,000; one clerk of class 4, $1,800; one clerk of class 3, $1,600; one clerk of class 2, $1,400; six clerks of class 1, $7,200; six clerks, at $1,000 each, $6,000; one clerk, $840; three firemen, at $720 each, $2,160; four messengers, at $720 each, $2,880; two skilled laborers, at $660 each, $1,320; for employment of artists, laborers, and charwomen, $5,000; in all, $69,710.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make points of order against the following provisions of the bill, because they are new legislation and also change existing law: In lines 9 and 10, page 7, the salary carried in the bill for the chief of the pathological division is $2,500. I desire to make a point of order against that, the existing law being $2,250. I desire to make a point of order against the provision allowing the assistant in the pathological division $1,400, the salary under the law being $1,200 only. I also desire to make a point of order against the provision creating the office of one assistant in the pathological division, $840, it being a new provision; also against the increase of salary of the chief of the biochemic division from $2,250 to $2,500; also against the increases of the salaries of two assistants in biochemic division to $1,400 each, the law allowing them only $1,200 each; also against the provision for one assistant in biochemic laboratory, $720, it being a new provision and not authorized by law; also against the increase of salary of the zoologist, in line 18, from $2,000 to $2,500.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I perhaps must admit that the point of order raised by the gentleman is tenable. This question of salaries was very carefully considered by the Committee on Agriculture. The estimates provided for an increase of $25,660 in the salaries of the Agricultural Department, and yet the committee has seen fit only to recommend $2,270, giving all practically to the Bureau of Animal Industry. These men are scientific men, technical men, graduates of scientific schools, and not in any ordinary sense chiefs of divisions. In raising the salaries of these chiefs of divisions in the Bureau of Animal Industry we have simply put them on a par with the salaries paid in the other scientific bureaus of the Department. During the last six or seven years thirty-odd of these scientific men have been taken away from Government employ and procured employment at very much larger salaries in colleges and scientific schools. I do not say that the small increase of $250 will retain them here. I only want to say that these salaries are not in excess of the salaries paid in educational institutions throughout the country, and that can be said of very few salaries here in Washington.

Now, in connection with this subject, and particularly as to the Bureau of Animal Industry, I want again to call the attention of the committee to the wonderful increase of work in that department. In 1891 the inspections by this Bureau were only a total of 28,380 animals; in 1892 they increased to 2,800,440; in 1893 they increased to 4,885,633; in 1894 they increased to 12,944,056; in 1895 to 18,783,000; and in 1896 they increased to 23,775,779. So the committee can see the work of this Bureau has continually increased, and that, too, at a very fast rate.

I hope the gentleman from Missouri will withdraw that point of order.

The committee gave that subject very careful consideration and last year increased these salaries. The House approved of them, but the Senate struck them out. Now, in view of the fact that we have only raised the salaries $2,270, when the Department asked for $25,660, I do not think the committee can be charged with extravagance. I admit they are subject to a point of order if the gentleman insists; but I think this is a business proposition and that these men should be paid the salaries that we ask here for them.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, in submitting the points of order, I do not desire to criticise the gentleman in charge of the bill or to criticise the general provisions of the bill. I have examined it, and the bill bears evidence of very careful preparation. It does credit to the accomplished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture; but upon the merits involved in this question, I only desire to suggest that, whatever action may be proper in the future in respect to these proposed increases of salaries, at the present at least it seems inopportune to increase them, the revenues for the present fiscal year already being inadequate by more than $45,000,000 to meet current expenses.

Then, I may add another thing, Mr. Chairman. The Senate struck out these proposed increases last year; and it being a very unusual and extraordinary action on the part of that body in the direction of economy and reform, I desire to encourage them in this direction——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri that the bill carries $107,000 less than last year.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). And therefore must insist upon the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the point of order is insisted upon. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I think the easier way will be to substitute the paragraph of last year's bill in toto for this. I move to strike out page 7, commencing at line 1, all that page to line 25, inclusive, and page 8 from line 1 to line 11, inclusive, and substitute the new matter which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Bureau of Animal Industry: One chief of Bureau, $4,000; one assistant chief, $2,500; one chief clerk of Bureau, $2,000; one chief of inspection division, $2,500; one assistant chief of inspection division, $1,800; one chief of dairy division, $2,500; one assistant chief of dairy division, $1,800; one chief of pathological division, $2,250; one assistant in pathological division, $1,200; one assistant in pathological division, $840; one chief of biochemic division, $2,250; two assistants in biochemic division, at $1,200 each, $2,400; one assistant in biochemic laboratory, $720; one chief of miscellaneous division, $2,000; one zoologist, $2,000; two veterinary inspectors, at $1,800 each, $3,600; two veterinary inspectors, at $1,400 each, $2,800; one assistant at veterinary experiment station, $1,000; one clerk class 4, $1,800; one clerk class 3, $1,600; one clerk class 2, $1,400; five clerks class 1, $6,000; seven clerks, at $1,000 each, $7,000; one clerk, at $840; two firemen, at $720 each, $1,440; four messengers, at $720 each, $2,880; two skilled laborers, at $660 each, $1,320; for employment of artists, laborers, and charwomen, $5,000; in all, $67,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In connection with what I have said in regard to the Bureau of Animal Industry, I would like to have printed a statement and tables showing the amount of exports of beef and meat during the last year. It is from the Statistical Bureau department.

There was no objection.

The statement of exports and the tables are as follows:

[Circular No. 17.]

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

EXPORTS OF ANIMALS AND THEIR PRODUCTS.

The course of the export trade in animals and their products during the past eight years forms a very interesting subject for study. The great gains in the exports of live animals have been with horses, mules, and sheep. With animal products a notable gain is seen in the case of fresh beef, mutton, oleo oil, hams, and sole leather. In 1889 the exports of horses were 3,748 head, and the average of the four years 1889 to 1892, inclusive, was 3,396. In 1896 the exports of horses reached 25,126, with an average for the four years 1893 to 1896, inclusive, of 11,831. The number of sheep exported in 1889 was 128,852, and the average for the four years 1889 to 1892 was 76,070. In 1896 the export of sheep reached the remarkable number of 491,565, and the average for the four years 1893 to 1896 was 266,736.

The exports of fresh beef have increased from 137,895,391 pounds in 1889 to 224,783,225 pounds in 1896. The average for the years 1889 to 1892 was 181,433,310 pounds, and for the years 1893 to 1896 it was 204,077,065 pounds. The exports of hams have steadily increased from 42,847,247 pounds in 1889 to 129,036,351 pounds in 1896. The exports of oleo oil increased from 28,102,534 pounds in 1889 to 103,276,756 pounds in 1896, and the average for the four years 1889 to 1892 was 67,033,342 pounds, as compared with an average of 104,652,723 pounds for the years 1893 to 1896. There has also been a considerable increase, about one-third, in the exports of sole leather during the last three years. The shipments of live cattle, bacon, canned and cured beef, lard, and pickled pork, while they have fluctuated from year to year, have not shown any very marked tendency to increase or decrease. Bacon and pickled pork have diminished somewhat, but the exports of lard have been larger for 1896 than for any other year of the series.

The exports in a few items have been considerably diminished during the eight years under consideration. Live hogs have fallen off from 45,128 in 1889 and 95,654 in 1891 to 21,049 in 1896. This is probably due to the risk attending the shipment of these animals and the greater profit derived from the exportation of their products. There was a continuous decrease in the shipments of tallow from 1890, when they reached 112,745,370 pounds, to 1895, when they were only 25,864,300 pounds. There has, however, been a recovery in this trade during the last year, the exports reaching 52,759,212 pounds. The exports of dairy products have not been satisfactory. The butter trade, which in 1890 reached 29,748,042 pounds, fell off to 5,598,812 pounds in 1895. Fortunately, much of this decrease was overcome in 1896, when 19,373,913 pounds were exported. The cheese exports show a continuous decline since 1890, when they reached 95,376,053 pounds. The quantity exported in 1896 was only 36,777,291 pounds.

In order to make clear the remarkably large proportion of our exported animals and animal products which are marketed in Great Britain, the figures have been tabulated for the total exports and for the exports to the United Kingdom:

Respectfully submitted.

D. E. SALMON,
Chief of Bureau of Animal Industry.

Approved.

J. STERLING MORTON,
Secretary.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 21, 1897.

Mr. TALBERT. I call the attention of the gentleman from New York in charge of this bill to the provision, in lines 9 and 10, on page 8, "for employment of artists, laborers, and charwomen, $5,000." I ask the gentleman if he does not think it would be better to specify how many artists, how many laborers, and how many charwomen?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will say to the gentleman that I think the Bureau ought to have some leeway in that respect. Certain contingencies might arise where it might become necessary to employ a larger or a less number.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, we might get another "modern curiosity" at the head of that Department, so I think it would be better to specify the details. [Laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Possibly so.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total salaries Department of Agriculture, $318,410.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the total be changed to correspond with the amendments adopted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I object temporarily, Mr. Chairman. I wish to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill what is the object of this summing up of salaries here? It is no proper part of the bill, as it seems to me. The appropriations have all been summed up under each class or division, and it seems to me that this is unnecessary, and ought to be stricken out.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a custom which has prevailed for many years, and which is followed in this bill. It is simply a résumé of the salaries in the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. I would say to the gentleman from New Hampshire that that is for the purpose of facilitating the preparation of a tabular statement of the appropriations at the end of each session. The gentleman is doubtless aware that a resolution adopted many years ago requires the clerk of the House Committee on Appropriations and the clerk of the Senate Committee to jointly prepare a tabular statement of the contents of the appropriation bills, so that members and all other persons desiring to get the information may readily ascertain the amount that each bill carries.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. But is not that found more properly in the report of the committee in each case than in the bill?

Mr. SAYERS. It ought to go into the bill also, because reports often get scattered and lost.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Well, I see no use of it in the bill, but I withdraw the objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Collecting agricultural statistics, Division of Statistics: Collecting domestic and foreign agricultural statistics, compiling, writing, and illustrating statistical matter for monthly, annual, and special reports; special investigations and compilations; subscriptions to and purchase of statistical publications containing data for permanent comparative records, maps and charts, stationery supplies, blanks, blank books, circulars, paper, envelopes, postal cards, postage stamps, freight, and express charges, and necessary traveling expenses: Provided, That the monthly crop report issued on the 10th day of each month shall embrace a statement of the condition of the crops, by States, in the United States, with such explanations and comparisons with other months and years as may be useful for illustrating the above matter, and that it shall be submitted to and officially approved by the Secretary of Agriculture before being issued or published: Provided also, That $10,000 of the amount hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary, may be expended in continuing the investigations concerning the feasibility of extending the demands of foreign markets for the agricultural products of the United States, and to secure as far as may be a change in the methods of supplying tobacco and other farm products to foreign countries, $110,000.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "with such explanations and comparisons with other months and years as may be useful for illustrating the above matter" and insert instead the words "with such explanations, comparisons, and information as may be useful for illustrating the above matter."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I make a point of order on that amendment, Mr. Chairman, until I hear the gentleman's explanation of it.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. In explanation of the amendment, I will state that the provision as it stands in the bill makes it mandatory upon the Secretary to make these comparisons by months and years. That may result in entirely unnecessary and redundant work. My amendment leaves it to the discretion of the Secretary to add such explanations and comparisons as in his judgment appear to be useful. Under the provision of the bill as it stands he might be required to reprint portions of his own former reports as well as the current report, thus increasing largely the cost of printing and adding a mass of useless printed matter to the burden of the country.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection to the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] on the first reading of this bill chose to make a severe criticism upon the Secretary of Agriculture for the publication of certain statistics showing the result of the last election, we on this side of the House naturally supposed that there would be some member of the party from which the honorable Secretary of Agriculture was appointed to make his defense, and the attempt of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri to throw the burden of the defense upon my colleague from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] seems to have met with no response from that gentleman. It may be that the Democrats, the gentlemen on the other side of the House, feel in regard to this matter as Daniel Webster did about Massachusetts and as the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARDY] felt yesterday about his State—they may feel that the Secretary of Agriculture needs no defense at their hands.

If that is their view, I think I can fully coincide with them, and I shall not attempt to speak in his behalf in defense of all that he has done in the conduct of his Department so far as the publication of statistics is concerned; but as one who had frequent occasion to use those statistics during the campaign preceding the election, I do want to bear witness to the great value to the country at large of some of the statistical bulletins that have been issued by the Department of Agriculture. They came in very opportunely for correcting the fallacious theories and arguments of the free-silver men of this country in their attempt to convince the farmers that the prices of farm products followed the price of silver. In a bulletin issued, I think, about the middle of last July certain tables were printed showing the production of all the staple agricultural products of the country, with the average prices, for the last forty years.

Those tables showed two or three facts conclusively to every man who would make a careful examination of them, and to the farmer especially, who was being made the particular target of this argument of the silver men that his prosperity and the prices of his farm products followed the price of silver. It needed but a careful inspection of these tables to show conclusively certain facts. One of these was that almost invariably the law of supply and demand fixed the price of farm products. With a large crop of any particular production, the price was invariably low; with a small crop, the price was almost invariably high. And the few apparent exceptions to this rule only went to prove it, for the reason that in every case an explanation could be given for the variations from it.

There was another thing that these tables proved. They proved that the prices of no great staple in this country followed, for the last thirty or forty years, the prices of silver. When silver was going along at a level price, wheat and corn were jumping up and down with variations of 10, 15, or 20 cents, and sometimes even more, per bushel. They showed another thing. When wheat was going up, corn might be going down; when corn was going up, wheat might be going down; or they might be traveling along at pretty nearly a level price, while silver was going up or down upon an entirely different scale. The arguments that these facts would present to the farmer were, it seems to me, conclusive as showing that the prices of farm products did not follow the course of silver, for the reason that they did not agree with each other and none of them agreed with the variations in the prices of silver in its ups and downs.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, if we consider this one bulletin alone issued by the Agricultural Department—if we consider the value to the country at large of these arguments——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] has expired.

Mr. BROMWELL. I ask time to conclude in a few sentences what I was saying.

The CHAIRMAN. How much additional time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. BROMWELL. Three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be allowed to proceed for three minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, if the Agricultural Department had done nothing else than furnish to the country at the critical time when they were presented the arguments that could be drawn from these tables based upon statistics gathered carefully year by year long before there was any free-silver agitation in this country—if the Agricultural Department had done nothing else than furnish these statistics for the purpose of opening the eyes of the farmers of this country to the fallacy of the free-silver argument, the expense incurred in the conduct of the Agricultural Department as a whole, and particularly this special department—the collection and the distribution of statistics—would be well repaid by the benefit that has accrued to the country at large.

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman allow a single suggestion?

Mr. BROMWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORSE. I should be glad to have the gentleman supplement his remarks with the statement that the Commissioner of Agriculture in presenting these statistics made no deductions from them. He submitted simply the naked facts which the statistics themselves embodied, leaving the people to make their own conclusions.

Mr. BROMWELL. That is true, as I understand it.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we ought to have some day set apart for these political debates. I remember very distinctly that members of the party in power in this House have taken recently at least four opportunities to make political speeches, when the speeches themselves had no application whatever to the pending subject, and the minority had no opportunity whatever to reply. We had a case of that kind the other day, when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] submitted his remarks on the banking and currency question. I know men on this floor who have repeatedly asked for an opportunity to reply to such arguments, but it has been denied them.

But, sir, coming down to the remarks just made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL], I wish to say that in my opinion every distinguished economist in the world, until the late Cleveland Administration, took the ground that the price of wheat did follow the price of silver under normal conditions. Sir Isaac Newton took that position in the first place when he was master of the mint of England. He called the attention of the English people to the fact that every time there was a divergence, however small, between the price of gold and the price of silver, according to the established ratio, that divergence was in favor of the India or other foreign wheat growers. That contention has gone on indefinitely. And I want to say now that in my opinion all of the best economists of Europe to-day claim that that is not only true as to wheat, but it is true as to other export products of the countries that use silver as full legal-tender money. A remarkable paper was produced in 1895 by a gentleman, Mr. Jamison, who was then established at Shanghai as consul-general of Great Britain, wherein he showed beyond question that this condition of things had existed from the days of Sir Isaac Newton, and had destroyed wheat growing in England and now threatens its manufactories.

Now, we know that in the last campaign our friends on the other side claimed that because wheat went up in price, while silver did not rise with it, the entire argument founded on this well-established law that I have just stated was refuted. Sir, there never was a well-informed man who made the argument that silver follows wheat; but every man who has studied this question prior to the late Cleveland Administration has contended at all times that wheat has followed silver when normal conditions were prevailing. But when there was a condition that was not normal, when there was a condition in India because of which wheat could not be exported, then there could not be such a condition. For instance, the only reason that the price of wheat followed the price of silver was that the importers into this competitive country from India and from the other silver-using countries sold their wheat calculated on what the result would buy in silver. When there was a panic or a wheat famine, the condition was abnormal, and therefore we had not the exportations from that country, and they could not export wheat, reduce the price in gold, take 50 cents per bushel in gold, and buy $1 worth of depreciated silver bullion, return to India, coin it into $1, and pay a dollar's worth of debt, insurance, taxes, etc., and therefore our wheat could and did rise independent of silver, as no competition existed from silver-using countries during this famine. This should prove, rather than disprove, our contention.

But now, Mr. Chairman, another thing I wish to say is that prior to the late Cleveland Administration in my opinion there was not a respectable political economist anywhere in the entire world who did not make the claim that the prices of all products were largely controlled by the amount of money in circulation, and if our friends will examine the reports from every country in the world, they will find this great economic truth established; if you will take the reports and hearings before the monetary commission in British India, you will find that the wheat raisers of that country went in a body and insisted that every time the divergence between gold and silver was increased that that moment the wheat crop of India brought a proportionately larger price, and they opposed the gold standard as a detriment to the Indian wheat grower. You will find it in the report of the Indian commission, which sets out very fully the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have three or four minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will proceed for three or four minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Colorado to the fact that he did not make this statement, or his friends did not, during the last campaign. The statement then was that Mr. Hanna and the capitalists had combined to put up the price of wheat and put down the price of silver.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. I made the statement repeatedly in that campaign, and we all did in the portion of the country where I took part in the campaign, that is, that this divergence between gold and silver, just as stated in this report to which I have referred, was the real cause of the decline in prices here, and that wheat followed silver, not silver wheat.

Mr. MORSE. Then the Associated Press lied about your position.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. We made the argument from the beginning of that campaign, and all the time, that where there was a divergence between the price of gold and silver regarding the standard ratio that it became a divergence in favor of those countries that used silver, and that India, being a country that exported wheat in competition with this country, obtained the advantage of the existing conditions. Mr. Robert Fowler, ex-mayor of London, declared in 1886 that if they could keep a divergence between gold and silver, and if silver continued to depreciate, that India would soon control the wheat markets of the whole world. That has always been the contention of the English people, and it seems founded on common sense. We never contended that wheat followed silver in price, but we did contend that by reason of the divergence between gold and silver that when the price of silver bullion depreciated, say, 25 per cent, that the wheat shipped from India to Liverpool would sell for 25 per cent less than the gold price, and the sellers from silver-using countries would buy silver bullion and take it back to India and have it coined into rupees, recovering their reduction, which was actually the case until the mints of India were closed. The wheat growers from gold-using countries had to reduce their prices, but could not buy silver bullion and recover their reduction.

That was all we claimed on that point last fall and all we claim now.

Now, as to silver: In my opinion there is no real silver question. We have made it apparent long ago in this country that this is not, and can not be, a controversy between gold and silver, but a controversy between national money on the one hand and bank paper on the other; and that is the only controversy now agitating the moneyed classes.

Mr. MORSE. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. MORSE. If I understand the position of the gentleman, it is that his party is opposed to all metallic bases for money, but that they want the issue of absolute fiat money.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. That is not true.

Mr. MORSE. Then your papers have misrepresented your position—they have lied about it.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. We are in favor of all the gold and all the silver that can be brought into the country from anywhere in the world, and in favor of having it coined, and then supplemented by a full legal-tender paper money, not to be redeemed by a forced redemption, but automatically redeemed whenever we can find enough gold and silver to take the place of the paper money issued; and we are in favor, as was contended by the early economic writers of the country—that is, that we ought to have so much money in circulation every minute as will bear such a proportion to the property in the country as will hold a firm level of prices. This is the doctrine of Mr. Calhoun and other real patriots. He contended that $1 in money to every $30 of property was about the right proportion, and that we ought to have real money and not bank paper. This is the Populist contention.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of suggesting a single thought to the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. BELL of Colorado].

I have no speech to make, but only intend to call the attention of my friend to the fact that the "tribune of his party" at the other end of this building, Senator PEFFER, of Kansas, has introduced bills after bills there, as shown by Senator MORRILL, of Vermont, calling for more paper money than the entire circulation of all the civilized and semicivilized countries on the face of God's earth. His party, through their official organs, who have the right to speak for them, have declared over and over again their opposition to all metallic money, and in the late campaign only favored free coinage of silver as a step in the direction of irredeemable greenbacks or fiat money.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to state that I remember a few years ago when a law was proposed, introduced by a Republican member here, to pay the rebel soldiers a pension. That was introduced by a Republican. Is that the doctrine of the Republican party? Does the gentleman feel bound by what any individual member of his party chooses to recommend?

Mr. MORSE. I think if any Republican ever introduced a bill of that character, he would hardly have made it payable in the money the gentleman recommends.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. It was introduced by a Republican member.

Mr. MORSE. I say I do not believe he would ever have proposed to pension them in fiat money.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] to misstate or misrepresent the attitude of his party in regard to currency. There is a gentleman who has risen to the position of Senator, and who has, in a public speech in this city, if I am not misinformed, stated that it was an entire fallacy and a wicked waste of labor to mine the gold and silver in the mountains, but that the true basis for our money should be that the greenbacks should be issued by the Government against the whole country, and that would take in the gold and silver in the mountains before it was mined. He might go a step further, and issue more money against the fish in the sea before they were caught. [Laughter.] Why, Mr. Chairman, there is absolutely no basis for the currency as proposed by the Populist party.

Now, in the course of another debate a definition of the Populist party was given on this floor. I want to offer a definition myself, and my definition is that in the view of the Populist party in this country, I say a good Populist holds that it is a crime to do a successful business, and it is a great crime to do a large and successful business. That party lives upon the disasters and misfortunes of the country. It lives upon famine and pestilence, and short crops, and poverty, and desolation, and misery; and the panacea for the ills of that party is a restoration, such as will occur on the 4th of March next, of the Republican party to the control of all branches of this Government, when we shall have a protective tariff that will give us an income to pay the running expenses of the Government; a protective tariff that will restore prosperity to the country and that will give us an income to carry on the great public works of our country.

Mr. MEREDITH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I rise to a point of order. I do not think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] is speaking to the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. MORSE. That is quite correct, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] will proceed in order.

Mr. MORSE. I confess judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE], then, is out of order.

Mr. MORSE. I will try to proceed in order. My friend from Virginia [Mr. MEREDITH] wants to ask me a question.

Mr. MEREDITH. If all these good things are to come upon us through the return of the Republican party to power, why did the money slip from the Treasury under the last Administration?

Mr. MORSE. The last Administration, Mr. Chairman, turned over the Government to its successors with money in the Treasury and with an income sufficient for all expenses of the Government, and prior to the election of 1894 this country, under Republican control, was enjoying a prosperity unknown before in our history.

Mr. MEREDITH. The gentleman knows that the last Republican Administration left an empty Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is not in order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] has stated that the rule of supply and demand is what controls the price of crops. No one ever denied such a proposition. The rule of supply and demand is universal, and knows no exception whatever; but the difficulty with the gentleman from Ohio is that while he recognizes the principle of supply and demand as applied to crops, he does not recognize it as applied to money. You can not have a shifting of the burdens that both gold and silver have hitherto borne upon gold alone without increasing the burden upon gold, increasing the demand for gold, and increasing its value. As gold is the measure of everything that it will buy, its increase in value means the decrease in price of all commodities.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I rise to the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the paragraph now pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] makes the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the paragraph.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am speaking to the circular. There is before the committee the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL], and it seems to me an opportunity ought to be given to deny his statements.

The CHAIRMAN. The only discretion the Chair has is to enforce the rules of the House. The Chair thinks the question of silver is not involved at all in that paragraph.

Mr. HEPBURN. This is an agricultural bill, and the gentleman is plowing with his constituents. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. We propose to plow well and win.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SWANSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, we are now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and in that committee great latitude is allowed in the discussion of anything that appertains to the good of the National Union. I think there are some precedents for that view. One is not confined entirely to the measure before the House, because it appertains to the whole state of the Union, as to whether we shall or shall not pass a particular bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hardly thinks that is a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair has ruled on the remarks of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] that they are not in order under the paragraph of the bill which is under consideration.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair made his decision some time ago. However, the Chair will submit the question to the committee. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] appeals from the decision of the Chair to the committee. The question is, Will the committee sustain the decision of the Chair? As many as are in favor will say "aye."

The affirmative vote was taken.

Mr. MOODY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is now deciding an appeal on a question of order.

Mr. MOODY. It was with reference to that appeal, so that I might vote intelligently, that I desire to make the inquiry. Do I understand the Chair to rule the reason that unlimited range of discussion, called for by the gentleman from Virginia, is not in order is because the bill is being considered under special order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has made no ruling on the proposition made by the gentleman from Virginia. The committee is now discussing a particular item in an appropriation bill. Upon that the gentleman from Colorado arose and made a speech upon the question of silver, and other questions, which the committee heard. The point of order was made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] that the remarks of the gentleman from Colorado were not upon the subject-matter of the paragraph under consideration by the committee. Upon that the Chair held that the remarks were not in order. From that the gentleman from Colorado appeals, and the question is upon sustaining the decision of the Chair.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Several MEMBERS. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 40.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Grass and forage plant investigations, Division of Agrostology: Field and laboratory investigations relating to the natural history, geographical distribution, and uses of the various grasses and forage plants, and their adaptability to special soils and climates; establishment and maintenance of experimental grass stations; employment of local and special agents and assistants; collection of seeds, roots, and specimens for experimental cultivation and distribution; materials, tools, apparatus, supplies, and labor required in conducting experiments; freight and express charges and traveling expenses; the preparation of drawings and illustrations for special reports, and the preparation of illustrated circulars of information, bulletins, and monographic works on the forage plants and grasses of North America, $10,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, following after that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after line 15, page 14:

"Fiber investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the investigations relating to textile fibers indigenous in or adapted to the United States, including their economic growth, cleansing, and decorticating, preparatory to manufacture; the testing machines and processes for said cleansing and decorticating; for the purchase of material for said tests; for the purchase of fiber plants and seeds for distribution, propagation, and experiment, and for the labor and expenses incident thereto; and for traveling expenses in connection with said duties, $5,000."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know under what particular rule the point of order is reserved?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The point of order that I make is that it is an increase of expenditures and new legislation.

Mr. DOCKERY. And changes existing law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And it changes existing law.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then I desire to say, with reference to its changing existing law, and with reference to its being new legislation, that this paragraph has been in the Agricultural appropriation bill every year since 1888. It is in the Agricultural appropriation bill now upon the statute book. It therefore does not change any existing law. It is not new legislation. The proposition is simply to drop from the Agricultural appropriation bill now under consideration an appropriation of $5,000 for investigation and experiment with respect to these various textile fibers, while the amendment I have sent to the Clerk's desk simply restores that appropriation. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is not, therefore, subject to the point of order made by the gentleman from New York. With reference to the merits of the proposition, I desire to say that I am advised by men in the State of Minnesota who are interested in the growth and development of the domestic fiber industry that they have received very material and valuable assistance in the growth and development of this industry from the information which they have obtained from the Agricultural Department as the result of these investigations.

I also desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that in my judgment the investigation with respect to our domestic fibers and the experiments that can be made and ought to be made will be of far more value and benefit to the agricultural classes of our country than many of the investigations which are authorized by the bill now pending.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. DOCKERY. How long have these investigations been in operation?

Mr. TAWNEY. Since 1888. Every appropriation bill from that time down to 1896 has made provision for continuing these investigations, and it is now the law upon the statute book.

Mr. DOCKERY. And the investigation is made with a view of determining what question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Determining the adaptability of our soil and climate for the growth of various fibers and also to furnish information concerning the treatment of those fibers by farmers engaged in producing them.

Mr. DOCKERY. And after eight years' investigation, at an expenditure of $5,000 per annum, the Department has not been able to reach a judgment in respect to the matter?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not a question of reaching a judgment in respect to these fibers, but in the judgment of the present Secretary of Agriculture the investigation has not justified the expenditure of this money, although the men who are engaged in raising and producing these fibers tell me that they have received very valuable aid and assistance from the information they have obtained as a result of the investigations that have been going on these past years in the Agricultural Department; and I will say that every Secretary of Agriculture since 1888 except the present Secretary has recommended this appropriation for the very reason that, in his judgment, he believed it to be of material benefit to the American people engaged in the growth and development of this industry.

Mr. DOCKERY. Can the gentleman state the items of this annual expenditure of $5,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will give the committee that information in my time.

Mr. TAWNEY. I only know that the investigation has covered the whole subject of the production and treatment of these fibers. I know further that within the last year we have imported into this country foreign fibers to the amount of more than $4,000,000, and that we have imported of the products of these foreign fibers more than $30,000,000 worth. The development of this particular line of agriculture is a subject of vast interest to the farmers and producers of this country. There has recently been formed in the United States a National Domestic Fiber Association, composed of men in almost every State in the Union who are interested in the production and treatment of these domestic fibers, and their association is for the purpose of furthering their growth to the end that we may be able to produce more of the fibers we consume than we have done in the past. I think, therefore, it is but just to the people that they should have the benefit of scientific investigation with respect to the treatment of these fibers, so as to encourage the production at home of products we are now importing from abroad. I certainly think this investigation is of at least as much value to the country at large as several of the investigations which are authorized by this bill. For example, the botanical investigation, the entomological investigation, the pathological investigation, the biological survey, the forestry investigation, the soil investigation, the grass and forage plant investigation, and the nutrition investigation. All of these are authorized by this bill, and none of them, in my judgment, comes closer to the interests of the agriculturists of this country than the investigation in relation to the production and treatment of domestic fibers. I hope, therefore, that the committee will adopt the amendment I have offered. I do not believe that it is subject to the point of order made by the gentleman from New York, which is covered only by the second paragraph of Rule XXI, for the reason that the amendment does not change existing law nor increase expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the only clause of the rule under which this amendment would be in order would be the one which authorizes an appropriation for the continuation of a public work or object already in progress.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is for the continuation of a work already authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. A public work or object.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What constitutes a "public work or object already in progress" has received several interpretations by Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It has been broadly held that the term "public work" contemplates a tangible object, like a building or a road, and not "duties in an Executive Department." The Chair is unable to say whether this amendment which the gentleman from Minnesota proposes applies to anything more than duties in an Executive Department. The object of it is to gather information, as the Chair understands.

Mr. TAWNEY. The amendment is to provide for the continuance of an investigation in relation to the production of certain articles, and I think it comes under the head of a public work already in progress. It is a work that the Department has been engaged in for a number of years.

The CHAIRMAN. But there is no tangible object like a public building or a road.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not contend that this is a public building or a highway.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair said no tangible object like a public building or a road. The gentleman's amendment seems to apply only to the duties of an Executive Department.

Mr. TAWNEY. It may be that the Chair is making a very fine distinction between a "public duty" and a "public work." The labor heretofore expended in this investigation certainly constitutes a work, and there can be no question about its being for the benefit of the public. The question whether it is like a road or a highway has no reference to the question whether it is a public work or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is only making the distinction that seems to have been made by former occupants of the chair in the Committee of the Whole. The term "public work" has been held to apply to some tangible object and not to a mere work or duty which is performed by a public officer.

Mr. DOCKERY. There is something tangible here—$5,000. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I think that an appropriation for the work authorized by this amendment is entitled to be considered by the Chair as a provision for a public work in progress just as much as an appropriation for a building or a public road or any other public work. The work which the Agricultural Department is directed by this amendment to continue is a work which the Department has been required in the past to perform, and the amendment simply contemplates that that work, in the interest of the public, shall be continued in the future as it has gone on in the past.

The CHAIRMAN. The difference between this object and a public work like a building or a road is that in the latter case the building or road is the tangible object, while this simply applies to a duty. Is there any tangible object that has been already accomplished or commenced under this appropriation?

Mr. TAWNEY. The result of the investigation is the tangible object that has been accomplished. People in my own State, and people in other States, have been benefited by that result just as much as they would be benefited by the partial completion of a public road or building, and reports showing the results of these investigations have been made from year to year and distributed among the people who are interested in the subject, for their guidance in the production and treatment of these fibers.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the Department ever established an experimental farm, or anything of that kind, for the purpose of raising these fibers? That would be a tangible object or work.

Mr. TAWNEY. I was informed the other day by Mr. Smith, the superintendent of the Botanic Garden, that he has been growing these various fibers under an appropriation heretofore made. He referred especially to jute and to ramie. These experiments have been going on under the direction of the Agricultural Department ever since 1888, the results being made known to the public in the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The experimentation in the Botanic Garden was done under the appropriation for the Botanic Garden, was it not?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am unable to state under what appropriation the work was done, but it was an experiment, under the direction of the Agricultural Department, as Mr. Smith informs me. I certainly fail to see wherein this amendment which I have offered changes existing law or increases the expenditure of money previously provided for.

Mr. BARRETT. May I offer a suggestion to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture? Later on in this bill I find several paragraphs providing for investigations very similar to the one proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota, and if the Chair should hold that these investigations are not in order under the rule I shall take pleasure in making the point of order upon each one as it is reached, because I think that the gentleman from Minnesota is entitled to exactly the same consideration here that is given to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. I make this suggestion now for the benefit of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. WADSWORTH], because he may possibly desire to have some of these other provisions for investigations retained in the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman is at liberty to raise a point of order against anything in the bill. I am not his guardian in any sense.

The CHAIRMAN. The remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT], as the Chair understands, are addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. WADSWORTH], not to the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the Chair will decide this question uninfluenced by any threats or attempted intimidation. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to decide all these questions of order on their merits as they arise. The Chair thinks that this amendment is not in order under the rules, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. In view of the vast importance of this provision, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Pending that, will it be in order for me to make an explanation, not touching the point of order, but stating the reasons why the committee struck out this provision? Would that be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The question of order is debatable on the appeal.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not want to debate the question of the appeal, but merely to state why this item was left out of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the opinion of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 40, noes 23.

Mr. BARRETT. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting the members present). There are 114 members present—a quorum. The ayes have it. The decision of the Chair is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk (resuming the reading of the bill) read the following:

Agricultural experiment stations, Office of Experiment Stations: To carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto," and to enforce the execution thereof, $750,000, $30,000 of which sum shall be payable upon the order of the Secretary of Agriculture, to enable him to carry out the provisions of section 3 of the said act of March 2, 1887; and the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe the form of the annual financial statement required by section 3 of said act of March 2, 1887, shall ascertain whether the expenditures under the appropriation hereby made are in accordance with the provisions of the said act, and shall make report thereon to Congress; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons as he may deem necessary, and to incur such other expenses for office fixtures and supplies, stationery, traveling, freight, and express charges, illustration and publication of the Experiment Station Record, bulletins, and reports, as he may find essential in carrying out the objects of the above acts; and the sums apportioned to the several States shall be paid quarterly in advance. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to furnish, to such institutions or individuals as may care to buy it, copies of the card index of agricultural literature prepared by the Office of Experiment Stations, and charge for the same a price covering the additional expense involved in the preparation of these copies; and he is hereby authorized to apply the moneys received toward the expense of the preparation of the index.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I wish to raise a point of order on the clause just read, commencing with the word "and," in line 18, on page 15. Pending the point of order, I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture the purpose of this card index here referred to, and the form in which copies are to be furnished.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This provision is the same as that of the law of last year. It refers, I suppose, to the index of the libraries of these experimental stations, does it not?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I was trying to find that out myself.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I confess I am not positive as to the matter.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I do not see how a card index, according to the ordinary interpretation of those words, could be issued as provided.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The appropriation act for the current year provides:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to furnish to such institutions or individuals as may care to buy it, copies of the card index of agricultural literature prepared by the office of experiment stations, and charge for the same a price covering the additional expense involved in the preparation of these copies, and he is hereby authorized to apply the moneys received toward the expense of the preparation of the index.

The law is mandatory that these indexes shall be prepared, and it is further provided that the money received for them shall be applied to pay the expense of preparing them.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The difficulty in my mind, Mr. Chairman, is not so much in the interpretation of the language here used as it is with regard to the manner in which the provision can be carried out. How are card indexes to be duplicated in this manner?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, that is a matter of detail. I confess I am not much of a librarian, and I do not know how these indexes are prepared. But the law for their preparation is mandatory, and the provision here in question provides merely that the proceeds shall be applied toward paying the expense of preparing them.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I do not get the information that I desired, but I withdraw the objection. [Laughter.]

The Clerk (resuming the reading of the bill) read as follows:

Nutrition investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the nutritive value of the various articles and commodities used for human food, with special suggestions of full, wholesome, and edible rations less wasteful and more economical than those in common use, $15,000; and the agricultural experiment stations are hereby authorized to cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out said investigations in such manner and to such extent as may be warranted by a due regard to the varying conditions and needs of the respective States and Territories, and as may be mutually agreed upon; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to require said stations to report to him the results of any such investigations which they may carry out, whether in cooperation with said Secretary of Agriculture or otherwise.

Mr. BARRETT. I raise a point of order on the provision last read, and I reserve that point pending the amendment which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is about to offer.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts should be first disposed of.

Mr. BARRETT. I reserve that point of order until the gentleman from Minnesota shall have an opportunity to be heard.

The proposed amendment of Mr. TAWNEY was read, as follows:

After line 16, on page 16, insert the following:

"Fiber investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the investigations relating to textile fibers indigenous in, or adapted to, the United States, including their economic growth, cleansing, and decorticating, preparatory to manufacture; the testing machines and processes for said cleansing and decorticating; for the purchase of material for said tests; for the purchase of fiber plants and seeds for distribution, propagation, and experiment, and for the labor and expenses incident thereto; and for traveling expenses in connection with said duties, $5,000."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I renew the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the language of this amendment, which I think comes clearly within the rule. In other words, I submit that it does provide for the continuation of a public work. The language of the amendment is:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the investigations relating to textile fibers indigenous in, or adapted to, the United States, including their economic growth, cleansing, and decorticating, preparatory to manufacture; the testing machines and processes for said cleansing and decorticating; for the purchase of material for said tests; for the purchase of fiber plants and seeds for distribution, propagation, and experiment, and for the labor and expenses incident thereto; and for traveling expenses in connection with said duties, $5,000.

Now, the labor and the expense incident to that work is merely a continuation of a public work which has been going on since 1888.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if he has before him the general law under which the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make the investigation? The Chair understands there is a general law on this subject.

Mr. TAWNEY. The paragraph I sent to the Chair is taken from the general law. The law now authorizes this work.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman means on an appropriation bill. The Chair means the general law upon the subject, if the gentleman can refer to it.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know that there is a general law on the subject other than the appropriation bill passed last session, although there may be.

The CHAIRMAN. The recollection of the Chair is that there is a general law, a section of the statutes, under which this expenditure is authorized.

Mr. TAWNEY. That may be, although I have not access to the law, nor have I examined it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks perhaps some member of of the committee may be able to refer the Chair to the section.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Chairman, I have a copy of the general law now in my hands; and if the gentleman from Minnesota wishes to refer to any portion of it, I will gladly surrender it to him.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I find section 526 of the Revised Statutes, on page 88, reads as follows:

The Commissioner of Agriculture shall procure and preserve all information concerning agriculture which he can obtain by means of books and correspondence, and by practical and scientific experiments, accurate records of which experiments shall be kept in his office, by the collection of statistics, and by any other appropriate means within his power; he shall collect new and valuable seeds and plants; he shall test, by cultivation, the value of such of them as may require such tests; shall propagate such as may be worthy of propagation, and shall distribute them among agriculturists.

Now, this is merely a continuation of the present law in respect to one particular item that is referred to in this general provision of the statutes; that is to say, the cultivation of domestic fibers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if the attention of the Chair had been called to the statute the gentleman has just read before ruling on the amendment when first presented, the ruling would have been different. The Chair thinks that clearly the statute authorizes the work suggested in the amendment, and therefore overrules the point of order and will submit the question to the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Chair, then, holds the amendment to be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds the amendment in order under the statute.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And the question is on the amendment?

Mr. BARRETT. One moment, Mr. Chairman. I have a point of order pending which has been reserved on the section. Inasmuch as I only reserved it to enable my friend from Minnesota to have the amendment which has been read acted upon by the committee, I withdraw the point of order, that result having been achieved.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order having been withdrawn, the question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the Agricultural Committee last year had this item under investigation, and was very doubtful that it possessed any utility whatever. On further investigation the committee decided unanimously that it should not be put into the present bill.

This investigation was started, I may say, in 1888, the gentleman from Minnesota says, although the figures I have show that it was in 1892.

Mr. TAWNEY. Eighteen hundred and eighty-eight is the correct time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. However, that does not matter materially. It was started, whenever it was commenced, at $10,000 for that year. In 1893 it was immediately dropped to $5,000, which shows a little suspicion in the minds of the Congress at that time that it was not of very much value. In 1894, 1895, and 1896, it was retained at $5,000.

Now, that $5,000 is spent in this way: The chief of the division gets $2,000; the chief clerk gets a part; a lady clerk gets some of it, and these three are compelled to have a messenger to wait upon them at a salary of $900, making thus $4,700 of the total appropriation which is paid in salaries.

Now, the investigation proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota may have been of some value heretofore, but we have considered the subject very thoroughly in this country, and the question of raising fibers to-day is no longer an experimental one. It has been established that in the South we can raise ramie, and in certain sections of the Northwest they raise hemp for the seed, not for the fiber, while on the North Pacific Coast you can raise it also for the fiber.

But, Mr. Chairman, in every State of the Union there is an experimental station, and the committee claim that where experiments of this character are to be conducted they should be conducted at the experimental stations in the States where the article is to be raised and where the test of climate can be considered. What good, let me ask you, would it do down in the Botanic Garden here to raise some character of fibrous plant to be used in Wisconsin or in Dakota? It will be of no practical value; it would not demonstrate anything of value; and the committee therefore thought that experiments of this character should be conducted in the States, at the experimental stations, and for that reason we did not think it proper to make this appropriation.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Let me ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if the same remark would not be applicable to the culture of grass and forage plants and their investigation under the Division of Agrostology, as embodied in this bill on page 14?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know but it would to a certain extent. I am frank to say to the gentleman that very many of these experiments are being duplicated all over the States in the different experimental stations. I do not deny that all this experimental work of the Government, generally speaking, ought to be reorganized and consolidated into one big bureau, so as to avoid this duplication of work.

Mr. TAWNEY. Why do you pick out this small item and make an exception of it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We seek in this small matter to avoid this duplication of work by doing away with the fiber investigation, just as last year we did away with the irrigation investigation.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this is an item which has been in the Agricultural appropriation bill annually since 1888. While Mr. Rusk was Secretary of Agriculture we got it without any fight on the floor of the House. In the last two or three years we have had more or less debate, but anyhow——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I want to correct the gentleman in that respect. Last year there was no debate and no dispute. It was put in the bill and went through. Before that I can not say for certain.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I accept the correction of the gentleman from New York, but hope the committee will not at the present time deprive the incoming Secretary of Agriculture of the opportunity to continue this investigation in case it shall be deemed wise. We are now importing 50,000 tons of fiber of a very coarse character for binding twine, and 150,000 tons of this low-grade fiber for gunnysacks and other similar stuff. We are burning on the Western prairies, just to get rid of it, a million tons of fiber every year, which, if our farmers and our fiber manufacturers only had a little assistance, a little more instruction, they could save.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the gentleman a question right there?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Are you not burning millions of bushels of corn also?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. No; that is a different thing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. You are not burning corn in Kansas and Nebraska?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Oh, they are, where it is cheaper than coal.

Mr. WADSWORTH. You do not hold that the Agricultural Department should teach the people how to grow corn?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. That is a different thing. Flax straw is burned not for fuel, but just to get rid of it. I had a letter from Mr. Worden, the president of the National Fiber Association, only yesterday, and I think the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] has received one like it, in which he says that the progress they have made has been mainly due to following the instructions they have received from this branch of the Agricultural Department. Now, the fallacy which the chairman of the committee [Mr. WADSWORTH] reiterated, that you can not produce seed and at the same time save the fiber of our flax, is being disproved. As a matter of fact, we are raising flax and saving the seed and, to a small extent, the fiber also. Now, instead of sending our money to the Philippine Islands and to Yucatan for sisal and manila fiber, we should use our own flax fiber now going to waste. It is these little wastes that are going on on our farms that make the difference between success and failure. We have had an opportunity, with only this picayune assistance, to learn how to utilize this by-product which is now going to waste.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is not that in support of the point I made a minute ago, that it is the duty of the agricultural experiment stations in the several States to develop the fact whether you can save both the seed and the fiber?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. In the State of Minnesota they have as good an experiment station as you have in the State of New York, and they have done the best they could; but they have no specialist, no expert such as we have here now in the Agricultural Department, who is particularly versed in this subject; hence their experiments have not been of much value in this particular direction.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I suggest that it is cheaper that this special investigation be carried on from one place and the instructions issued from that place to the several experiment stations than it is to carry on original investigations in forty-five different States.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Certainly; nothing could be plainer than that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But in the several States you suit the products to the soil and the climate. What you are able to raise here you may be unable to raise in New Hampshire. Soils and climates differ.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. With a great many exceptions, that is true.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. We do not expect to get in the State experimental stations the collective instruction and scientific information which is issued from this Department at Washington. It is something we can not supply in the several States. I hope the House will not deny us this very small item, which we have been accustomed to getting in the Agricultural appropriation bill for many years, ever since we have had a Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, Mr. Chairman, and the item will be put in the bill just so long as the House will consent to it, and this investigation will go on ad infinitum. I never saw one of them discontinued voluntarily in the world.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] seeks by this amendment to overturn the unanimous report of the Committee on Agriculture, and the explanation of the amendment is found in the statement which he makes that his constituents are interested in the growth of this fiber. I congratulate the constituents of my friend from Minnesota in having so able and so zealous a champion; but I am unwilling, as a taxpayer of the United States, to continue this contribution, which at last goes not to the benefit of the constituents of the gentleman from Minnesota, but to a salary roll amounting to $4,700.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me there.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). That is the cost of administration.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will you just permit me an inquiry there?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not alone the people of Minnesota that are interested in the result of these investigations, nor are we alone in our enjoyment of the accruing results of these investigations. The investigation before our committee within the last month has proven conclusively that almost every State of the Union is interested in the growth and in the development of this fiber industry, so that the benefit comes not to the people of Minnesota alone, but to the people of every State.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, let me reply——

Mr. WADSWORTH. But can not that be best done in each of the experimental stations of the States?

Mr. TAWNEY. It can not be done in the forty-five different experimental stations of the States.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Minnesota evidently did not understand the observation I made at the outset. I stated that this benefit did not go, after all, to the constituents of the gentleman from Minnesota, but it appears that it goes to four persons who are carried on a salary roll, thus costing the Government $4,700 out of $5,000 to administer this appropriation.

Mr. TAWNEY. What are they carried on that roll for?

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, I have not seen in my time here of fourteen years a more expensive administration of public affairs.

Mr. TAWNEY. What are they on that roll for?

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me to make my statement, and then I will yield to him? I desire to make a connected statement, and when I was interrupted I was about to say that this was the most expensive item of administration of public money that has ever been called to my attention anywhere; and the wonder is that they did not take all the $5,000 for administration.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There was another item of $150 or $200 expended on labor.

Mr. DOCKERY. I was astonished to see that any part of the $5,000 got away. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me make my statement, and you can have your own time. It seems that I was in error somewhat, as the Bureau has in fact expended $4,850 of the $5,000 appropriated in the cost of administering this service of the Department of Agriculture.

Now, I am not surprised that the able and zealous gentleman from Minnesota should appear here in behalf of an appropriation, even if it be but $5,000, which goes to the benefit of his own constituents; but I submit that this is an appropriation for the benefit of four people carried on an enormously expensive salary roll in the Department of Agriculture. Now, what do you ask in your amendment? You want—

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the investigations relating to textile fibers indigenous in or adapted to the United States, including their economic growth, cleansing, etc.

Now, here is an investigation begun, according to your own statement, in 1888, to determine the extent to which these fibers could be cultivated in the United States; and yet, after eight years, with an expenditure originally of $10,000 a year, dropped the next year, I believe, to $5,000, and continued at $5,000, this Department, or at least the influences back of the appropriation, are not yet satisfied whether these fibers can be cultivated in the soil of the United States. Now, if it requires eight years, with an expenditure of perhaps $60,000 of the people's money, to enable them to reach no conclusion, I may ask the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota when he expects a judgment to be reached by this Department that will obviate the necessity of further expenditure? Now, this——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DOCKERY. I should like to have five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. This amendment provides also for the purchasing of—

Testing machines and processes for said cleansing and decorticating.

It seems that the only chance to purchase the testing machines under this amendment will be out of the $150 of unexpended balance that is not swept away by this salary roll. It also provides—

For the purchase of materials for said test.

These purchases must be made from this enormous balance of $150 left after these gentlemen shall have exhausted $4,850 of the appropriation on account of salaries. It also provides—

For the purchase of fiber plants and seeds for distribution, propagation, and experiments, and for the labor and expenses incident thereto.

This also must come from this affluent remainder of $150 left after this salary roll shall have satisfied its exorbitant demands.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] did not carry out the threat he made a few minutes ago. If the other investigations authorized in the Agricultural bill are as costly in administration and as seemingly worthless in results as the one now under consideration, I have to regret that the gentleman did not adhere to his announced policy and make a point of order against each of the other investigations authorized in the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the chief complaint of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] is that this appropriation in the past has been expended largely in the payment of salaries. I would like to know if the gentleman expects citizens to work for their Government without any compensation? The results of their labors and investigations have been made known to the people of the United States in the reports and bulletins which have been distributed to those who are interested in the production of these various textile fibers. The legitimate conclusion to be drawn from the argument of the gentleman from Missouri is that the appropriation has really been inadequate for an efficient and thorough investigation, and that a complete investigation would require the expenditure of a great deal more money. We have been able to secure in the past only $5,000 each year, but even with that limited sum results have been accomplished that have been of very material benefit to the people interested in the growth of these fibers.

The gentleman says that this investigation has been going on ever since 1888, and he asks: "When may we expect a final judgment?" Why, Mr. Chairman, this investigation, like nearly all others as they progress, opens up new fields wherein the investigation can be continued with profit to the people, and one reason why we are not now producing more of these fibers in this country is that our people are not familiar with the proper manner of treating them so as to make them available for the production of the various cloths and other products in which they are used at the present time; and as the result of that fact, we are importing an enormous quantity of fibers grown in foreign countries. An inquiry made by the Committee on Ways and Means only a short time ago, shows conclusively that these fibers can be grown in this country. Even jute, hitherto supposed to be exclusively the product of India, has been grown and can be grown, as Mr. Pierce, of St. Louis, has testified, anywhere below Lexington, Mo., and he said he had seen fibers of that class growing there as high as 16 feet. The difficulty has been in the manner of treating them; and it is for that reason that gentlemen here representing States that are interested in the production of these fibers want to have this investigation continued, so as to obtain scientific information for the people as to the proper manner of treating these fibers and making them available for use in manufactures in place of the foreign fibers, which we are now importing in enormous quantities.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota and myself do not differ as to the object to be attained; we simply differ as to the best method of attaining that object. I claim, and it is the opinion of the Committee on Agriculture, that the best way to attain that object is through the experimental stations of the different States, while the gentleman from Minnesota believes that the best way is by making this special appropriation.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, in answer to that, I want to remind the committee that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] made a suggestion a few moments ago which I think conclusively disposes of the view taken by the gentleman from New York. The experimental stations in the States do not have the facilities for carrying on these investigations which the Agricultural Department has.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With an appropriation of $5,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. Even so. In the States we do not have access to the experts that the Government of the United States can command, and besides that, if an investigation conducted by the Agricultural Department can save to each of the forty-five States the expense of an independent investigation of this matter by each State, I say it is our duty to provide for such an investigation by the Department, especially so in view of the fact that we have begun this policy of making investigations. If we are going to make investigations of this kind at all, I am confident that we ought to include this fiber investigation, which, in my judgment, is of far more value to the farmers of this country than the botanical investigation, the entomological investigation, the nutrition investigation, or any of the others which are authorized by the bill as it stands.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] thought I had made a mistake in withdrawing my point of order against the paragraph to which the pending amendment applies. I wish to say that I made that point of order simply to direct the attention of this committee to what seems to me an inconsistency on the part of the Committee on Agriculture. Here comes the gentleman from Minnesota with a proposition which he makes in the interest of the agriculture of his part of the country——

A MEMBER. The agriculture of the whole country.

Mr. BARRETT. Here comes the gentleman from Minnesota with his proposition for an investigation relating to a special form of agriculture, and it is ruled out of order, yet the Committee on Agriculture have submitted a provision in this bill (which of course they would not do unless upon the belief that it was in order) which provides for an inquiry into human food, "edible rations," etc. That is to say, they are going to commission the Agricultural Department to go to the bottom of the ocean and decide what kind of fish are best for human consumption. They were going to make it a part of the duty of the Agricultural Department to consider how salt, a mineral, can best be used in matters of food. They are commissioning the Agricultural Department to do a thing with which properly it has no concern. At the same time they are raising a point of order against an amendment which has to do with a very great part of the agricultural interests of the United States. And in order that, if the point of order should be sustained, we might have a fair consideration, and reject similar propositions made by the committee, I reserved the point of order.

It seems to me that here, as in many other cases, an attempt is made to bring in things which are themselves out of order and at the same time to exclude amendments which ought to be passed upon on their merits. If by doing what I did I contributed in the smallest degree to enabling the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota to be considered by the House, I am very glad that I took that step.

In regard to these other appropriations included in this bill, and to which the gentleman from Missouri objects, I agree with him fully. My opinion about the Agricultural Department is that which is probably entertained by seven-eighths of the members on this floor; but out of my sincere and heart-whole respect for the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], I will refrain from giving my views expression. [Laughter.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. TAWNEY, there were, on a division (called for by Mr. WADSWORTH)—ayes 50, noes 23.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only 17 voting in favor thereof.

So the amendment of Mr. TAWNEY was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Library, Department of Agriculture: Purchase of necessary books, periodicals, and papers, and for expenses incurred in completing imperfect series, and for library fixtures, shelving, library cards, and other material, $5,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move, pro forma, to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of this bill as to the necessity for an appropriation of $5,000 for purchasing books for the library of the Department of Agriculture. We appropriate only $4,000 annually for the purchase of books for the Congressional Library.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The library of the Agricultural Department is to-day probably one of the best technical libraries in the world. This appropriation of $5,000 is simply to keep it up—to provide it with the latest publications, to repair the shelves, to prepare library cards, pay postage, etc.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman state the amount which was actually expended last year for the purchase of books for this library?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have here a statement of the whole expenditure, but not an exact statement of the amount expended for books. I should say, however, that the bulk of the expenditure was for books.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the pro forma amendment will be regarded as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Publications, Department of Agriculture, Division of Publications: For the preparation, printing, illustration, publication, indexing, and distribution of documents, bulletins, and reports, $65,000, of which sum $40,000 shall be available for the preparation and printing of farmers' bulletins, which shall be adapted to the interest of the people of the different sections of the country, an equal proportion of two-thirds of which shall be delivered to or sent out under the addressed franks furnished by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall notify Senators and Representatives of the title and character of each such bulletin, and also of any other publication of the Department of Agriculture not sent to the folding rooms of the Senate and House, with the total number to which each Senator, Representative, and Delegate may be entitled for distribution; for the pay of artists, draftsmen, and engravers, and of proof readers and indexers when necessary; for the purchase of tools, instruments, and artist's material; for printing proofs, charts, and maps; for drawings, engravings, photographs, paintings, lithographs, other illustrations, and electrotypes, and for traveling expenses when necessary, $20,000; for labor, paper, envelopes, gum, twine, and other necessary materials, $5,000; in all, $65,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a misprint in this paragraph. I move to correct it by striking out "$20,000" in the third line from the last and inserting "twenty" before "five" in the next line to the last.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I suggest also that after the word "necessary" we should strike out the semicolon and insert the word "and;" so as to read: "when necessary, and for labor," and so forth.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I accept the gentleman's suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the phraseology of the paragraph will be amended as suggested by the gentleman from New York.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. STEELE. Before we proceed further with the bill, I desire consent to go back to the previous paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment now pending, which the Clerk will read.

The amendment of Mr. STEWART of New Jersey was read, as follows:

In line 24, page 17, after the word "distribution," insert "and on the face of the envelope inclosing said bulletins shall be printed the title and character of each bulletin contained therein."

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. The difficulty at present is, there being upon the envelope no printed description of its contents, we are obliged to destroy the envelope in order to ascertain what it contains.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a very proper amendment. I assent to it with pleasure on behalf of the committee.

The amendment of Mr. STEWART of New Jersey was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the amendment inserted at the top of page 17, a provision enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the investigations of the Department in reference to fibrous plants. I ask unanimous consent to recur to this amendment, and offer an additional amendment providing that not more than $3,000 of this sum shall be used for salaries.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment with great pleasure.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to state that of the $5,000 heretofore appropriated, all of it, with the exception of $150, has been expended for salaries. Now, it seems to me that the present appropriation ought to be limited in that direction.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that this administration has just been overwhelmingly approved by the committee.

Mr. STEELE. That may be; but I would ask the gentleman from Missouri if he does not think it would be wise for us to provide that this expenditure should be limited as I suggest?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly. If the money had gone for the purpose originally intended—to ascertain whether or not certain fibers can be raised to advantage in the United States—I should not have objected in the first instance; but, as a matter of fact, all of it went to pay salaries here in the city of Washington to employees of the Bureau, with the exception of about $150. But, as I have just suggested, that has been accepted and disposed of and ratified by an overwhelming approval of the committee.

Mr. STEELE. Well, that is a matter that I desire to cure by the amendment, and I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HULL in the chair). The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to recur to the amendment inserted on page 17, and to insert a proviso that not more than $3,000 of the appropriation for the purpose contemplated shall be used for salaries. Is there objection?

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am not intending to interpose objection, but simply desire to call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] who opposed the original amendment has left the Chamber, and I think perhaps that during his absence this matter should be withheld.

Mr. STEELE. If the gentleman from Minnesota objects when he returns, I shall ask to have the action reconsidered.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HARTMAN. I shall not object.

Mr. STEELE. Then I ask unanimous consent that the amendment I have suggested, "that not more than $3,000 of this sum shall be expended for salaries," shall be incorporated in the amendment already adopted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses, Department of Agriculture: Stationery, purchase of blank books, twine, paper, gum, dry goods, soap, brushes, brooms, mats, oils, paints, glass, lumber, hardware, ice, fuel and lights, freight, express charges, advertising, telegraphing, purchasing supplies, and washing towels; the purchase, subsistence, and care of horses; the purchase and repair of harness; the purchase and repair of vehicles; expenses of sales of old material; payment of duties on imported articles, and the Department of Agriculture's proportionate share of the dispatch agent in New York, not to exceed $400; actual traveling expenses while on business of the Department, and other miscellaneous supplies and expenses not otherwise provided for and necessary for the practical and efficient work of the Department, $30,000.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee what is the amount appropriated for the contingent expenses in the last appropriation bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will state to the gentleman that there is a net decrease in this bill of $5,000. Last year the contingent expense was $35,000.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. How did you come to the conclusion that $5,000 ought to be deducted this year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I went to the Department and looked over the vouchers and found an unexpended balance that satisfied me they could get along with this sum. They have not used the full amount of the appropriation heretofore.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And you think that it is now none too large?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think this is as much of a reduction as they can stand.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I wanted to offer an amendment, if it met the approval of the gentleman, to make the amount $10,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think that would be inadequate. I think the matter has been carefully considered and the money has been economically spent, and while there is an unexpended balance on hand there is no room, in my judgment, for a further decrease.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What does the Secretary do with the unexpended balances of this appropriation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The unexpended balance is returned into the Treasury.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It does not go for salaries?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if it would not be wise to accept the amendment "that horses and vehicles," in this paragraph, shall be used for "official purposes only." That proviso is carried in every other appropriation bill, but to my surprise I do not find it in this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection to that amendment, although I do not think the use of such vehicles and horses is authorized in the Department, or that there is any abuse of the right to use them.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly not, and I am not intimating that there is. But this provision is carried in all of the other appropriation bills; in the legislative bill notably, which carries provisions for other horses and vehicles for the various Departments, and for the use of the heads of the Departments. So far as I know there is no abuse of the appropriation. I therefore do not wish it to be understood that I intimate that there is any abuse in this Department. But out of abundant caution I think it wise to incorporate such an amendment; and therefore, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in the third line, on page 20, by adding after the word "horses," the words "for official purposes only."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I accept that.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then, after that amendment is acted upon, I will offer another one, and then yield to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY], who desires the floor.

The amendment proposed by Mr. DOCKERY was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. In line 5, after the word "vehicles," I move the addition of the same words, "for official purposes only."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 5, after the word "vehicles," insert "for official purposes only."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I accept that amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee, a question in regard to the paragraph which is just about to be read, in order that attention may be directed to it, because I understand that from another quarter some amendment is to be offered. This is one of the large appropriations in the bill—$120,000 for the distribution of seeds. The question I desire to ask of the chairman is what his personal opinion is as to the amount of benefit that is derived by the agricultural community from that large expenditure of money? I should be glad if he would inform the House what his opinion is, as a practical farmer, upon that question. [Laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to interpose my personal opinion against the overwhelming sentiment of this House.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that there is a good deal of sentiment which agrees with what I believe to be his personal views. I think those members who are not practical farmers are entitled to the opinions of those who are; and we shall be glad to get the views of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] on the question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not want to open the subject of seeds, but since the gentleman has asked me the question, I am not afraid to answer it. In my own humble opinion, the seeds should be distributed through the experimental stations, and not through the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. HULICK. Not through the members of Congress, either.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

Division of seeds, purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For the purchase, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, and expense of labor, transportation, paper, twine, gum, printing, postal cards, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same, and to be distributed in localities adapted to their culture, $120,000. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, empowered, directed, and required to expend the said sum in the purchase, propagation, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, and is authorized, empowered, directed, and required to expend not less than the sum of $100,000 in the purchase at public or private sale of valuable seeds, the best he can obtain, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated; and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This time, Mr. Chairman, I think I shall not make any remarks that will call for replies from any of the representatives of silver on this floor, as I shall confine myself strictly to the matters pertaining to this appropriation bill.

Mr. HULICK. One moment, if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] will yield. I have an amendment to offer to that section.

Mr. BROMWELL. Well, I have one that I want to offer further along, and I take this means——

Mr. HULICK. You have only made a formal amendment so far, to strike out the last word. I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROMWELL. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] declines to yield to his colleague.

Mr. BROMWELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say at the beginning that I represent a district made up largely of the city of Cincinnati, and that the population of the district outside of the city amounts to about 25,000 or 30,000 people, a large portion of whom are engaged in agriculture. I think that this provision of the agricultural bill that pretends to appropriate money year after year for the distribution of so-called rare and valuable seeds and plants is a perversion of the public money from the legitimate purpose for which it was originally intended when it was ingrafted into the Agricultural appropriation bill, for it has degenerated into the lowest form of patronage by the members of this House.

There is no question that the original provision of this bill, which provided for the purchase of rare and valuable plants and seeds, and for their dissemination, was a perfectly proper one. The farmers of one section of the country find that after propagating seeds of certain kinds for a time, they run out, become inferior in results, and that by exchanging seeds with other localities they can get better crops and better results in the production of the various grains and vegetables which they raise. There are many valuable plants grown in foreign countries having temperatures, soils, and surroundings similar to those of the United States, which can be introduced into this country with profit. Undoubtedly the intention of this provision of the bill was to give an opportunity for the exchange of the seeds of one portion of the country for those of another, and to introduce from foreign countries the seeds of valuable plants that were not indigenous to the United States. That has degenerated, Mr. Chairman, into a mere purchase of the commonest seeds that are raised in the various localities of the United States and the disposition of them in the same neighborhood in which they are produced. Previous to this year the seeds had been bought by the Agricultural Department, examined by them, put up into packages, and sent out. I understand that this year the seeds are bought in different localities and sent to the constituents of the members of this House from the seed merchant who is nearest to the district represented by the member.

Now, what is going to be the result? The seeds raised on one farm will be taken by the seed man in that locality, will be sold to the Government at a higher price than he could get from his neighbor, will go through the expensive process of being carried by mail, and finally will land on the adjoining farm as a rare and valuable seed.

Now, apart from any criticism that I have to make on this, I would like to see this whole provision thrown out of the bill, or, at any rate, relegated where it properly belongs, to the experiment stations. I am in favor of striking this provision out of this bill entirely. Assuming that this House is going to vote as it has heretofore, possibly, for a continuance of this evil, I have an amendment which I shall offer at the proper time, and which I will send up and have read in my time, and will offer it at the proper place, to correct some of the evils of the present distribution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after the word "represents," in line 19, page 22, the words:

"And in determining the number of packets of flower, vegetable, and other seeds, respectively, which shall be placed in the quota of each Senator, Representative, or Delegate, the Secretary shall be controlled by the written instructions filed with him by such member at any time prior to the 1st day of May each year, indicating the relative proportions of the flower, vegetable, and other seeds which said member desires in his quota. And the Secretary shall furnish to each such member either his entire quota or such part thereof as he may desire in sealed packets containing the names of seeds contained therein, printed upon the cover, together with a sufficient number of unsealed envelopes, with properly printed blank frank slips attached thereto for inclosing and mailing said seed packets. If any member shall fail to express his wish in regard to the various kinds of seeds to be apportioned in his quota before the 1st day of May, the Secretary may apportion the same to said member according to his own judgment. The provisions of this amendment shall apply to the distributions succeeding the 1st day of May, 1897."

Mr. BROMWELL. Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BROMWELL. I will speak to the amendment when I offer it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the question is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BROMWELL. It is not offered yet.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I beg pardon.

Mr. HULICK. I offer the following amendment to the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, in line 15, page 20, after the word "seeds," the following:

"Such as are rare and uncommon in the country, or such as can be made more profitable by frequent changes from one part of our country to another."

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Chairman, I have copied the exact language of the law as it now is in regard to the character of the seeds, of the bulbs, and plants that the Secretary is required to purchase and distribute.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I suggest to the gentleman that the word "rare" was the very trouble that we had a year ago? The Secretary absolutely refused to purchase any seed ordered by the House.

Mr. HULICK. And the Secretary did right.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. But the House did not think so.

Mr. HULICK. But the law directed him to do that very thing.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The law is changed now.

Mr. HULICK. This is the law as I am reading it now.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman permit me? I understand the gentleman refers to section 527 of the Revised Statutes. That has been amended. It is not the law at present.

Mr. HULICK. It was changed in the appropriation bill last year.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It was changed by a joint resolution passed by the two Houses.

Mr. HULICK. I do not understand that that statute is repealed, modified, or affected in any way by any statute since that enactment.

Mr. McRAE. I have the amendment here. The section has been amended so as to read as follows. Just read that.

Mr. MOODY. It has been amended.

Mr. HULICK. Is this in an appropriation bill?

Mr. McRAE. It is in the appropriation bill. It is an amendment of the section.

Mr. MOODY. It is the same provision that is in this appropriation bill.

Mr. McRAE. The word "rare" is not in it at all.

Mr. HULICK. It was not an amendment to the regular statute. I understand it was an amendment to the appropriation bill, and is not the law governing this matter.

Mr. McRAE. I proposed that amendment myself. It was a change of the law, and to make it read as directed there. It has become the law and is the permanent law.

Mr. HULICK. Well, all I have to say about its being the law is, I will read the section as it is claimed to have been adopted.

That section 527 of the Revised Statutes be amended so that it will read as follows:

"SEC. 527. The purchase and distribution of vegetable, field, and flower seeds, plants, shrubs, vines, bulbs, and cuttings shall be of the freshest and best obtainable varieties and adapted to general cultivation."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is just the language of the present bill.

Mr. HULICK. That is the language of the present bill, as I understand it. Now, I was not aware that that was incorporated in the general law. It was a part of the appropriation bill of last year.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is the law of the present bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. HULICK. I will withdraw my amendment, as I now understand the statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his amendment.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. On lines 18 and 19 I find this language.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What page?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Page 20.

To be distributed in localities adapted to their culture.

Is that the law now?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is, sir.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Has the gentleman ever investigated to ascertain whether there has been any attempt made during the last two years to live up to the law in the distribution of seeds?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have never heard any complaint that the law was not lived up to.

Mr. NORTHWAY. But is it not true that seeds are put up at remote points from members' homes, and members are not permitted to know what seeds they are getting, or whether they are fitted for their particular localities or not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. A certain number of vegetable seeds and a certain number of flower seeds are purchased at different points and distributed from those points.

Mr. NORTHWAY. But is there anybody who undertakes to ascertain whether they are adapted to the localities to which they are distributed?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. You have to trust the Department as to that.

Mr. NORTHWAY. So far as I am concerned, I am sure there has been no such attempt. Certain seeds distributed in my district last year were wholly unfit for the locality.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The seeds are contracted for at different points by the Department, and the seeds bought in each locality are distributed in that general locality; for example, seeds bought at Minneapolis are distributed in that section of country.

Mr. NORTHWAY. But the seedsman fixes them up to suit himself.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that he receives instructions from headquarters.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that his remarks suggest one of the reasons why I believe in the local experimental stations.

Mr. NORTHWAY. But ought not the law as it stands to be lived up to by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly. I can only say that the seeds sent to my district were satisfactory.

Mr. FLETCHER. And I can say that those that went to my district were satisfactory, and the people want a lot more of them this year.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, my farmer friend from Cincinnati [Mr. BROMWELL] complains about the character of the seeds that are furnished. If he has any more seeds that he desires to distribute, bad as they are, I should be glad to accept any portion of his quota that he may choose to give me.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman desires to exchange his flower seeds for agricultural seeds, I will make the trade with him right now.

Mr. STEELE. We have a good many people of æsthetic tastes in Indiana, and we are not trading off our flower seeds, but I should be glad to accept any agricultural seeds that the gentleman has to spare. I look upon the distribution of seeds as one of the most useful functions performed by the Department.

But, Mr. Chairman, when it comes to giving information to Congress, the Department of Agriculture shows itself to be utterly incompetent. Take, for instance, castor beans, of which gentlemen have heard before. [Laughter.] On the 22d of January I had a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, which was read to the House last evening, transmitting some information which the Statistical Bureau of the Treasury supplied as to the number of bushels of castor beans imported into this country. It is obvious, however, that in order to find out what the consumption was, it was necessary to ascertain what had been our own production. At the same time that I asked for information from the Treasury Department I addressed my inquiry to the Department of Agriculture. I was informed by the Statistician of that Department that for want of an appropriation for sufficient clerical force he was unable to supply the desired information. And now I want to call attention to the fact that, in reply to a resolution of the House, the Secretary of Agriculture says in respect to the information which a member of the Ways and Means Committee could not obtain on the ground that the Department had not sufficient clerical force that the Department is unable to furnish it because it has not got the information. I send to the desk a letter which I ask to have read.

The letter was read, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1897.

SIR: It is impossible to comply with the resolution of the honorable House of Representatives passed January 28 requesting this Department "to inform the House how many bushels of castor beans have been produced in the United States each year since 1890 to 1896, inclusive, and how many bushels were exported each year within said period." The Statistical Division of the Agricultural Department has no data whence the desired information can be correctly collated. But it is respectfully suggested that the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of the United States Treasury Department may probably supply such facts and figures relative to castor-oil beans as the honorable House of Representatives requires.

Very respectfully, yours,

J. STERLING MORTON, Secretary.

Hon. THOMAS BRACKETT REED,
Speaker of House of Representatives.

Mr. STEELE. I call attention to the fact that this great Department of our Government is not able to tell the House of Representatives what is our home production of so important an article as castor beans, an article on which a duty of 50 cents a bushel is paid and of which we imported into the United States last year 277,231 bushels.

Mr. DOCKERY. Are you going to reduce the duty under the next tariff bill?

Mr. STEELE. The tariff bill will be here for consideration in due time. [Laughter.] This letter of the Secretary is a confession on the part of the Department that it has no information on this important subject on which the House of Representatives has asked to be informed.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 527. The purchase and distribution of vegetable, field, and flower seeds, plants, shrubs, vines, bulbs, and cuttings shall be of the freshest and best obtainable varieties and adapted to general cultivation.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out that paragraph as it stands. I suppose everybody will agree that it ought to be stricken out. This morning I informed the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, that I intended to make the point of order against the paragraph that it changed existing law, but I learn from him that by the law of last year the statute was amended so as to read exactly as it does in this bill. Now, everybody will agree that it is entirely useless to continue to amend the statute year after year in the same way. It will only make confusion in the session laws, and I think that nobody will object to this being stricken out.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am willing that it shall go out.

Mr. MOODY. Now that I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, let me say that I heard with a good deal of pleasure some of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio as to the distribution of seeds, but I confess I was not impressed with the magnitude of the reform which his amendment proposes, although I will not form a final judgment upon it until he shall have had an opportunity to explain it fully. Last year I made some remarks on this subject of the distribution of seeds. I do not propose to repeat them to-day, but I still entertain the views which I expressed last year, and while I am on the floor I wish to pay a passing word of respect to the biggest humbug of all the humbugs that we see here in Washington. [Laughter.] I am sure that very many members of the House share my views. I want to call attention again to the step, and the effect of the step, which was taken in the appropriation bill of last year. The law as it stood at that time provided for the purchase and distribution of seeds by the Department of Agriculture, confining it to "rare and uncommon seeds" and to such as "could be made more profitable by frequent changes from one part of our country to another."

Now, that was an intelligible ground of procedure—an intelligible ground upon which to appropriate money for the general benefit of agriculture. We have now departed from that, and we propose a distribution of "the freshest and best obtainable varieties of seeds adapted to general cultivation," and these are to be distributed per capita among the members of the House.

Mr. STEELE. Is not the gentleman aware that the Secretary of Agriculture has admitted that he was unable to make that law operative because he could not find any rare seeds?

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] I will say that if that statement was not true it is not entitled to respect; if it was true that the Secretary could no longer obtain any seeds which came within the spirit of the law (which had been on the statute book for so many years), then he ought to stop the distribution of seeds.

Mr. STEELE. Or we ought to have a new Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MOODY. Oh, the present Secretary of Agriculture ought not to be a burning issue. He has only about twenty days of active official life remaining, and then we shall have a Secretary with whom we can all sympathize. And I trust his view will accord with that of the present Secretary on one point—that is, as to the distribution of seeds.

One more word and I am done. After this subject was called to our attention last year, I took pains to converse with some of my own constituents who are engaged in agriculture—and I have a great many constituents who are so engaged, for some of the best farming land in the State of Massachusetts is within my district—and I found that without any exception, or perhaps I ought to say almost without an exception, they thought that this distribution of seeds was a waste of public money, a humbug, and a disgrace to the legislation of the Congress of the United States. I found this view joined in by the representative agricultural societies, not only of my own district, but of the State of Massachusetts. I believe that we make a mistake if we think that the farmers wish a continuance of an appropriation of this kind. We must not forget that in addition to the sum here appropriated it costs the Post-Office Department $100,000 to make the distribution.

I should be glad, Mr. Chairman, to vote for an appropriation of $120,000, the sum named in this bill, for the improvement of our methods of agriculture, for the distribution of seeds where they can be distributed with the effect of helping the general interests of agriculture throughout the country. But I am not willing to vote for the division of a few seeds among the members of this House to help them in this pitiful way among their constituency. Why, Mr. Chairman, after we passed the bill of last year I received, as I suppose other members of this House received, a letter from the contractor who furnished the Government with these seeds, telling me that he would sell me certain duplicate amounts of seeds if I desired them. I was not in the business of buying seeds, so I did not reply to the letter. But I made a rough calculation, and I found that, as nearly as I could understand, the quota which would be allotted to me or any other member of the House under this provision of law could be bought for about $90, so that all this appropriation, or a large part of this appropriation, of $120,000 is to allow me, as one member, to distribute $90 worth of seeds which my constituents can buy at any seed store in the land—to distribute $90 worth of seeds among 175,000 people.

Mr. MONDELL. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment already pending. Does the gentleman rise to oppose that amendment?

Mr. MONDELL. I move to strike out the last line.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with the passage of an Agricultural appropriation bill it may not be altogether improper to discuss briefly the condition of the agricultural classes of our nation. That there is widespread discontent among the agriculturists of our country, and that there is just cause for feelings of uneasiness and even alarm among the agriculturists in view of the depressed markets and low prices for their products, no one will deny. It is in the application of a remedy for this condition of things that men differ. During the heated campaign recently closed the opposing parties, with minor differences of details and various local explanations, held in the main to two propositions; the one great party holding that agricultural depression and low prices was resultant upon the practical establishment and maintenance in this country and the world at large of the single gold standard of values, reducing the amount of money of final redemption, it was argued, to an extent that increased the purchasing power of each unit; the other great party more generally accounted for this condition by the argument of overproduction, or, perhaps we might say more truthfully, of underconsumption of agricultural products. The great increase in the world's output of agricultural staples, they argued, had the effect of lowering prices all over the world, while a system of tariff laws which had the effect of depriving a considerable portion of our population of employment at remunerative wages decreased to a vast extent the market at home for the products of the farm.

Now, I am of the opinion that not one, but both of these great causes are instrumental in bringing about the low price of agricultural products the world over. There can be no doubt in the mind of anyone who believes in the theory of a bimetallic monetary basis that the general adoption by the world of one metal as a monetary standard has some effect upon the general level of prices. In fact, I believe that even those who honestly believe that it is impossible to maintain an unvarying ratio between two metals with unlimited free coinage for both, who have studied the question carefully, will admit that the transition from the bimetallic standard, imperfect though it was, of twenty-five years ago to an absolute gold basis necessarily brought about a readjustment of values, their argument being that true bimetallism is impracticable and that the world will be vastly better off when we give up all attempts to maintain two metals as interchangeable standards of value, though there may be some loss to creditors in the transition. On the other hand, there is much force in the argument that improved methods and the opening of new fields, resulting in vastly increased production of agricultural staples, has, under the inevitable workings of the law of supply and demand, decreased the value of these staples as represented in monetary units, while the disastrous consequences of tariff changes by the increased importation of foreign goods, and the consequent closing of American mills and factories, have been demonstrated beyond the possibility of successful refutation by the vastly decreased consumption of agricultural staples in our own nation, and it is idle to attempt to account for the reduction in the consumption of wheat, corn, cotton, and wool by our people, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars annually, on any other hypothesis except that the consumer has found his ability to purchase vastly curtailed by reason of an enormous reduction in the aggregate of wages paid in mills and factories consequent upon their entire suspension or reduction of working hours.

Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of the campaign which has just closed many Republicans believing in the theory of bimetallism, especially those dwelling west of the Missouri River, where bimetallic agitation has been most intense, found themselves confronted with a serious problem. The declaration of their party in its platform on this question, as it was interpreted by the people of their region—as, in fact, it was interpreted by many in the East to whom the party has owed nothing in the past and from whom, in my opinion, it can expect little in the carrying out of its principles and policies in the future—an interpretation that this declaration was really intended as an avowal of intention to perpetuate the single gold standard of values, subjected them to the misrepresentation of political enemies and the criticism of party allies. On the other hand, they were confronted by a declaration in the platform of the opposing party with a proposition on the financial question, radical as viewed separate and apart from the other declarations of that platform, and dangerous in the extreme when coupled with the other propositions therein set forth. Those Republicans who believe that it may be possible for this nation, alone and unsupported, to establish and maintain a stable bimetallic basis with a fixed ratio, must appreciate the tremendous character of the difficulties to be overcome in the inauguration and maintenance of such an independent system, and the far-reaching and disastrous consequences to all classes if an attempt toward such an establishment shall fail of the accomplishment of its purpose; that is, the establishment of a true bimetallic basis at a fixed ratio and with the two metals freely interchangeable.

Having in view these facts, many Republicans of this class in the West who have followed the standard of the party in years past viewed with alarm the declaration in the platform of the opposition on the financial question, especially coupled as it was with a declaration virtually in favor of free trade. We felt that if this nation alone can accomplish so stupendous an undertaking as the closing of the wide gap between the commercial value of the two metals now existing to an equality at the ratio proposed, at least we must avail ourselves of all of the agencies which tend to make us independent of foreign nations. To prate of independence in finance while favoring policies that would make us absolutely dependent and defenseless in trade, was, in the opinion of many Republican bimetallists, the sheerest hypocrisy and demagogism. To talk of this nation establishing and maintaining a system which greatly overvalued the silver of the world while advocating a policy of trade that reduces American exports and increases American imports, which nearly wipes out the vast trade balances in favor of this nation which have existed under proper tariff laws and compels us annually to go down into the coffers of the nation to pay hundreds of millions of annual interest charges, is equivalent to suggesting that an Atlantic liner may successfully cross the ocean without propeller or sails.

If we may as a nation, failing in an international agreement on this great question, initiate legislation looking to the establishment of true bimetallism, and even accomplish that, from my point of view, desirable result (and I believe that under proper conditions this may be accomplished), it will only be by using every weapon and every resource which our situation and national conditions have armed us with. To surrender the great principle of reciprocity whereby we may make it advantageous for a considerable number of the nations of the earth to join us in financial legislation; to surrender the great principle of protection to American labor and American industry, the operation of which renders us largely independent of foreign nations, and which, contradictory as the statement may seem, increases the balance of trade in our favor and brings to our shores the flood of yellow coin which the nations of Europe are seeking to hoard, and then to plunge, thus unarmed, into that most fierce and gigantic struggle, the battle of the standards, would be equivalent to an army charging a height bristling with hostile guns and bayonets and inaugurating that charge by throwing down all weapons offensive and defensive. To deprive ourselves of the armor and breastplate of reciprocity and the batteries of a protective tariff and then charge recklessly into what is admitted by those who favor independent bimetallism to be one of the most stupendous undertakings of history would be political suicide, lacking the halo of martyrdom, for it would not only mean ruin to those who led the charge, but irretrievable losses to millions of their fellow-countrymen.

But, Mr. Chairman, a considerable number of Republicans, honored in Republican councils, raised to their positions as much by Republican organizations as by their own worth, advocates in the past of all the great policies and principles of the Republican party, saw fit at the opening of the last great campaign to cross the Rubicon, not to engage the enemy, but to join his forces. These men must sacrifice many of those who had stood by them in their past history; sacrifice the organization which had defended them in the past, and, overlooking the conditions which I have briefly pointed out, and many others, ally themselves, at least temporarily, with the opposition. The motives of these men I have no disposition to impugn. They were largely from the region in which I dwell. Their personal friendship I value, and their honesty of purpose I acknowledge. But, Mr. Chairman, there is one feature of their action which I view in a different light from that in which it is viewed by some. Sincere in their convictions, no doubt, I can not bring myself to the acknowledgment of any extraordinary moral courage involved in their action. True, all men hesitate in sundering, even temporarily, ties which bind them to old associations. The tender cords of association and recollection bind them with a power that can not be appreciated until the breaking of those bonds sever them from party ties and party affiliations. But as for moral courage, it would have required vastly more to have braved the storm of denunciation of enemies and the infinitely more cutting sting of misrepresentation and covert suspicion of friends by remaining with their party than it required to break party ties. The opposition in the States from which these men hailed arrogated to themselves the claim of a holy and lofty patriotism, and in their self-laudation claimed the crusader's devotion to a holy cause, unactuated by selfish or unworthy motives. They temporarily lauded to the skies every man who left the Republican party, and enlarged to the seventh heaven the virtues of those who stood high in the councils of our party and left it to sit at the feet of the Gamaliels of the Populistic and Democratic creed. These men were loudly proclaimed as true, unselfish, devoted patriots, unaffected by any personal consideration, worthy of all praise, entitled to all recognition.

Alas, how have the scales fallen from the eyes of many of those Republicans who joined the ranks of the opposition in an honest belief, no doubt, that they were thereby best serving their country and their constituency! Nowhere in any of those States where the Republican organization was used to further the interest of the candidates of the Democratic and Populistic parties has there been aught but treachery and deceit practiced upon the Republicans who made it possible for these creatures to wield the weapons of their decapitation. Antenational convention pledges were carried out by the opposition certainly where there was no way in which they could be avoided, but wherever the silver Republicans had not the "immortal cinch" the cloven hoof of their late allies has been exhibited and the forked tongue of venom, slander, and misrepresentation has been used to tear down from their high estate the men who helped them to win their victories. The wires bring from the State of Idaho the news of the defeat, by the Populist and Democratic legislators of that State, for the United States Senate, of a man who provided the men who defeated him with the weapons by means of which they accomplished his downfall. If there was any man in this broad land, from the standpoint of the Democratic-Populistic combination, who was entitled to the earnest, hearty, cordial, and sincere support of that combination, it was the very man whom they have but just defeated in his contest for a seat in the United States Senate.

It will be claimed in extenuation of the perfidy of the men who defeated DUBOIS that the Republican national committee was working against his reelection. Can any man wonder that the Republican national committee should work against the election of a man whom the Democratic national committee and every member thereof from the chairman down claimed to be moving heaven and earth to elect? And they who make this excuse in extenuation should remember that by so doing they are not only branding the members of the combination in the legislature who voted to defeat the election of a silver Republican to the Senate as guilty not only of the heinous crime of ingratitude, but open to a suspicion of exercising their high prerogatives influenced by a money consideration. Let it be remembered DUBOIS was defeated by the men of the silver combination belonging to the Populist and Democratic parties who held their position by virtue of the stand he took in the campaign.

FRED DUBOIS, whose eloquent tongue and active brain made him a power for the accomplishment of results for which the silver combination was made, was thrown down, unhorsed, defeated by the men he made in favor of a man professedly lacking in all the qualifications that would render him of service to the cause which these hypocrites claim to have at heart. The dispatches this morning bring us the news that the gentleman who succeeds him will go into the Democratic caucus of the Senate of the United States, and thus is the Republican State of Idaho turned over, boots, body, and breeches, to a minority representing less than 10 per cent of her total vote, and thus is the true animus of the campaign for personal aggrandizement under the guise of devotion to the silver cause fully and completely exposed to the execration of the nation.

[During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, when Mr. MONDELL's five minutes had expired, Mr. BLUE asked unanimous consent that Mr. MONDELL's time be extended; and there was no objection. When Mr. MONDELL's second five minutes had expired, his time was further extended by unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. LIVINGSTON.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is withdrawn. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. I understand that my amendment is assented to by the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. WADSWORTH] why this clause was inserted in the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a repetition of the clause which was in the bill of last year except as to the amount.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I so understood.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the gentleman understand that the clause which was inserted in the bill last year repealed the old law?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes, sir. And upon that ground you are willing to let this go ont?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; it is repealed by the law of last year.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MOODY, it was agreed to.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to offer the amendment I send to the desk. I will state that I intended to offer it at the end of line 13, but that line being stricken out, I offer it now to follow line 7 on page 21.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed and required to have delivered all seeds at the Department of Agriculture in Washington, and to send out the same to Members and Representatives from the seed department direct.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I reserve the point of order upon that amendment. It is new legislation, and involves an additional expenditure, but I will withhold it if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Let me suggest to the gentleman that the same point is embodied in the next paragraph, in line 29——

Mr. TALBERT. I think there is no line 29 on that page.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Between lines 19 and 21, where it is provided that these seeds shall be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or will be directed and mailed by the Department upon their request.

Mr. TALBERT. But that does not make it specific enough.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. All of the seeds you are entitled to for distribution will be sent to you unless you order differently, under that provision.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman can order his seeds to be sent wherever he pleases. But the point of order is pending.

Mr. TALBERT. My object is to send these seeds first to the Department and reestablish the Seed Division in the Bureau as was established heretofore at that place.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. But I do not think the amendment of the gentleman covers that point.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I see no reason, Mr. Chairman, for the change proposed.

Mr. TALBERT. It is to prevent confusion in the distribution of seeds. We do not know now, when we send our orders to the Department, whether the slightest attention is paid to our requests. In the event of the adoption of this amendment we will know specifically whether the seeds are sent as we require them to be sent. If they are sent from the Department we can see the particular kinds of seeds also that are distributed and know whether they are suitable or otherwise.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is a matter that should be left entirely to the Department. It can be best controlled there. If the gentleman from South Carolina wants the seeds sent to him, it is only necessary for him to so specify, and his request will be complied with.

Mr. TALBERT. But my object is first to have the seeds sent to the Department, where they can be put up in packages, and can be distributed from that point.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The effect would be to spend just that much more money in freight, and you would get that much less seed.

Mr. CLARDY. If the gentleman will permit, me the reason they were not so sent is that there is no place sufficiently large in the Department where these seeds can be received and properly handled.

Mr. TALBERT. That objection did not apply heretofore. There was ample room until this modern, advanced idea came up, and the places in the Bureau were abolished. My idea is to reestablish the Seed Division, and to give to that department the same number of clerks as heretofore, instead of putting this matter out in the hands of private individuals all through the country, and cutting ourselves off from all opportunity of knowing exactly what our constituents are getting when we give orders for seeds——

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman permit a question? I have in my hand a statement from the Department of Agriculture with reference to this very subject, and will read the exact text of the language it contains. It says:

The same amount of money secures now nearly 100 per cent more seed than under the ancient methods of buying in bulk and employing each year skilled labor to put the seeds in packages, which had to be furnished and printed at the Department.

So I do not see the advantage of changing back to the old system.

Mr. TALBERT. I do not mean to say that the seed are not sent out when the order is given. I do not mean to impugn the action of anybody. But we can not tell where the seed are sent or how they are sent or what are sent when our orders are delivered. We can not retain the proper supervision over the Bureau.

Mr. MOODY. And let me suggest further to the gentleman that under the old law and method of distribution the percentage of salaries to the total cost was 58, while the percentage of seed sent out in proportion to the total expenditure was but 42 per cent.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. And let me suggest in this connection that the seeds sent out now are 100 per cent worse off than they were ever before.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I deny that statement most positively. The seeds are just as good, if not better, than ever. In fact, I think the seeds distributed last year were the best that were ever distributed by the Department.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. They were of inferior quality and not good in any sense of the word.

Mr. TALBERT. We had better keep the matter within our own hands, so that we can know exactly what we are doing. That is the object of the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I think the present arrangement is the best that could be devised. It would be rather a dangerous experiment to change it now.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I would suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that if he expects action upon his amendment, it should go further, and provide that these seeds should be put up in packages for distribution.

Mr. TALBERT. That, of course, would be covered by the amendment. The Department would have to put them up, no matter how they receive them, in suitable packages for distribution.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I made the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What point of order does the gentleman make?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That it increases the expenditure and changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any law on the subject?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is the law as it has been passed heretofore in the appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TRACEY. I move to strike out the last word. I believe that this amendment ought to be adopted, and the reason I believe it can be stated in a very few words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri that the amendment is not before the committee. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] made a point of order against it, and the Chair sustained it.

Mr. TRACEY. I should like to be permitted to make the statement that I was going to make, because it is important, it seems to me, if this seed distribution is to go on, and I hope it will, as it ought to. I had my quota of field and garden seeds sent to my room for distribution, because I preferred it that way.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Last year?

Mr. TRACEY. No, I mean this year.

Mr. MORSE. You could not do it this year.

Mr. TRACEY. It was done this year. There was one sack of those seeds counted. There were 110 packages in the sack. I received 45 sacks, and they were all apparently equally filled. I should have had 8,000 packages of field and garden seeds. Count them up and you will see that instead of receiving 8,000 I received a little less than 5,000, assuming that the sacks averaged alike, and my own opinion is, in spite of the fact that a Government inspector is at these several places from which the seeds are shipped, that there is no counting done of the packages put into the sacks at all, that they are just shoveled up and dumped into the sacks, and when the sacks are apparently filled in that way they are tied up and shipped; so that instead of getting the seeds that we are entitled to, under the distribution, we get a little more than half of what we are entitled to. At least, that has been my experience.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that his statement is doubtless exactly true; but some of the sacks may have been delayed in the mail and will come to the gentleman eventually.

Mr. TAWNEY. Thirty more sacks may arrive.

Mr. TRACEY. I was informed by the Secretary of Agriculture that 45 sacks were my quota of field and garden seeds.

Mr. MORSE. And you got 45?

Mr. TRACEY. And I got 45.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall be very glad to make a statement of the matter at the Agricultural Department, because that sort of thing needs explanation.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Did the gentleman count more than one sack?

Mr. TRACEY. No; they all seemed to be filled indiscriminately with large and small packages of field and garden seeds. We have sent out nearly all the sacks. They seemed to be all filled in about the same way.

Mr. LACEY. Did they have flower seeds in those sacks?

Mr. TRACEY. No; no flower seeds.

Mr. LACEY. The packages of flower seeds are very small, and yet they count up in the number of packages.

Mr. HAGER. Those would be in addition.

Mr. TRACEY. I am simply talking about the field and garden seeds.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the House, since the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TRACEY] has mentioned the fact that he did not get his quota of seeds, that I wrote to the Department and received a letter stating that if I would send 500 franks I would get my quota of flower and tobacco seeds sent to me to my room. I sent 500 franks, and yesterday afternoon I received two sacks. One contained 71 packages of tobacco seed, and the other 377 packages of flower seeds. I have written to the Department to know why my full quota was not sent, and have not yet heard. I give the House this information, as this subject is up, and the gentleman states that he has been treated in the same way.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think there has been some error in the mails, or some mistake of that kind. I will take pleasure in going to the Department and stating these facts, because it may lead them to correct the error and prevent future mistakes in the distribution of seeds. Where such a great number of packages are distributed, there will always be a certain number of mistakes made.

Mr. TRACEY. Of course I do not question the intention of the Department at all.

Mr. BROMWELL. I move to strike out the last two words. I wish to explain to the House the purpose of the amendment which I have offered. In the first place, the present system of distribution contains two very radical evils. One of these is that no member can know anything about the character of the seed that goes out in any one package, and it is utterly impossible for him to comply with the request of any constituent who wants particular seeds. These seeds are put in five small packages, inclosed in one manila wrapper or jacket, which is sealed. There is nothing on the outside of that wrapper to indicate the character of the seeds that are within.

Now, it is a mere lottery as to what anyone gets in that distribution. We send our franks to the Agricultural Department. The Department takes one of our franks and pastes it onto the first package that comes to hand, and that package goes out. Now, suppose a constituent of yours wants a particular kind of seeds. He is interested, we will say, in the raising of beets for beet sugar, and he writes to you and says: "I should like to have a package of beet seed sent to me." You send your frank over to the Agricultural Department, and they put it on a package, and it goes out to him, and that package sent him may contain corn, or castor beans, or something else for which your constituent has no earthly use.

Now, then——

Mr. FAIRCHILD. The gentleman must be mistaken about that, because the Department could not have had any castor-bean seeds under any circumstances, for we have their word for that.

Mr. BROMWELL. I do not know about that. But in the flower-seed distribution there is the same objection. Certain of your constituents may want particular kinds of flower seeds, and you can not tell what kind of flower seeds they are sending you, because they are sent out in sealed packages, and you have no means of knowing what they contain. Let me narrate a little experience I had last year in the distribution of flower seeds. I had the flower seeds of my quota sent to my room. I had a certain request for some particular seed. I wanted a particular class of flower seed. I opened over sixty packages of those flower seeds, and undertook to find these varieties of seed, and in all these packages there was either one or other of castor seed beans or sunflower. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. Both good.

Mr. BROMWELL. Both good in a way, for certain purposes, but not very ornamental in a flower garden.

A MEMBER. And not very rare.

Mr. STEELE. Certainly the Department did not send out castor-bean seeds, for they say they know nothing about them.

Mr. BROMWELL. That is all right; just the same I got them in the flower-seed distribution.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. This accounts for it, I will say to the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROMWELL. I do not. One object of my amendment is to provide a means by which you can know what seeds you are sending out. In the next place, it provides that if you do not want to send out 40,000 agricultural and field seeds and do want to send out more flower seeds that you can indicate to the Secretary of Agriculture the manner in which you want your quota apportioned. Gentlemen representing city districts do not want corn, wheat, castor beans, and things of that kind, but could find use for plenty of flower seeds. Gentlemen representing agricultural districts may be willing to do with less flower seeds and want more agricultural than flower seeds. Gentlemen representing tobacco-growing districts may be willing to part with radishes, lettuce, and other seeds in order to get tobacco seed. This amendment which I offered will permit you to say to the Secretary of Agriculture, "I want to distribute my quota as follows," and you indicate the kind of seeds that you want.

Now, there is some misunderstanding as to fixing that for the 1st day of May. That would not be the 1st day of May for this year's distribution. It would be on the 1st day of May that you indicated your wishes as to the distribution in the following season.

Mr. WADSWORTH. One year ahead?

Mr. BROMWELL. In June every year the Agricultural Department makes its contracts for seeds. Now, this lets the members say before the contracts are made, on the 1st day of May, what they want.

Mr. WADSWORTH. One year in advance?

Mr. BROMWELL. Do they not now engage the seeds six months in advance?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it this year?

Mr. BROMWELL. It is too late to make it for this year's distribution; but if you state your wishes to the Secretary of Agriculture, he knows what will be required in time for next year's distribution.

Now, another effect of this amendment is that if you want any of your seeds sent in unsealed packages, so as to see what you are distributing, or to pick out for some one person certain varieties that he wants, you are at liberty to do so. That is the sole purport of the amendment.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BROMWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. TALBERT. Unless these seeds are delivered here at the Department after being purchased, how can you carry out the plan that you propose?

Mr. BROMWELL. The law as it is now being carried out, under the distribution as now conducted, permits these seeds to be sent to you. The only difference between the present arrangement and the one I propose is that when they are sent to you they shall be sent in unsealed packages, so that you can see what you are getting.

Mr. TALBERT. Why not have them marked?

Mr. BROMWELL. This provides that they shall have printed on them the name of the seed contained.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MORSE. I move to strike out the last three words; and I do that for the purpose of bringing the attention of the House to the wholesale stealing of our documents, maps, and everything else that has been carried on in this city ever since I have been here.

Mr. MOODY. By whom?

Mr. MORSE. I do not know by whom. For the benefit of the House I will state my experience. I will say, in justice to the present administration, that I think there is less stealing now than there was in previous Congresses. In the Fifty-first Congress I sent to the folding room the slips of my agricultural reports, to be there pasted upon the reports, and, having heard about this stealing, I sent to every postmaster in my district a statement of the number of agricultural reports I was sending to his office and asked him to report to me how many were received there. I got a report from, I think, every postmaster in my district except two or three, and it turned out that more than 33 per cent of those documents never reached the offices to which they were addressed. One of my colleagues told me that out of his quota of maps which he directed and sent from a post-office in this building, during the last Congress, fully one-third never reached their destination.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think it is high time that the Congress of the United States made an exhaustive investigation into this business of stealing our public documents. [Applause.] In this city there are several stores where you can buy any kind of a Government publication you desire, and the question is, How do they get them and where do they get them? I think if you will probe this question to the bottom you will find that there is wholesale stealing of our documents and seeds carried on in this city. During the Fifty-second Congress I brought this matter to the attention of the then Postmaster-General, John Wanamaker—and a better or more efficient Postmaster-General this Government never had—and he said he would endeavor to make an investigation of the loss of the documents of which I complained. After that I think there was some improvement, but I found that of the documents that I left at the Shoreham Hotel to be sent away, only a percentage reached their destination; and it was my practice in dealing with valuable books, such as the ethnological publications and the book on Diseases of the Horse, to put them up in wrappers of such appearance that the exterior would not show the nature of the books, lest they should be stolen.

Now, sir, I repeat, it is high time that this rascally business of stealing our maps and books and documents should be investigated and measures taken to abolish this nuisance and outrage. As I have already said, it is of long standing, and it is rather less prevalent now than it has been in past years; but let us subject it to heroic treatment and put an end to it. [Applause.] To avoid this universal fear of having their books, seeds, and documents stolen members are compelled to register and pay for the same to get by the thieves who handle these documents in this city.

I have frequently taken the precaution to send to my home office in bulk, registered, all my agricultural and horse books, maps, etc., and mail them to individuals from my home office; and all reach the people in that way. But it is a shame that this is necessary to get by these robbers and scamps.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROMWELL. I have not offered it yet.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. We are informed by the Statistician of the Agricultural Department, in a letter which was read from the Clerk's desk yesterday, that that Department has not the funds necessary to employ the clerical help required to furnish information which is sought by an important committee of this House. A letter of similar character was written by the Secretary of Agriculture. Now, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if it provides a sufficient sum to enable that great Department of the Government to furnish desired and necessary information, such as it has failed to furnish in this case?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The committee believe that it does.

Mr. STEELE. Did not the committee last year give that Department more funds for clerical labor than it asked?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. STEELE. Did it give it all it asked?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think not.

Mr. NORTHWAY. You are reducing the appropriation this year, so that we shall not get even so much information hereafter.

Mr. STEELE. Is the Department asking for less this year than last year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. Their estimate for salaries was a good deal larger, but we reduced it and gave what we thought sufficient to carry on the Department in a proper manner.

The Clerk read as follows:

An equal proportion of two-thirds of all seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents or be directed and mailed by the Department upon their request; and the person receiving such seeds shall be requested to inform the Department of results of the experiments therewith: Provided, That all seeds, bulbs, plants, and cuttings herein allotted to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution remaining uncalled for on the 1st of May shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress, and who have not before during the same season been supplied by the Department: And provided also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase; but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, propagation and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants: Provided, however, That the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents: Provided also, That the seeds allotted to the Senators and Representatives for distribution in the districts embraced within the twenty-fifth and thirty-second parallels of latitude shall be ready for delivery on the 10th day of January, or at the earliest practicable time thereafter.

Mr. BROMWELL (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The amendment which I desire to offer comes in after the word "represents," in line 19, page 22, and I desire to ask whether it shall be offered now or after a completion of the reading of the whole paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. If it is an amendment to the paragraph, it should be offered after the reading of the paragraph is completed.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the paragraph, as above.

Mr. BROMWELL. I understand the chairman of the committee [Mr. WADSWORTH] proposes to raise a point of order on my amendment. I hope he will consent to reserve it till I have had an opportunity to explain the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will do so.

Mr. BROMWELL. When the amendment has been read and thoroughly understood, I believe the gentleman will not press his point of order. The proposition involves no additional expenditure of money and is not new legislation. It is merely a direction as to the manner of distribution already provided for by law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will reserve the point of order.

The proposed amendment of Mr. BROMWELL was read, as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "represents," in line 19, page 22, the words:

"And in determining the number of packets of flower, vegetable, and other seeds, respectively, which shall be placed in the quota of each Senator, Representative, or Delegate, the Secretary shall be controlled by the written instructions filed with him by such member at any time prior to the 1st day of May each year, indicating the relative proportions of the flower, vegetable, and other seeds which said member desires in his quota. And the Secretary shall furnish to each such member either his entire quota, or such part thereof as he may desire, in sealed packets containing the names of seeds contained therein printed upon the cover, together with a sufficient number of unsealed envelopes, with properly printed blank frank slips attached thereto, for inclosing and mailing said seed packets. If any member shall fail to express his wish in regard to the various kinds of seeds to be apportioned in his quota before the 1st day of May, the Secretary may apportion the same to said member according to his own judgment. The provisions of this amendment shall apply to the distributions succeeding the 1st day of May, 1897."

Mr. DOCKERY. It is understood that a point of order is reserved upon this amendment?

Mr. BROMWELL. It is.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to begin with, this amendment does not change the total quota of any member. Another section of the bill provides that the quota of all members shall be the same. The first provision of the amendment is to enable a member to select the kinds of seeds he wants included in his quota. A city member may select more flower seeds than an agricultural member. A member having a great many market gardeners in his district may select garden seeds. A member having a constituency that raises a great deal of tobacco may call for more tobacco seeds. So that the arrangement here proposed amounts to the same thing as the exchanges that take place every year between members. I have frequently found members who desired some of my agricultural seeds and were willing to give some of their flower seeds in exchange. This merely permits such exchanges to be made through the medium of the Department, and with a great deal less trouble than now attends the operation.

The second provision of the amendment enables members to know what seeds they are getting. As I explained that matter before, I will not dwell on it at any length now. But there is another reason why I think this amendment, so far as concerns the sending of unsealed packages, should be permitted to go into effect. At present there is no knowledge or certainty by members that they are getting the seeds they are supposed to get. Last year, as I before stated on this floor, I had the seeds supplied by the Department sent to my office for distribution. I opened them, and there were six varieties altogether among some forty or fifty packages. There were castor beans, sunflowers, nasturtiums, ipomœas, and one or two other varieties that I have forgotten. When I brought the matter to the attention of the seed merchant from whom the Department bought the seeds last year, he undertook—I have the correspondence with me, although I do not care to put it in the RECORD—he undertook to keep me from bringing the matter before the House by a downwright bribe of fifteen hundred additional packages of flower seeds.

Mr. McCORMICK. Who is the man?

Mr. BROMWELL. I refer to the firm of May & Co., of Minneapolis. The matter came about in this way: Before the seeds were distributed by the Government I had written to May & Co. in regard to the circular they had sent out stating that they were prepared to furnish additional flower seeds. I had written to them stating that I would like to buy 2,000 additional packages of flower seeds for distribution among my constituents. They sent me a rate of $6 a thousand for those seeds. I sent my check for $12, and ordered 2,000 flower-seed packages. In the meantime the Government quota had come to my office, and when I opened the packages I found the inferior kinds of seeds of which I have spoken. I immediately wrote to those gentlemen that I thought their seeds were a fraud upon the Government—that instead of being rare and valuable seeds, such as it would pay the Government to distribute, they were practically worthless.

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman will permit me to state that Congress repealed the provision requiring the distribution of rare and valuable seeds.

Mr. BROMWELL. I understand that. But the only excuse we can give for this distribution is that something valuable is supplied to our constituents. The very paragraph that we are now considering provides for "valuable" seeds. If the seeds sent out are not valuable, we are throwing our money away in buying and distributing them.

I wrote to those gentlemen, calling their attention to the matter, telling them that I thought they were perpetrating a fraud upon the Government, and countermanded my order for the additional 2,000 seeds. In the meantime, however, they had received my order, and before my countermand reached them had started 1,400 of the 2,000 seeds which I had ordered. Those seeds reached me about the time they got my countermand by letter. I opened those 1,400 seeds which I had asked should be sent in unsealed packages, and I found thirteen or fourteen varieties much finer than anything included in the Government distribution. Thinking that perhaps the balance of the order, 600 packages of seed that they had not sent, might be equally valuable, and willing to accept the seeds of the character they had sent, I withdrew the countermand of the original order and asked them, in a letter which I addressed to the firm, to send me the balance of the seed. Before the receipt of that letter, however, they had received the countermand, in which I had criticised the quality of the seed they had furnished. They then wrote me a letter in which they said that they never had intended to charge me a cent for the 1,400 packages of seed, but that I was to accept them "with the compliments of the firm."

Mr. NORTHWAY. Did they return your check?

Mr. BROMWELL. They did not return my check. They had deposited it before the letter was received, showing that it never was their intention to make me a present of the seed, as they claimed, but L. L. May & Co. sent their own check for the amount, on receipt of my letter, which check I returned, saying that I did not propose to accept from them the gift of 1,400 packages of seed, and asked them to send the other 600 packages, according to the original order, to complete the 2,000 packages which I had requested them to send. I returned them their check at the same time.

Mr. Chairman, the other seed came, in response to the order, and out of the additional 600 packages there were 93 different varieties. Now, if they were treating the Government as they were treating me, a private citizen ordering seed from them, there would probably have been no special occasion to make objection. But when they sent to me packages of seed, including castor beans and seeds of that character, to be used in the suburbs of the city of Cincinnati as "rare and valuable plants" [laughter]—and as a private purchaser they had sent me 93 different varieties in 600 packages—it looked as though there was some slight taint of fraud in the transaction.

What protection have the members of this House in this method of seed distribution against such frauds as that? You do not see the seeds yourself. You have no access to them. You send your franks to the Department; you give your orders for distribution, and they go out to your constituents, the franks being put on the first package that happens to be convenient; and let me tell you that there is more discontent and more dissatisfaction among the constituents of members in this matter of seed distribution than there is with reference to any public matter which the members of the House of Representatives have to deal.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will my colleague permit me to ask in what way you make selections of rare seeds from those supplied by the Government?

Mr. BROMWELL (interrupting). I know what my colleague is going to ask, but I am satisfied that he can refer to experiences of his own in this connection that will be interesting to the House.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I shall do so before the debate closes.

Mr. BROMWELL. My only object is to make it practicable that good seeds shall be sent to our constituents—what they want and what will be of some service to them in their agricultural affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BROMWELL. I should like to have two or three minutes longer.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman be given such time as he wants.

Mr. BROMWELL. I only ask three minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will proceed for three minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BROMWELL. Now, I made inquiry at the Department and found that they make contracts for seeds in June of each year for the following distribution. In order to know how many of each kind of seeds to order in their contract, it is necessary that they should know what each member will call for by the 1st of May. I have, therefore, inserted the restriction in the amendment that a member desiring specifically any particular kind of seed must give notice to the Secretary before the 1st of May, so that when the contracts are made in June he will know exactly what orders he has to fill and what kinds of seeds he must purchase.

This is the 1st of May, 1897, we will say, and is the limit of time within which members can get their seeds apportioned by selection for the next year's distribution——

Mr. TERRY. Let me interrupt the gentleman for a question. Does he mean the 1st of May preceding the year of distribution?

Mr. BROMWELL. That is the idea. The amendment is so worded as to apply to the next distribution succeeding the 1st of May.

I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The longer Congress has to do with the business of seed distribution the more intricate, the more trifling, and the more ridiculous it becomes. I had something to do with the Department of Agriculture at the beginning, and I remember that it was one of the provisions that only rare seeds and plants difficult to obtain in this country were to be distributed, coupled with the condition that they should be carefully and systematically cultivated and reports made to the Department as to success or failure in their culture. There was some reason for that: First, that they should be new to the country, and not to be purchased; and, secondly, that they should be proven by careful trial to be valuable. This understanding has been lost sight of. It belongs to the past.

Now we are engaged in distributing common seeds that can be bought anywhere for a few cents, and sending them out free and in direct competition with the regular seed growers of the country, furnishing coarse and cheap seeds that can be had in the smallest village in the land, and demanding no reports upon cultivation. The present Secretary of Agriculture told me last winter that the proportion of reports of results attained from experiments was so small as to be hardly worth mentioning. I think, in return for the millions of packages sent out, less than 1 in 10,000 was heard from in any way. In other words, the people do not attach sufficient value to these common seeds to acknowledge their receipt. The Government seed business becomes more and more of a farce every year, and the same may be said of the annual discussions upon this floor. I know that many members attach political importance to this gift of seeds to their constituents. I know that many country people expect to get the seeds from year to year; but they might as well expect to get farm implements or other things from the Government. The average farmer and the average gardener and householder in this country is willing and able to pay for seeds that he may need, and can make the best choice himself. I hope the time is not far distant when the Government distribution, if not discontinued, will be confined to rare varieties of seed according to the original intention, and the Department of Agriculture made useful in large matters rather than devoted to petty rivalry with the great seed-growing interests of the country.

Mr. HILL. I offer the substitute for the pending amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all, beginning with line 13, on page 20, all of page 21, and all of page 22.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I am not a farmer, and do not know of my own knowledge how much benefit this seed distribution is to the people of the United States. I think the amendment that I have offered will at least prove the heroic remedy that the gentleman from Massachusetts has asked for. I think it will remove all the defects of distribution which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] has talked about. I do not offer this amendment of my own motion, but the day before this session began a delegation of half a dozen farmers—very intelligent and cultivated men—called upon me and made two requests; first, that I would ask that the McKinley rates on farm products be restored; second, that I would vote against and ask for the entire repeal of the seed distribution carried on by the Government of the United States. In accordance with that request I offer this amendment. I do not propose for a moment to set up my judgment against that of those members of this House who have had longer experience than I have had. I propose simply to carry out in good faith the request that was made in good faith by a large club of farmers in the State of Connecticut, and so I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, I am not particular whether seed distribution shall be abolished or not. I do not propose to discuss that matter to-day. If it is to continue, I favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from the Cincinnati district [Mr. BROMWELL]. One great difficulty with reference to this distribution can be overcome, if the Department, in letting the contracts and its other proceedings, is as particular as it ought to be. You may be sure that, while each member has received 8,000 packages of garden seeds to distribute this year, we are getting the cheapest and coarsest garden seeds that can possibly be found. There is no mistake about that. Now, I know, for I have seen the blanks on which they advertise for seeds, that the Department knows exactly all the kinds of seeds that are bid for, and the price of each kind, and it can select the rare and valuable seeds if it tries. If it selects the coarser and less valuable ones, it does so on purpose, and with deliberation.

Last year I had this experience with flower seeds: One member of my family has for some years raised a great many flowers, as is well known in the section of the State where I live. The result has been that during the last three or four years she has been applied to by her flower-loving friends for flower seeds, they knowing that she would know how to choose them. Last year I ordered to my room the flower seeds to which I was entitled under this distribution, and she opened consecutively 60 packages. In those 60 packages I think we found 5 different varieties. One was the very rare and recently discovered variety known as the zenia. Another was the next rarest to that, the bachelor button. [Laughter.] Another was the castor bean. In that way we found, I think, 5 different varieties in 60 packages, and we declined to send out any of them, for none of them were wanted. Most of my constituents had heard of these rare seeds before.

Now, when the Department bought such seeds, it knew what it was doing. It need never have bought any of them. It could have bought rare flower seeds if it had tried. The blanks were furnished me to be sent to a seed man in my district, and I saw that they were large blanks, and required that the letter should specify the kind of seeds and the price of each kind. So the Department knows precisely what it is buying. And he can buy the best and rarest garden seeds and rarest flower seeds we have in our country. I would rather have 10 packages of rare garden seeds and 10 packages of rare flower seeds than have 8,000 packages of nonsense. The Department knows precisely that it is buying this, that, or the other seed; and you will find the seeds sent out this year are the cheapest that have ever been sent out. The very fact that we are getting 8,000 packages is, I submit, evidence of that.

The Department of Agriculture has not been earnest about this business. They can buy the rarest garden and the rarest flower seeds that we grow in this country. Three years ago I sent certain of my constituents some garden seeds. Each package contained sweet corn. It is pronounced as the rarest sweet corn grown in that region, and every farmer and gardener goes all around to get some of that sweet corn, because it is of the rarest kind. Now, if they will buy that kind of seed and distribute it I submit it will prove a blessing; but if they will distribute such seeds as they have been sending out in the last year it will only break down the system, because it is simply nonsense.

Mr. TERRY. Do you not think that the Secretary was trying to play a practical joke on the members?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I do not think the seed are rare, when we get 8,000 packages; and so I am in favor of the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. BROMWELL].

Mr. WADSWORTH. I withdraw the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio. It seems to be a personal matter with each member as to what they want in regard to these matters.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Commencing after the word "seeds," in line 14 of page 20, strike out all following, to include line 24 on page 22, and insert in place thereof as follows:

"For the purchase, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, and expense of labor, transportation, paper, twine, gum, printing, postal cards, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same, $10,000: Provided, That the distribution of such seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall be made under and by the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture and in accordance with the provisions of section 527 of the Revised Statutes, and shall be confined to the experiment stations and agricultural universities, colleges, schools, or societies of the several States and Territories, and only when such institutions have pledged themselves to make or procure to be made under their direction thorough experiments in the planting and cultivation of the same and to fully report the results of such experiments to the Secretary of Agriculture for the information of the Department of Agriculture."

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, although I indorse thoroughly that amendment, it is not my own amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. My colleague [Mr. POOLE], who has been confined to his room——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri reserves the point of order.

Mr. FAIRCHILD (continuing). For a week and more, had drafted that amendment, and this morning requested that I should offer it in his absence, and in doing so to submit the remarks which he would have made in support of the amendment if he had been present. In my time I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Mr. Speaker, I propose the amendment which has been read in the interest of economy, and I believe it will, if adopted, be for the best interests of all the people concerned.

"The aggregate expense to be incurred for the purchase and distribution of seeds as provided for in the bill reported by the committee, including the cost of transportation by the Government, will not fall short of $240,000. If I believed that this vast expenditure was wise and would prove to be of corresponding benefit to the people, I would gladly support the bill as reported; but in my opinion the present system of buying common and well-known varieties of seeds and their free disposition to favored friends of members of Congress is a wasteful expenditure of the public money and of but little value to the farming community.

"This amendment seeks to carry out the spirit of section 527 of the Revised Statutes, which provides for the purchase of 'such seeds as are rare and uncommon to the country.' It has of late years been very difficult to procure for the purpose of testing their value in our climate many varieties of seeds or plants, and the money appropriated for this purpose by the Government has been expended in the purchase in open market of plants and seeds of common varieties, and these seeds and plants have in very many instances been distributed in the very localities where they were originally grown or purchased.

"The present system for the purchase and free distribution of seed, which it is proposed to continue by the bill as reported, is unsatisfactory for these, among other reasons:

"1. The cost is very great and comes upon all the people, while the benefits, if any, fall to the favored few.

"2. The distribution of common, well-known varieties of seed is a disappointment to the people who receive them and a cause of complaint to all who are not remembered by their Representative.

"3. The General Government enters into direct competition with its own citizens engaged in the pursuit of a legitimate and useful branch of industry, and our national policy of 'protection to home industries' is ignored and violated.

"The Secretary of Agriculture has called the attention of Congress to the fact that it is now impossible to find many new varieties of plants and seeds that give promise of being of value in this country, and the appropriation called for by this amendment will probably be amply sufficient to carry out the spirit and intent of the law providing for the purchase of seed.

"The General Government has no farm where experiments can be made to determine the value or adaptability of seeds or plants to this climate, and this amendment therefore makes provision for the conduct of such experiments at the experiment stations and agricultural schools and colleges in the various States and Territories, where experts can determine the value for that particular climate. New varieties of seed and plants found to be worthy of cultivation can then be distributed from these stations to the people of the State where they are situated. By this means seeds and plants suitable to the climate and of practical value to the people can be more wisely distributed and at slight expense.

"Many of the leading agricultural newspapers and societies have for years condemned the present vicious and extravagant system, and have exposed its utter failure to accomplish the benefits which it professes to insure to the agricultural classes. They demand its discontinuance, and I believe they voice the sentiment of a great majority of the people of this country. It is a farce that should no longer be played."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that debate upon the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I hope the gentleman will not make that motion while I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I make the motion that debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. MERCER. Before the gentleman insists upon that, I would ask if he will allow me to submit an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment can be submitted after that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It can be submitted after debate is closed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MERCER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 22, line 24, insert:
"Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture first distribute to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate 6 chickens, 6 hogs, 6 cattle, and 6 horses, all thoroughbreds, and divided as to sex half and half."

[Laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will accept that amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. MERCER. I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the suggestion of the gentleman from New York? Does the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I supposed that was offered as a joke.

Mr. MERCER. Well, Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from New York will not characterize my amendment as a joke.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not distinguish between jokes and other things.

Mr. STEELE. I make the point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order against the amendment. The Chair sustains the point of order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MERCER. If the Chair will allow me, and if the gentleman from Indiana will permit——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. MERCER. Yes, sir: upon the point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. I make the point of order that the point of order has been decided.

Mr. MERCER. Oh, no; it has not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska arises for the purpose of addressing the Chair on the point of order.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to have members upon the floor of this House designate an amendment that I may send to the Clerk's desk as a joke.

Now, the amendment which I sent to the Clerk's desk and which has just been read is not any more of a joke than the proceedings that have taken place upon the floor of this House all the afternoon in reference to seed distribution. There has been complaint after complaint and wrangle after wrangle about this package and that package of seeds. Some member finds that he gets the wrong seeds, or that he is two or three packages short, and he immediately enters complaint against the Agricultural Department and against the Government in general. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, speaking on the point of order, I have some farmers in my district [laughter] who are against this seed distribution, and they have come to the conclusion that if they can have seeds free of cost there is no reason why they should not have turkeys and horses and hogs and partridges [laughter]——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. And hound pups.

Mr. MERCER. And hound pups. I accept the amendment. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we are running into gross extravagance and are getting more and more demoralized in that respect every year. Take the matter of the distribution of documents. I understand we are spending in the neighborhood of $6,000,000 a year for distributing public documents, and my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] says that half of them are stolen from us before we can get them distributed. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, in all seriousness——

Mr. STEELE. And on the point of order.

Mr. MERCER. And on the point of order, as the gentleman from Indiana (who is seldom in order) suggests [laughter], I think we ought to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut, and I now withdraw my amendment, which was offered as an argument in favor of its adoption. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL].

Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota. I ask that the amendment be again reported.

By unanimous consent, the amendment was again read.

The question being taken, the Chairman declared the ayes seemed to have it.

A division was asked for.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 32.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], to strike out the whole paragraph, beginning at line 13, page 20, and including the whole of page 22.

The question being taken on the amendment, the Chairman declared that he was in doubt.

A division was asked for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 55.

Mr. HILL. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman designated Mr. HILL and Mr. WADSWORTH.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 42, noes 70.

So the amendment was rejected. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. POOLE].

Several MEMBERS. Read it.

The amendment of Mr. POOLE was again read.

The question being taken on the amendment, the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 54.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Weather Bureau: Office of Chief of Weather Bureau: One Chief of Bureau, $4,500; one professor of meteorology, $3,500; two professors of meteorology, at $3,000 each, for service in the city of Washington or elsewhere, as the exigencies of the Bureau may demand, $6,000; two professors of meteorology, at $2,500 each, for the service in the city of Washington or elsewhere, as the exigencies of the Bureau may demand, $5,000; three forecast officials, at $2,000 each, for service in the city of Washington or elsewhere, as the exigencies of the Bureau may demand, $6,000; one chief clerk (and executive officer), $2,500; three chiefs of division, at $2,000 each, $6,000; three clerks of class 4, $5,400; one property clerk, $1,600; five clerks of class 3, $8,000; fifteen clerks of class 2, $21,000; twenty-eight clerks of class 1, $35,600; thirteen clerks, at $1,000 each, $13,000; eight clerks, at $900 each, $7,200; one captain of the watch, $1,000; one engineer, $900; one instrument maker, $1,300; two assistant instrument makers, at $1,000 each, $2,000; six mechanics, at $840 each, $5,040; two firemen, at $720 each, $1,440; three watchmen, at $720 each, $2,160; three messengers, at $720 each, $2,160; eight messengers, at $600 each, $4,800; five laborers, at $660 each, $3,300; four laborers, at $480 each, $1,920; four charwomen, at $240 each, $960; total salaries Weather Bureau, $150,280.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise the question of order against that part of the bill in lines 9 and 10, page 24, providing for "one professor of meteorology" at a salary of $3,500, for the reason that it is an increase of salary of $1,000. Also, against the proposed increase of the salary of the chief clerk from $2,250 to $2,500, and also against the new language in line 20, in parentheses, "and executive officer."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the point of order will perhaps hold good, but I want to have read for the information of this committee a letter from Mr. Moore, the Chief of the Bureau.

The letter was read, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF CHIEF OF WEATHER BUREAU,
Washington, D. C., December 17, 1896.

SIR: I respectfully recommend an increase of $500 each in the salaries of two of the oldest and most valuable professors on duty in the Weather Bureau. This would give me for a scientific staff one professor at $3,500, two at $3,000, and two at $2,500. I have with me one professor who laid the groundwork for the present weather charts twenty-five years ago, and who is recognized as probably the ablest man in air physics in this country, if not in the world. He is editor of my Monthly Weather Review, and while not being an executive officer, is recognized as an authority on technical problems in meteorological science. Another one of my staff has been with the service over twelve years, has devised and invented many of the automatically recording meteorological instruments. He is a scientist who, if employed by one of our leading universities, would command six to eight thousand dollars per annum. I wish one of these increases so that we may give him $3,000 per annum. After these promotions are made the scientific staff of the Weather Bureau still will be considerably less paid than that of the Geological Survey and other scientific departments of the Government.

I also recommend that one chief clerk, $2,250 per annum, be changed to one chief clerk and executive officer, at $2,500 per annum. Formerly there was an assistant chief at $3,000 and an executive officer at $2,500 and a chief clerk at $2,250, making a total salary for the officials executing the orders of the chief of $7,750 per annum. At the present time the chief clerk combines within himself the functions of all three of these officials. During the time when I was Acting Secretary for a considerable period last summer, and during my absence on inspection tours, he was acting chief of the Bureau, in regular succession as provided by the Revised Statutes. The Bureau has unhesitatingly recommended during the past two or three years the abolition of the offices of assistant chief and executive officer. The slight increase now asked and the slight modification in the title I believe will appeal to the good judgment of your committee.

To offset the increase referred to in the foregoing paragraph I recommend changes in original estimates, as follows:

Nine clerks, at $900, be reduced to 8 clerks, at $900; 1 captain of the watch, at $1,200, reduced to 1 captain of the watch, at $1,000; 5 laborers, at $480, be reduced to 4 laborers, at $480.

The total increase asked for from the original estimates, which, as you are aware, are the same as last year, is $1,250. The total decrease is $1,580, leaving a net reduction on original estimates of $330. If these changes are adopted, the total appropriation for the Weather Bureau will be $330 less than for last year.

It is also recommended that under the item "General expenses, Weather Bureau," after the words "for maintenance and repair of seacoast telegraph lines," the following words be inserted: "whose earnings may be applied to such maintenance and repair."

Until recently Weather Bureau employees on duty outside of the District of Columbia enjoyed all privileges with respect to annual leave and absence on account of personal sickness, with pay, as accrue to employees on duty within the District of Columbia, but following the opinion of the law officer the practice of granting these privileges to employees in the field was discontinued during the present year. It is therefore recommended that after the last word, "expenses," item "General Expenses of the Weather Bureau," the following be added:

"And all commissioned employees of the Weather Bureau on duty outside of the District of Columbia may be granted the same privileges with respect to absence from duty, with pay, on account of annual leave or personal sickness as now allowed employees of that Bureau stationed within the District of Columbia."

Very respectfully,

WILLIS L. MOORE,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. JAMES W. WADSWORTH,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives, United States.

(By permission of the Secretary of Agriculture.)

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, in further defense of Mr. Moore, I want to say that when he took charge of this Bureau he succeeded in reducing the salaries in one year $27,000. Now, after another year's experience in the management of the Bureau, he suggests these changes, which bring about a further diminution in the salary list of $330. I only submit to the gentleman from Missouri that it is a very small——

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest that the Chief of the Bureau can accomplish this result by dismissing a part of his force.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That may be so. Still, experience has taught him that this is the best way to manage the Bureau, and there is very little incentive to a man to perform his duty——

Mr. DOCKERY. I have quite as high a regard for the poor fellows who are carried on the roll at $700, $800, and $900 as I have for men who are now receiving $3,000 a year.

I wish to say, furthermore, that I do not make these points of order by way of criticism upon the gentleman or his committee, but, so far as I can do so by the interposition of points of order, I shall object to increases of the salaries of Federal officials until returning prosperity puts some increase of profits into the pockets of the people of this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In view of the action just taken in striking out a part of the pending paragraph, I think we had better strike out the whole paragraph and substitute the corresponding paragraph of the law of last year. I move, therefore, to strike out the paragraph and insert what I send to the desk, which is the paragraph of the act making appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the current year.

The Clerk read as follows:

WEATHER BUREAU.

Salaries of the Weather Bureau: Office of Chief of Weather Bureau: One chief of Bureau, $4,500; two professors of meteorology, at $3,000 each, for service in the city of Washington, or elsewhere, as the exigencies of the Bureau may demand, $6,000; three professors of meteorology, at $2,500 each, for service in the city of Washington, or elsewhere, as the exigencies of the Bureau may demand, $7,500; three forecast officials, at $2,000 each, for service in the city of Washington, or elsewhere, as the exigencies of the Bureau may demand, $6,000; one chief clerk, $2,250; three chiefs of division, at $2,000 each, $6,000; three clerks of class 4, $5,400; one assistant chief of division of supplies, $1,600; five clerks class 3, $8,000; fifteen clerks class 2, $21,000; twenty-five clerks class 1, $30,000; fifteen clerks, at $1,000 each, $15,000; one telegraph operator in the city of Washington, or elsewhere, as the exigencies of the Bureau may demand, $1,000; six clerks, at $900 each, $5,400; three copyists or typewriters, at $840 each, $2,520; one copyist or typewriter, $720; one chief mechanician, $1,200; one captain of the watch, $1,200; one engineer, $900; one batteryman, $840; four skilled artisans, at $840 each, $3,360; two skilled mechanicions, at $840 each, $1,680; three assistant messengers, at $720 each, $2,160; two firemen, at $720 each, $1,440; three watchmen, at $720 each, $2,160; one carpenter, $840; five laborers, at $660 each, $3,300; eight messengers or laborers, at $600 each, $4,800; five messengers or laborers, at $480 each, $2,250; three charwomen, at $240 each, $720; for temporary employment of messengers and laborers as may be necessary in the office of the Chief of the Weather Bureau, $900; in all $150,540.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is the provision of the current law in reference to the Weather Bureau?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand that its effect is simply to continue the force as provided in the current law?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is it exactly.

Mr. DOCKERY. And it puts back this clerk that you proposed to eliminate by the provision reported by the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to submit that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri, instead of putting more money into the pockets of the people, takes out $330.

Mr. STEELE. Oh, no.

Mr. DOCKERY. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture having virtually conceded, in the provision which he reported and advocated, that there was no necessity for this clerk, that a clerk of this low class could be dispensed with, he proposed that the amount this clerk was receiving less $330 go toward giving increased compensation to this scientific officer. Now, having made the point of order against increasing the salaries of these officials, he proposes a continuance of the present law. I submit, however, to the chairman of the committee in all good faith that if this clerk was not necessary with the salary of the scientific officer at $3,500 (a thousand dollars increase over the current law), he is not necessary with the salary of that officer at $2,500. If this bill shall become a law in the form provided by the pending substitute, I want to put this responsibility for increase upon the Agricultural Committee.

Mr. PERKINS. The provision which has gone out on the point of order was drawn in accordance with the recommendation of the Chief of the Bureau, with the view of increasing the efficiency of the service at a reduced expense.

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes; but the reduction was accomplished by eliminating one of the clerks—I forget his salary—by dropping him from the salary roll. Now, I suggest to the chairman of the committee, with entire respect and in perfect good faith, and because the logic of the situation requires it, that in offering the provision of the existing law he should eliminate the clerk that he before proposed to dispense with, assuming that the committee was correct in the provision reported.

The question being taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. WADSWORTH, it was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 23, page 25, after the word "dollars," insert the following:

"And the Chief of the Weather Bureau shall furnish to each Senator and Representative, by postal or letter, every evening, such meteorological information and forecasts as have been acquired by the Bureau during the preceding twenty-four hours."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I reserve a point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, there is no information so fleeting and fugitive in its utility as meteorological information; unless it is promptly accessible, it becomes useless. One way to make this information useful and get it into general distribution throughout the country is to have it furnished while fresh to Senators and Representatives.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries of one inspector, thirty local forecast officials, section directors, observers, operators, repairmen, messengers, laborers, and other necessary employees outside of the city of Washington.

All other expenses, itemized as follows: Maps, bulletins, and stationery for stations, and the maintenance of a printing office in the District of Columbia for printing the necessary circulars, weather maps, bulletins, and monthly weather reviews (including the hire of printers, lithographers, and other necessary working force); for traveling expenses; for freight and express charges; for instruments and shelters therefor; for telegraphing or telephoning reports and messages, the rates to be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture by agreement with the companies performing the services; for rents and other incidental expenses of offices maintained as stations of observation; for maintenance and repair of seacoast telegraph lines, the earnings of which may be applied to such maintenance and repair; for river observations and reports; for storm and other signals; for cotton-region observations and reports; for corn and wheat observations and reports; for aerial observations and reports; for special observations and pay of observers of West Indian, Mexican, and Central American stations during the hurricane season; for supplies for climate and crop services; and for investigations on climatology, including assistance and all necessary expenses, $717,162.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to make a correction in the paragraphs just read. There is a misprint there. The paragraph beginning "all other expenses, etc.," belongs to the first paragraph, and should be a part of it. I ask that the necessary correction be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, against a portion of this paragraph I desire to raise the question of order.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. I have an amendment, Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has raised the question of order, which he will state.

Mr. DOCKERY. I make the point of order against portions of lines 8 and 9, on page 27, reading as follows:

The earnings of which may be applied to such maintenance and repair.

That is new legislation, and not warranted by existing law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will admit that it is new legislation, Mr. Chairman, but the committee regarded it as desirable and necessary.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is new legislation, and if I am not inaccurately advised it involves an expenditure of four or five thousand dollars, and in effect increases the appropriation to that amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. I now offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 18, on page 27, insert the following:
"To establish and maintain a signal station at Flagstaff, Ariz., under the direction of the Chief of the Weather Bureau, $5,000," and in line 19 substitute "eighty-eight" for "eighty-three."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will reserve the point of order until the gentleman from Arizona can be heard upon this amendment.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the amendment I have offered, I wish to say that an effort has been made for some time past to have a signal station established at Flagstaff, in Arizona. The reason given for the amendment is that there is no place in the entire mountain country, in this southwestern region, where warnings may be displayed of coming storms or forecasts made of existing meteorological conditions. That there is no better location for this purpose has been recognized by the establishment of an observatory in recent years at Flagstaff.

I am informed by the Weather Bureau that they have no appropriation available to establish a signal station there; but I think they recognize the importance of establishing one at the point indicated in the amendment.

I can not better, Mr. Chairman, indicate to the committee the importance of the location at which it is proposed to establish this station than by saying that these peaks at Flagstaff afford a view east into New Mexico, south into Old Mexico, west to the Pacific through a gap in the Coast Range, north to Nevada and Utah, and northeast to Pikes Peak. A station on Humphreys Peak, at Flagstaff, on the Frisco Range, where the amendment proposes to establish it, will be of vast interest and importance to the people of that region.

There is no place in the entire mountain country, and it is so conceded by all who are cognizant of the fact, better adapted than Flagstaff for a signal station, for warnings in case of coming storms, or for observations for the benefit of the whole country, and therefore I ask support for the amendment, which I hope will be adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to raise the question of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Arizona, for while I think there ought to be a station in that region, yet the appropriation will not allow it; but we have some information from Mr. Moore, that the Bureau has in view a new arrangement of all of these stations; and perhaps in that rearrangement he will have a signal station at the point he indicates. Hence I must insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the Clerk be directed to correct the footings of the bill to correspond with the various changes that have been made in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. It occurs to the Chair that the bill must be reported to the House immediately, and that these amendments ought to be prepared before the bill is reported.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is merely a change of the footings, and can be done now or hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 7, on page 26, for the purpose of inserting what I regard as a necessary amendment at that point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to recurring to the section mentioned by the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to insert in line 7, on this page, after the word "horses," the words "for official purposes only."

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is similar to the amendments heretofore adopted in regard to the use of these horses?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9361) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will it be necessary to ask unanimous consent that in the engrossing the Clerk be authorized to change the footings to correspond with the changes in the various items of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the request to the House, though he thinks that such clerical changes could be made by the Clerk. Without objection, the Clerk will be authorized to make those clerical changes.

There was no objection.

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the bill S. 1832 Mr. POWERS, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. JOHNSON of California.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WILSON of Idaho, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. ODELL, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HULING, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

ANN MARIA MEINHOFER.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8942) to pension Ann Maria Meinhoefer, widow of Lewis Meinhoefer, Company B, Forty-first New York Infantry. It will only take a minute.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Ann Maria Meinhoefer, widow of Lewis Meinhoefer, late a member of Company B, Forty-first New York Infantry, upon the pension roll and pay her a pension of $8 per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 4, after the word "place," strike out the balance of the bill, and add: "upon the pension roll, subject otherwise to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ann Maria Meinhofer, widow of Louis Meinhofer, late a private in Company B, Forty-first New York Infantry, and pay her a pension of $12 per month."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to ask if that bill has been before the House at a Friday night session?

Mr. SPALDING. It has not. This woman is supported by a church, and has been for years. The only difficulty about her being pensioned under the general law is the fact that she can not produce, on account of the death of the witnesses, proof of the death of her first husband, who died fifty years ago. She was married to this soldier long before the war, her first husband having previously died, but she can not prove his death. Her brother was with him when he died, but her brother is dead, and the only proof she can offer of the death of her first husband is her own statement. She is supported by the German Lutheran church of the city of Monroe, Mich. She is 77 years of age.

Mr. TALBERT. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is a rule of the House requiring that all such bills shall go before the Committee of the Whole at the Friday night sessions.

Mr. SPALDING. That is true.

Mr. TALBERT. But as this seems to be a rather remarkable case, I do not care to interpose an objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Ann Maria Meinhofer."

On motion of Mr. SPALDING, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, GREAT BOARS HEAD, NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8356) to establish a life-saving station at or near Great Boars Head, on the coast of New Hampshire.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a life-saving station at or near Great Boars Head, on the coast of New Hampshire.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does that bill simply authorize the establishment?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will ask the gentleman from New Hampshire how this proposed light-house is classed?

The SPEAKER. It is not a light-house, but a life-saving station.

Mr. SULLOWAY. It is a life-saving station, and it is recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent, the title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station at or near Great Boars Head, on the coast of New Hampshire."

On motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2931) granting an increase of pension to Silas M. Stevens.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Silas M. Stevens, late of the U. S. S. Lackawanna, and grant him a pension at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I will simply state that this bill was considered by unanimous consent at the evening session last evening, and comes to us with an urgent request from the chairman of the Senate Committee on Pensions that it should receive favorable consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TALBERT. Reserving the right to object, I will ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. DOCKERY. It was considered last evening.

Mr. TALBERT. I have no objection, as it has been considered in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. Division!

Mr. STEELE. If we do not adjourn, there will be no more unanimous consents.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 25.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the regular order is the call of committees.

The Committees on Elections Nos. 1, 2, and 3 were called.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. Division!

R. 1888) to further amend an act entitled "An act regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia," approved the 3d day of March, A. D. 1893, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 28th ultimo, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 22d ultimo, intended to be proposed to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted a report to accompany the amendment heretofore reported by him relative to the Santee Sioux Indians, of Nebraska, intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMITTEE HEARING.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the usual number of copies of statements made before the Committee on Interstate Commerce last week relative to ticket brokerage be printed as a document for the use of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 3622) to increase the pension of Caroline A. Hough, widow of Brig. Gen. John Hough; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PALMER. I wish that the bill may lie on the table. A similar bill has been before the Committee on Pensions several times, and has been reported favorably.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the bill will lie on the table.

Mr. WALTHALL introduced a bill (S. 3624) for the relief of Anna Hunt, administratrix of George F. Hunt, late of Jefferson County, Miss., as found due by the Court of Claims under the act of March 3, 1883; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 3625) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Alice Martin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHILTON introduced a bill (S. 3626) for the relief of Calvin T. Hazelwood; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3627) to authorize the Corpus Christi and Padre Island Harbor Company to import free of duty certain materials for the construction of an outer harbor on the coast of Texas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3628) to provide for the revision and codification of the criminal and penal laws of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3629) to amend section 5498 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the employment of counsel by the Attorney-General or a district attorney; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3630) to consolidate the circuit and district courts of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to state that this is a very important measure indeed, and that I introduce the bill not expecting action upon it during the present Congress, but only that the judges and the profession and the public generally may be aware of the proposal and may be heard from before another session.

I desire to state further that I have purposely omitted from the bill any arrangement about the clerks of the district courts, as the general subject of the clerks and their compensation will probably be dealt with in another measure at the next Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 3631) to amend section 4965 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 3632) granting an increase of pension to Harriet P. Dame; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3633) concerning retirements and promotions in the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 3634) for the establishment of a light-house and fog signal at a point north of the bell buoy near the broken part of the Pollock Rip Shoals, on the coast of Massachusetts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CARTER introduced a bill (S. 3635) for the relief of certain citizens of Montana claiming the benefit of the homestead laws; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MRS. MARY GOULD CARR.

Mr. HILL introduced a bill (S. 3623) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Gould Carr, widow of the late Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Carr, United States Volunteers, deceased; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HILL. I ask that the bill be read in full.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Mrs. Mary Gould Carr, widow of the late Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Carr, United States Volunteers, deceased, at the rate of $75 per month.

Mr. HILL. A bill of which this is an exact copy passed the House of Representatives a long time ago, and it passed the Senate in December last. It was one of the bills which was presented to the President just previous to the holiday recess, which was a recess for a longer period than ten days. The President did not act upon the bill, but it was sent to the office of the Secretary of State as a dead bill, it being claimed that Congress had by its adjournment prevented action, and that therefore the bill had expired. I am inclined to doubt whether a mere recess, such as was then taken, was an adjournment within the meaning of the Constitution which would render the bill a dead bill. The question has never been tested in the courts, as I am advised, and this widow has not the money with which to test it. It is easier, as I think, to have the bill passed over again and sent to the President. I therefore ask that the bill may now have present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the request of the Senator from New York is a very proper one. The bill reached the President two days before the late recess and it was held by the President that ten days having elapsed during such recess, it has the same bearing upon a bill as though it were passed upon the final adjournment of a Congress. I agree with the Senator from New York that that is a matter of very great doubt. I think I should take issue with the Executive; but it could only be tested in the courts, and the easiest way is to pass the bill again.

While I am on my feet, I will state that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] reported a bill in favor of Mrs. Hough, which was passed at the same time as Mrs. Carr's bill, and which had the same fate. I hope the Senate will consider the bill the Senator from New York is interested in and then that it will likewise consider the bill that my distinguished friend from Illinois has just introduced, pensioning Mrs. Hough.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. CAROLINE A. HOUGH.

Mr. PALMER. I ask that the same course be taken with the bill to pension Mrs. Hough.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read for information.

The bill (S. 3622) to increase the pension of Caroline A. Hough, widow of Brig. Gen. John Hough, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of Caroline A. Hough, widow of the late Brig. Gen. John Hough, upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws and grant her a pension of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension of $17 per month which she is now receiving.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELECTIONS IN DELAWARE.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to inquire into the facts and circumstances of the Presidential and State election held in the State of Delaware on the 3d of November, 1896, and particularly to ascertain whether or not on said day, or immediately before or after said day, there existed for the benefit of the Democratic party, so called, in said State a plan and conspiracy on the part of many evil-minded persons, who determined, in case said election should appear to result in the choice of a Republican legislature, to so change such result by fraudulent practices as to make the legislature appear to be a Democratic body; and whether or not, as the result of said election, the candidates for Presidential electors of the Republican party were chosen, as well as a legislature a majority of whose members were Republicans; and whether or not the aforesaid plan and conspiracy was then and there carried out in the following manner: In Sussex County by a fraudulent and wrongful counting of the ballots cast therein, and in Kent County by changing the returns from the various hundreds and throwing out some of the returns and falsifying the vote of said county, so that in each of said counties the Republican members of the legislature who were actually chosen appeared to be defeated, and the Democratic candidates appeared to be elected; and whether or not, as the result of this plan and conspiracy, and the acts done in pursuance thereof, the legislature of Delaware, composed by law of thirty members, a majority of whom in truth and in fact were Republicans, was fraudulently and wrongfully changed into a legislature a majority of which appeared to be Democrats, which, at the time fixed by law for the assembling of the legislature of the State, met at the capitol in Dover, and excluding the lawfully elected Republicans, proceeded to act as the legislature of said State, and to pass and promulgate laws, and to elect a United States Senator; and said committee is also directed to consider whether or not the legislature thus organized was or is entitled to be recognized as the lawful legislature of the State, or its acts and proceedings to be treated as valid by the Government of the United States, or its election of a United States Senator to be recognized as valid by the Senate; and, further, whether there is a government of said State now organized conforming to the clause in the national Constitution which provides that the United States shall guarantee to each State a republican form of government, and, if not, what action ought to be taken by Congress to enforce said guaranty; said committee to make said inquiry by full committee or through subcommittees, as it may deem expedient, and to have power to send for persons and papers, and to sit during the sessions of the Senate in Washington or in Delaware, and to make report by bill or otherwise, and to have its expenses paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the affidavit of George W. Roberts, of Delaware, together with an article from the State Sentinel, of Dover, Del., on "Democratic revolution;" which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed.

AMBROSE D. MANION.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 6215) to increase the pension of Ambrose D. Manion.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was the bill just reported this morning?

Mr. NELSON. No, sir; it was reported last week.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to increase the pension of Ambrose D. Manion, late of Company K, Fifth Kentucky Infantry, from $30 per month to $50 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 8942) granting a pension to Ann Maria Meinhofer.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9707) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 7 and 8.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6; and agree to the same.

R. F. PETTIGREW,
GEORGE C. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
N. M. CURTIS,
M. GRIFFIN,
D. G. TYLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. What were the points in disagreement upon which the Senate conferees receded?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The House agreed to all of the amendments of the Senate but two, and as to those amendments the Senate conferees receded. Those two amendments were, first, an increase of $15,000 to put in a filter, and second, an increase of the total amount to correspond with the increase for putting in a filter. The Senate conferees receded from the amendment increasing the appropriation for that purpose from $25,000 to $40,000. The House agreed to all the other amendments. I ask that the report be adopted.

The report was concurred in.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6834) to prevent the purchasing of or speculating in claims against the Federal Government by United States officers; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, Mr. BURTON of Missouri, and Mr. HENDRICK managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 1948) to grant a pension to Uriah Andricks, Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

THE INAUGURAL CEREMONIES.

Mr. BACON. Some three weeks ago, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I reported a joint resolution looking to the authorization of the Secretary of War to give such permits to the executive committee on inaugural ceremonies as he might see fit in the use of the reservations and public spaces in the city. The joint resolution has been brought before the Senate three times, and has been postponed each time at the request of some Senator that he might have an opportunity to look further into it. It is a matter of some importance that we should determine at as early a date as possible what authority should be granted to this committee in order that they may know how to make arrangements in accordance therewith. I therefore ask that the Senate will consent to the present consideration of House joint resolution 214.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 214) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permits to the executive committee on inaugural ceremonies for use of reservations or public spaces in the city of Washington on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March, 4, 1897, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution has heretofore been read at length, and the amendment reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia has been read. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to ask the Senator from Georgia whether the joint resolution gives any power to the Commissioners to tear up the pavements of Washington and lay electric-light conduits?

Mr. BACON. The provision the Senator inquires about is guarded. On the second page of the joint resolution it is provided further—

That the stretching and removing of the said wires shall be under the supervision of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall see that the provisions of this resolution are enforced, that all needful precautions are taken for the protection of the public, and that the pavement of any street, avenue, or alley disturbed is replaced in as good condition as before entering upon the work herein authorized.

Mr. CHANDLER. Suppose the Commissioners do not do that. Suppose the Commissioners do not execute this law. The streets then will have been torn up and remain.

Mr. BACON. As I understand it, all laws with reference to the city of Washington, so far as they relate to the streets, are within the executive powers of the Commissioners, and we must look to them for the proper execution of the laws. The objection suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire would apply to any other power which was sought to be reposed in them for execution.

Mr. CHANDLER. I grant that it would, but the Commissioners act strangely in some particulars. I have examined the joint resolution; I do not see any objection to it on the face of it; I think it is properly guarded; but I feel no certainty that the Commissioners under this law will not grant permits to the Potomac Electric Company or the United States Electric Company or some other company to tear up the pavements and lay conduits. Now, suppose they do that; that the company which has the permit granted goes on and tears up the pavement; that there is an application made to one judge to restrain the company, and the judge refuses to grant the injunction. I ask the Senator whether this would give the Commissioners power to tear up the streets?

Mr. BACON. I understand the purport of the Senator's inquiry to be whether the authority granted might not be so used as to grant to one of the electric-light companies here the power to establish certain connections by tearing up the streets which they otherwise would not have. Is that it?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will read the joint resolution, he will see that it looks solely to the temporary use of streets, and that no such construction could be put upon it without an absolute violation of every rule of construction. The Senator will observe that all the wires are to be removed within a certain time. Certainly there could be no object in giving to either of the electric-light companies the right to tear up streets for the purpose of making connections which they proposed to utilize thereafter. Under this law they will have to be removed within five days, I think. They have to be removed by March 5, the day after, but I will state in this connection that I want to amend that and make it March 6.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is mistaken in supposing that they could not remain after that time. They have a much longer time in which to remove them.

Mr. BACON. Oh, yes; within ten days after, so far as some of them are concerned.

Mr. McMILLAN. I can state to the Senator from New Hampshire that the provisions of the joint resolution are copied from the joint resolution of four years ago, almost word for word, and it is a mere temporary obstruction of the streets. I am quite sure there is no objection to the Commissioners or anybody else tearing up the streets for such a purpose. The object is to enable the inaugural committee to make arrangement for temporary lights. I do not think there can be any objection to tearing up the streets for the purpose.

Mr. HALE. If I do not interrupt the Senator from New Hampshire, I will state that I do not find in the statute of four years ago any such provisions authorizing the breaking up of the streets or stretching wires overhead, as the Senator from Michigan has referred to. Four years ago, under the act approved January 26, 1893, Congress passed a simple, customary act giving the Secretary of War authority "to grant permits to the executive committee on inaugural ceremonies for the use of any reservations or other public spaces in the city of Washington," on the occasion of the inauguration of the President on the 4th of March following, "which, in his opinion, will inflict no serious or permanent injury upon such reservations or public spaces; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may designate for such and other purposes such streets, avenues, and sidewalks in the District as they may deem proper and necessary therefor." That was a simple act giving authority to the Secretary of War over the general subject. The House of Representatives passed that act, word for word, four years ago—the customary act. It did not put in any of the provisions to which the Senator from New Hampshire has called the attention of the Senate, only putting in a proviso:

That all stands or platforms that may be erected on the public spaces aforesaid shall be under the supervision of the said executive committee and in accordance with plans and designs to be approved by the Architect of the Capitol, the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, and the building inspector of the District of Columbia.

So the House in reporting this resolution went to the extent of not lodging any further authority in the Commissioners, but in restricting it, and providing that the discretion should be given not to the Commissioners, but to the Architect of the Capitol, the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, and the building inspector of the District of Columbia, and they left it there, substantially the act of four years ago, under which the inaugural ceremonies have been heretofore conducted, but the Committee on the District of Columbia has gone much further than that, and has introduced subsequent sections which are found in the joint resolution, which raise the question——

Mr. McMILLAN. If the Senator will allow me, I think that the laws passed four years ago came in at different times. The House of Representatives at this session sent over the first part of the pending joint resolution, and we have added to it the provisions of previous acts so as to embody in one act all that is necessary in regard to the subject.

Mr. HALE. I have been reading from the act approved January 26, 1893.

Mr. McMILLAN. But there are several other acts which were subsequently passed for the inauguration in 1893.

Mr. HALE. If there were subsequent acts, I have not found them, but I have found this act, and it appears to cover the ground. What troubles me about it is not simply the authority given to the Commissioners to break up the streets and to leave the city in a disfigured and deformed condition, for that has already been done; but I predict that when the 4th of March comes, this city will be found in a deformed and disfigured condition, so far as its streets go, such as has never before been seen here on the occasion of the 4th of March inaugural ceremonies. Citizens who come here from all parts of the country and who do not wish to be confined to Pennsylvania avenue, where the parade marches, but wish to drive over the city—which belongs to the entire country—will be found confronting such a condition, which has been brought about by the conduct of the Commissioners, as is disgraceful; and the city will be an offense in the nostrils of the people who come here, and who ought to find the city ready to welcome them in its best dress.

That being the case, and as we are likely to be confronted with just that condition, with a cold turn of weather upon us now, and continuing for weeks, quite likely only relenting and growing mild in the last days of February, nobody who sees what has been going on here this winter can have any doubt as to what this city will present for the admiring citizens of the country who come here for the purpose of enjoying and admiring. That having been done through the obstinacy and wrong-headedness of the Commissioners—some Senators and others are inclined to visit it with stronger terms than that, and believe there is something at the bottom worse than that; but I only use this measured phrase of obstinacy and wrong-headedness—I do not want, without knowing where I am going and without knowing what the precedent is, to give any more power to the Commissioners to break up the streets and pavements and add to the disfiguration of the city, and I do not want to give them the power to stretch overhead wires. The word used here is to "stretch" wires. I do not know what is the purpose of that—setting aside the laying of concealed and covered wires which may not be dangerous—the stretching of electric wires overhead in the discretion of anybody, with the great crowd of people who will be here, a hundred thousand it may be, may result in great danger; it may be a very risky thing. In the spirit of inquiry, I should like the Senator from Georgia to tell me what the committee considered might be done under that provision? Is it going to give to the Commissioners the authority to stretch overhead wires in every direction, the breaking of a single one of which might be attended with the loss of life, or the sagging and contact of which with a human body might result in death? Has the committee considered that? Is it prepared to risk that, and is there anything in the precedents which would justify conferring such power as is contained in the joint resolution?

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator allow me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McMILLAN. I will state that the object of this joint resolution is to enable the inaugural committee to extend wires from the Pension building, where the inaugural ball is to be held, to the points necessary for telegraph purposes, and for the purpose of illuminating Pennsylvania avenue. There is no intention of doing anything more than that, and I do not think the joint resolution gives the Commissioners any more power.

Mr. HALE. There is no limitation in the provision of the joint resolution. The language is:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to permit the committee on illumination of the citizens' executive committee for the inaugural ceremonies, March, 1897, to stretch suitable conductors, with sufficient supports, wherever necessary, for the purpose of effecting the said illumination.

Mr. McMILLAN. That is all that is intended.

Mr. HALE. I do not know that, and that is why I make inquiries. I do not discern any limitation. I do not know but what under this provision dangerous overhead wires may be stretched everywhere, in the discretion of the Commissioners, and that the people coming here visiting these reservations or climbing these steps may find themselves in a trap, with danger and risk to life and limb before them.

One purpose I had in rising—lacking confidence that would lead me to lodge any more power with the District Commissioners, to begin with—was that I wanted the District Committee to tell the Senate just what will be the scope and effect of this authority, which seems to be a large one, given in the provision.

Mr. BACON. It is unfortunate if the consideration of this resolution is to be in any manner connected with considerations as to what has occurred under other powers granted to the District Commissioners relative to the extension of electric wires, debates upon which we have recently had in this Chamber. Of course, if the position taken by the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is correct, that no overhead wires are to be allowed, then that will cut off that branch of the authority proposed to be given under the joint resolution. If, on the other hand, there are to be any overhead wires, it is impossible to designate with exact accuracy where they are to go and what limit ought to be put upon them. Something must be left in the discretion of somebody, and who is to exercise that discretion other than the District Commissioners, or who can better exercise it than they I am sure I am at loss to suggest.

Now, I want to suggest to the Senate, in response to the inquiry made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] and also in response to the remarks made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], that there is nothing in this joint resolution which possibly contemplates the tearing up of the streets for the purpose of laying any of these wires. The whole authorization is for the stretching of overhead wires. There is no express authority given to tear up the streets; and the only thing which is in the joint resolution in relation to that is a provision that if in the stretching of overhead wires there is any damage done to the streets or to the pavements, it must be, within a certain time and in a certain way, replaced without expense to the District.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if this joint resolution is sufficiently guarded so that if the Commissioners of the District of Columbia should see fit to make a contract with an electric-light company which has not conduits, it would enable them to furnish this lighting by overhead wires? I ask whether this joint resolution is sufficiently guarded so as to prevent the Commissioners from doing that and permitting any company with which they may contract for lighting to lay conduits for that purpose?

Mr. BACON. To lay underground conduits?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. I should say undoubtedly there is no such authority in this joint resolution—none whatever. The whole authority is to stretch overhead wires.

Mr. GALLINGER. The difficulty in my mind arises from this fact, Mr. President, that in the matter of lighting our public squares or reservations the District Commissioners made a contract with a company that had not conduits, and they have permitted that company to proceed and tear up our streets for 7 or 8 miles for the purpose of getting connections. They tore up the streets for 3 miles in one instance before they came to the first light they were to furnish, and the Commissioners are giving permits at the present time to that very company.

What I want to guard in this joint resolution is that the Commissioners shall make contracts with a company or companies which have connections underground at the present time, so that the lighting that is contemplated in the joint resolution can be procured. If that point is well guarded, I certainly have no objection to the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. BACON. There is nothing in the joint resolution about the laying of any conduits whatever; there is no contemplated laying of conduits, and there is not a line in the joint resolution which can be so construed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope the Senator will put in such a provision.

Mr. HALE. Insert, in line 5 of section 2, after the word "suitable," the word "overhead."

Mr. GALLINGER. That will do.

Mr. BACON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question. I have not examined the joint resolution with any care, but I should like to ask the Senator whether it in any way involves the subject-matter of controversy which has arisen here over the resolution introduced by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]?

Mr. BACON. In no possible manner whatsoever, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Georgia, I think, is mistaken about that. My colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] put the point, suppose under this law the Commissioners authorized one electric light to be erected at the end of the bridge over the Eastern Branch, and then, to extend to that light, authorized an underground conduit to be built from Georgetown to the Eastern Branch in order to get there, arguing that it is impliedly necessary to carry out the original provisions of the act?

Mr. BACON. This joint resolution does not give to the Commissioners the right or power to authorize any company to do anything. It simply gives the Commissioners the right to authorize the executive committee in charge of the inaugural ceremonies to do it—nothing else. It does not authorize any contracts with anybody.

Mr. CHANDLER. Suppose they say the procession may go over the Eastern Branch and there ought to be a light there, why can not the Potomac Company or the United States Electric Light Company be authorized to tear up the pavements and dig a ditch from Georgetown to the Eastern Branch?

Mr. BACON. That can not be done, because there is not a sentence, a word, or a letter in the joint resolution which would authorize the Commissioners to give any authorization of any kind whatever to either of those electric-light companies. It is confined to overhead wires; and the authority is simply given to the executive committee to do certain things. They are the persons who are to stretch the wires.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Georgia to indicate in what respect more authority is being given in this joint resolution, which has been reported from the District Committee, in regard to the inaugural ceremonies, than has been heretofore given in similar cases?

Mr. BACON. There is no substantial difference whatever between this joint resolution and the act read by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. They are substantially the same. It does not embrace all the provisions of previous legislation, but it is substantially the same legislation.

Mr. GRAY. Is there anything in addition to what has been heretofore granted to the committees having these matters in charge?

Mr. BACON. Nothing. They are substantially the same.

Mr. GRAY. I should be opposed to making any enlargement of the power heretofore given in such cases to those having the inaugural ceremonies in charge.

Mr. BACON. This joint resolution does not give any enlarged authority. If Senators will permit me a moment, it is simply a question in which the other side of the Chamber, I presume, is somewhat interested, and if they are not, but to the contrary, we will acquiesce in whatever they prefer in the matter. It is a simple question whether or not on the 4th of March there shall be suitable illumination in this city, whether there shall be suitable facilities for telegraph offices at all points along the line of march, and other places where they are needed, or whether they shall be denied. That is a simple question.

Mr. MILLS. I want to ask the Senator from Georgia whether he thinks that if in the inauguration ceremonies any of these wires should break, there would be any danger to life from such an accident?

Mr. BACON. The Senator is now asking me a question upon electrical science. I understand that in the first stages of electricity all of the wires were over head and that all cities had them over head, but they have been considered safer under ground, and as there is less obstruction in various ways from underground wires, they have all been put under ground. But it is an absolute necessity, if this town is to be illuminated on that occasion, that there shall be overhead wires temporarily stretched. If the Senate thinks they can not be made safe, of course the Senate will not agree that they shall be erected; but, as I said a moment since, the Senate must determine, so far as it can determine this question, whether there shall be an illumination, and if so, overhead wires are the only practical way in which it can be accomplished.

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest to the Senator——

Mr. BATE. I wish to ask a question.

Mr. BACON. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I am only going to suggest an amendment. After the word "suitable," in line 5 of section 2, to insert the word "overhead."

Mr. BACON. I have already agreed to that.

Mr. HALE. In the same section, where the language is "to stretch suitable conductors with sufficient supports wherever necessary," I move to insert after the word "necessary" the words "and in the nearest practicable connection with the present supply of light." So that under this amendment there would not be, as might otherwise be claimed, authority to bring lines of overhead wires clear from Georgetown to the Eastern Branch, but that the overhead wires which are to furnish the illuminating light shall make the nearest practicable connection possible with the present supply of light.

Mr. BACON. I am perfectly willing to agree to that amendment.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator whether in the illumination that is contemplated by this joint resolution it will be necessary to resort to any extensive erection of new poles all over the city?

Mr. HALE. I do not know.

Mr. GRAY. If the amendment is agreed to, it will obviate that, as I understand.

Mr. HALE. My amendment is to prevent just that, so that they will be obliged to tap the supply of light at the nearest possible point. The city will not then be additionally disfigured by long lines of poles being stretched all over it.

Mr. BACON. I think there will be no objection to that amendment.

Mr. HILL. I should like to hear the amendment read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from Georgia accept the amendment?

Mr. BACON. I think that will be agreeable; but the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] desires to have the amendment read.

Mr. HILL. I should prefer to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Maine will be stated from the desk.

The SECRETARY. In line 5 of section 2, after the word "suitable," it is proposed to insert "overhead;" so as to read:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to permit the committee on illumination of the citizens' executive committee for the inaugural ceremonies, March, 1897, to stretch suitable overhead conductors, with sufficient supports, wherever necessary, for the purpose of effecting the said illumination.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Then after the word "necessary," in line 6, I move to insert "and in the nearest practicable connection with the present supply of light."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have offered these amendments not in the spirit of interference with the inaugural ceremonies—because I wish them to be successful; it will be a great occasion in Washington and for the people of the United States, and every proper action we can take here in that direction I think ought to be taken—but we have had experience enough with the overriding of law and authority and with the aggressive seizing of power on the part of the District Commissioners to make us wary in dealing with them; and my purpose is not by any means or in any way to give them authority to creep in here or to intrude themselves to go far beyond what is the intention of Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has that amendment been adopted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The last amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine has not yet been adopted.

Mr. BATE. I desired a moment ago to make an inquiry of the Senator from Georgia. I wish to ask whether, during the previous inaugural ceremonies which have been held in this city, it has been customary to have illuminations of the kind proposed by the pending joint resolution?

Mr. BACON. The distinguished Senator from Tennessee has been in a much better position to judge of that than I.

Mr. BATE. I thought the Senator, being a member of the District Committee, would have all the information upon the subject.

Mr. BACON. My impression is that the city has been illuminated on such occasions.

Mr. BATE. The Senator is on the committee, and I supposed was familiar with the subject, and hence the question which I proposed, whether the city had been so illuminated heretofore.

Mr. BACON. I understand from my recollection and reading of these acts—and I have carefully compared them with the pending joint resolution—that they were substantially the same as this.

I move to strike out the word "fifth," in line 8 of section 2, and insert "sixth."

Mr. HALE. Has my amendment been adopted?

Mr. BACON. It has not yet been acted upon by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the committee. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 6, after the word "necessary," it is proposed to insert "and in the nearest practicable connection with the present supply of light."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 8, after the word "March," it is proposed to strike out "fifth" and insert "sixth;" so as to read:

Provided, That the said conductors shall not be used for the conveying of electrical currents after March 6, 1897.

Mr. BACON. I am informed by the managers on the part of the executive committee that there are some festivities which will probably require the use of these electric currents until the 6th of March, and they have asked me to have that change made in the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer an amendment to come in at the close of section 2, to follow the words "District of Columbia," in these words:

Provided further, That the construction of additional underground conduits is specifically prohibited under the provisions of this act.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator please explain what he understands by that amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that I have not been so unfortunate in the use of language as to offer an amendment which is not readily understandable by any Senator. The amendment provides that for the purpose of these overhead illuminations no further underground conduits shall be laid. That is precisely what the amendment says and precisely what it means. In other words, we have 5 or 6 or 7 miles of streets torn up at the present time, done under a condition of things such as never existed in this city before, at a season of the year when it has never been permitted before, and, in my judgment, in violation of law, and I do not want to see any further streets torn up between now and the 4th day of March for the purpose of this inaugural illumination. That is all the amendment contemplates; it is what it says; and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. HILL. When this joint resolution was introduced and was about to pass, all at once there came a universal anxiety in regard to the protection of the streets of the city of Washington. It was not because Senators were not desirous of making the inauguration a success, for they have manifested over and over again that they were, and that they wanted all the illumination possible, and they wanted the inauguration to be a grand success, in which desire every good citizen joins them; but it has been postponed from time to time in order that Senators might understand these provisions. I do not know now that there is any special objection to the amendments which have been proposed, but I desire to inquire of the distinguished Senator from Georgia whether he understands, under the provisions of this joint resolution, whether this additional electrical lighting is to be by subways or overhead wires, that the status quo will be restored after the inauguration ceremonies have been concluded?

Mr. BACON. I think that is the distinct provision in the joint resolution.

Mr. HILL. If that be so, I care very little about the provisions of the joint resolution. I do not want to anticipate a contest which has been waged for some time in regard to the general subject of electric lighting. My anxiety in regard to the streets does not depend upon whether a particular existing company is given the electric lighting or not. The amendment of the Senator from Maine enables connections to be made with the lines of the nearest company, which, in the main, of course, means the United States Electric Lighting Company, but I suppose when that is effected there will not be such intense anxiety in regard to the streets. I am not sure but that the amendment is entirely proper.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. HALE. I have not the least knowledge where these different companies have their wires located. My amendment says nothing about the nearest companies. It says the "nearest supply of light," and whichever company that is will have the benefit of that provision. What I want is to cut short this stretching of wires and putting up of posts, and to compel the supply to be taken from the nearest supply of lights, whichever company has it. I have no doubt the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] ought to pass, unless underneath the Commissioners are lying in wait furtively upon some grant of power that nobody suspects. If they are, then somebody ought to object to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire; but unless they are, nobody can object to his amendment.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I am willing to accept the statement of the Senator, but I ask the Secretary to read the amendment again for my information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 2 it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That the construction of additional underground conduits is specifically prohibited under the provisions of this act.

Mr. HILL. Will not the words "under the provisions of this act" hereafter prevent any subways being laid from the moment this joint resolution becomes a law?

Mr. GALLINGER. This is a temporary act, and the operations of the act expire, I take it, on the 10th day of March next.

Mr. HALE. Put in the words "for the purposes of this act."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HILL. That is a different proposition. That is all right.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not change the amendment a particle; but I have no objection to it being modified in that way.

Mr. HILL. It might otherwise mean something else.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire as modified by the Senator from New York will be stated from the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment so as to make it read:

Provided further, That for the purposes of this act the construction of additional underground conduits is specifically prohibited.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is entirely satisfactory, Mr. President, and it is precisely what I meant to reach.

Mr. HILL. I think that covers the point I raised, and I am inclined to think the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], whereby the connections are to be made with the nearest lighting plant, or the nearest supply, is all right. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I make no opposition to the joint resolution. The ball can go on, Mr. President. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Before the joint resolution is voted upon, I desire to apologize to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] for seeming to delay him in the execution of what is a worthy and beneficent and proper purpose. I did so through fear that the provisions of this resolution might be taken advantage of improperly.

Last summer I made particular inquiry as to the effect of amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and was informed by the members of that committee that they had so legislated that the streets of this city could not be torn up by more than one electric-light company. I went away feeling certain of that, if I felt certain of anything, last summer. Coming back here in December, and having occasion to go over to Georgetown, I found the pavements torn up and a ditch there.

I walk a little unsteadily myself at times, as possibly other Senators do, and I do not want to see any more ditches dug in this city than are necessary, even for the purpose of placing electric-light conduits therein. A little later, coming down Fifteenth street, there was a ditch there. Going up New York avenue, there was a ditch there; and, as I had occasion to say in the Senate the other day, one of the finest concrete pavements that I have ever known laid was being torn to pieces by the pickaxes of the workmen. That thing has been going on all this session, and the Senator from New York has been talking all the present session on the subject now before the Senate. This very morning, coming through Judiciary Square, there was another ditch open, unfilled. In front of the Executive Mansion there has been a tearing up of pavements and the digging of a ditch; and it has all happened either in direct disobedience of a law of Congress or else in repudiation of the assurances that were given to me by members of the Appropriations Committee of this body.

There is nothing I can see in the proposed law which gives any undue authority to the Commissioners, but there was as much power, in my judgment, for them to lay conduits, permanent conduits, in the streets of this city under it, as it read before the amendment of my colleague was adopted, as there was to dig up the streets in the manner I have described and lay conduits under the law of last summer.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, another Richmond in the field. The question which the Senator from New Hampshire has been discussing was debated about a week ago, and it is not really involved here. I do not know that the Senate is responsible for any misinformation which was furnished by any committee of this body to the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, and upon the faith of which he left town last summer and left this city to its fate. If he had remained here and looked after the interests of the city instead of leaving it to go to the bow wows, perhaps the city might have been better off. I have possibly suggested here that my friend objects to some of these ditches because he rides a bicycle, and therefore does not want to be interfered with.

There will be ample time to discuss the great subject of the lighting of this city and the whole electric question when it shall appear in its proper shape. I do not propose to anticipate it. I was a little anxious, as I see our friends on the other side were, that nothing should be placed in the joint resolution that would intrench monopoly more than it is intrenched in this city. But in the inauguration ceremonies I have not as much interest, of course, as has the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire. I noticed, however, a little restlessness on the other side every time it is suggested that it shall be made a success. The poor boys from West Point were not permitted to come here, because they would get their feet wet, and it might injure them, and interfere with their studies, their Greek and Latin. All at once there was intense anxiety upon the part of some for fear that injury might be done to the West Point boys. The people of the country would have been delighted to see them parade the streets here.

When this usual and ordinary joint resolution was presented by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] substantially as was done four years ago, all at once there was intense anxiety that the illumination business should be looked after. I can not account for all of these things. They are perhaps natural, under the circumstances. It was a strange coincidence that when two or three Senators upon the other side, who are known to be warm friends of the President-elect, were urging that the boys from West Point might be permitted to come here, others whose sympathies before the nomination were known to be elsewhere were very violently opposed to it. By a close vote the boys are not to come, although I believe the Secretary of War and the President still have a right, and I hope they will exercise it, to send them here, that the country may see the cadets of that school, which costs about a half million dollars a year to support. I hope they will be here, notwithstanding the opposition of the Senate to their coming.

Mr. President, I have said this much merely upon the general subject involved, and in answer to my friend the Senator from New Hampshire, to differ with whom I always regret very much. When the real monopoly question is before the Senate properly, then I shall very cheerfully join in the discussion with my friend the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should not say another word if the Senator from New York——.

Mr. HILL. I would not, then.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from New York had not implied that I am sometimes guilty of neglect of duty, and that I am not sufficiently active concerning public questions, leaving the city last summer perhaps before I ought to have done so. I repel that suggestion. I keep as busy as I can and attend to as many things as I can, but I am utterly unable to keep up with my friend the Senator from New York.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have the amendment to the amendment read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will again be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of line 22, on page 3, the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That for the purposes of this act the construction of additional underground conduits is specifically prohibited.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I have nothing to say about the electrical question. I have been here a number of times and have witnessed the inauguration of a number of Presidents, and I think this measure pursues the line that has been adopted all along of obstructing the streets, of granting to favorites the parks which belong to the entire people of the United States, enabling certain favored persons, in order to make revenue which they ought to contribute from their own pockets to the inauguration fund, to obstruct the view from windows and doors, all of which do not legitimately belong to the Government of the United States, but are rights belonging to the citizens of the District which the Government usurps to grant for a moneyed consideration to certain beneficiaries.

I do not see why the citizens of the United States who wish to witness the great pageant that occurs here every four years should not have a right to stand on the streets. They come here and crowd the streets by hundreds of thousands, and yet on every public square from here to the White House, on every reservation, these obstructions are erected by authority of Congress, the privileges being sold out for revenue to the committees who have charge of the inauguration ceremonies. They obstruct the view from houses, and they obstruct the view from the streets. I believe the streets and parks belong in common to all the people, and that they ought to be permitted to enjoy them. My objection to the joint resolution goes to its very foundation, and I hope that some time we will stop the business of selling the public highways and parks of the District to individuals, and that we will permit the entire body of the people to enjoy the rights to which they are entitled.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 3247.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3247) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," approved February 20, 1889.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that to-morrow at 4 o'clock a vote may be taken on the bill and all pending amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from Alabama, that at 4 o'clock to-morrow a vote may be taken upon the pending bill and amendments.

Mr. VILAS. I beg to state that I understand there are several Senators who wish to present their views on this subject. The stage of debate has not yet been reached when, in our opinion, unanimous consent for a vote can fairly be asked.

Mr. MORGAN. Objection being made, I hope the gentlemen will go on and make their arguments upon the bill.

Mr. HALE. Suppose the Senator from Alabama makes a proposition to extend it a day. It is very important——

Mr. WHITE. I suggest even three days.

Mr. HALE. This is Monday. What was the Senator's suggestion—for a vote on Tuesday?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. HALE. Suppose the Senator, to give ample space, makes the suggestion that on Thursday at 4 o'clock we shall vote.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well.

Mr. HALE. That gives three full days.

Mr. CULLOM. That certainly ought to be time enough.

Mr. HALE. Suppose the Senator from Alabama asks that on Thursday at 4 o'clock a vote be taken upon the bill and pending amendments. That is practically four days.

Mr. MORGAN. I will make the request as stated by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. VILAS. I simply desire to state that the space of time which shall be consumed by the opponents of this measure they feel they are entitled to consider themselves, and that it ought not to be farmed out to them by the friends of the measure at this time. Objection will be interposed to any request at this stage of the debate for unanimous consent to fix a time for taking a vote.

Mr. HALE. I suppose the Senator from Wisconsin realizes how immense from this time to the 4th of March will be the pressure upon us of other matters of business, increasing every week. There will be less pressure this week than next week; there will be less pressure next week than the week after. The greatest pressure will be in the last few weeks.

Now, it seems to me we are not likely to be able to give much time to the pending matter after this week. Then there is the bankruptcy bill, which comes next, and in which there is great public interest; there are the Hawaiian cable and other matters of great importance, and it does seem to me, while I do not wish in any way to constrain the Senator in his action, who is opposed to this measure, that if we can agree upon any time which will give everybody an opportunity to debate it it will help other matters. I take it that debating and the making of speeches upon the bill will be largely monopolized by those opposed to the measure. I am in favor of the Nicaraguan Canal bill, but I do not wish to make a speech. I would rather take a vote. If the Senator can agree upon any time it will help other business. It will help the minds of Senators who are interested in other measures, so that they may know when they will come up. If the Senator can agree to any time, I appeal to him to give us an opportunity to fix a time.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to make an inquiry. I thought that when the Senate adjourned the other day the yeas and nays had been ordered on the motion to recommit the bill? In that case, nothing is in order but the calling of the roll, I take it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays were not ordered, the Chair is advised.

Mr. LODGE. They were not ordered? I thought they had been ordered.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to reenforce the appeal of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to my honorable friend the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. Everybody knows his zeal, his diligence, and his ability. I suppose it is not out of place, as the Senator's term of office is growing to a close, to say that both in committee and on the floor of the Senate there is no single member of this body who has more faithfully, ably, to the satisfaction and respect and regard of his associates, done his duty than the Senator from Wisconsin. But the refusal, after a measure has been so long discussed, to allow a time to be fixed for a vote does not hurt the bill at all, because it has the right of way; and of course if a majority of the Senate choose to insist upon a vote on it, it will be voted upon during the present Congress, because I do not suppose anybody would take the responsibility of killing the appropriation bills. If they do, there will be another session pretty soon to pass them.

But what it does is to kill every other measure that stands behind it, which have been diligently perfected, which the public desire to have considered, and to which Senators have given their best pains and efforts to perfect and get ready. So to say, after this measure has been before the Senate for three or four weeks, we will not agree that at the end of four days there shall be a vote is simply to say we will not let any other measure come up. It will not hurt this bill one particle. It will not give any advantage to its opponents or do any injury to its friends, but it will kill other matters. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will not object.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to state, supplementing observations already made, that from a considerable investigation I do not believe the friends of this measure, of whom I am one, intend to consume much time in its discussion. Personally I had intended to go over the matter and perhaps in detail, but desiring a vote, feeling that friendship toward the measure is better evidenced by abstention from elaborate discussion, the end of the session being so near, I think there will not be very elaborate discussion on behalf of the friends of the measure. Of course there will be some remarks. If it were possible for Senators who oppose it to agree upon any time for a vote it would undoubtedly be desirable to do so. Of course no one criticises them for failing to do so, but it would certainly be acceptable, if it were possible, to agree upon some day.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I wish to add the expression of my own approval to the considerations submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], not in a general way, but upon a special ground. From the West and Northwest has gone up a demand for the early consideration of the bankruptcy bill which ought to be heeded. There is a vast deal of complaint not justified, I think, because of the delay in the consideration of that measure. It comes from multitudes of people of business energy and capacity, whose affairs are in such condition that their personal efforts can not be turned into the channels of business. It is an important element in any return to prosperity in this country that that vigorous talent and business ability shall be emancipated so as to lend a hand to a return to prosperity and the resumption of general business.

I appeal to my friend the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] and others of his way of thinking to join with us in agreeing upon a day when a vote upon this measure can be taken, for I assure Senators that I am not now speaking for any one particular locality in this country, but am giving the tone of multitudes of letters received from almost everywhere praying for the immediate consideration, or as soon as possible, by the Senate of the bankruptcy bill.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, the situation of this case, the Nicaragua Canal, is such that those who oppose the bill in its present shape are not able to consent to a particular time for taking a vote on the measure. I beg leave to call the attention of Senators who have appealed to others to set a time to the fact that a good deal of new matter has recently been introduced into the consideration of this measure, matter introduced diplomatically by a foreign minister, and matter in reply thereto, which was submitted to the Senate but very recently and during the course of this debate.

The friends of the measure have already commenced to change the structure of their bill and to provide an amendment or amendments to meet the shifting condition of affairs. For one, I hope to offer some amendments to the bill, and I expect to offer them. I have heard other Senators say that they expect to offer amendments to the bill, and I anticipate offering an amendment to the amendment which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has submitted to the bill. There are other Senators besides the Senator from Wisconsin who have not yet spoken upon the bill and who desire to address the Senate concerning it. One of them, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], who I understand is not well, is absent to-day.

I also call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the friends of the measure have already occupied many times more time than has been occupied by the opponents. Indeed, sir, very few speeches have been made and very little time has been consumed so far by the opponents of a measure which involves the expenditure initially of $100,000,000 and has a perspective of expenditure of many million dollars beyond. I have never known of any measure approximating in magnitude, in importance, and in far-reaching consequences what the pending bill contemplates that has been so little considered pro and con in its detail in the Senate. I join with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] in saying that I hope no impediments will be put to the consideration of the bankrupt bill. In the present attitude of the Nicaraguan Canal bill, with the grave objections which have been uttered against it from quarters which are deserving of respect, with the divided sentiment with which that bill is contemplated, I do not think it ought to be urged with whip and spur before the Senate. I believe there are many Senators here to-day, who have a general feeling in favor of the bill and who consider it simply as a Nicaraguan Canal bill and who, being in favor of the canal, are in favor of any bill that looks toward its construction, who, had they the time and opportunity to scan and analyze, and fully comprehend the details of this bill, would say it ought to be reshaped and entirely remolded before it is put upon its passage in the Senate.

There is another reason why this measure ought not to be urged upon the Senate in any hasty fashion or by any attempt at this juncture to force a vote upon a particular day. At this stage of the session Senators are not masters of their own time. They are engaged upon committees night and day, which have in hand the current and instant business of the Senate, business which can not be postponed, appropriation bills involving millions and hundreds of millions of dollars, details of legislation which exact their present attention. They can not withdraw themselves from those insistent duties which now compel their attendance and attention to go into the details of sifting and considering this momentous and important legislation. It is not consistent with the fitness of things that such a measure should be urged before the Senate in any hasty or peremptory fashion. The world will not suffer and is not suffering because of the canal bill being postponed a month or two months or six months or a year. It is not of those exigent things that appeals to Congress to act upon it, and to act upon it now.

It has been upon the tapis for three hundred years, in one shape or another, in the attention of nations. The conditions of the diplomatic relations between the United States and other countries affected by the bill are in an unsettled and in a very dubious state. There are treaties with Nicaragua, treaties with Great Britain——

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me to say a word?

Mr. DANIEL. I will allow the Senator from Illinois to interrupt me for a question.

Mr. CULLOM. I merely wish to make a remark. It seems very evident that we are not going to get an agreement for a time to vote upon the bill now, and I therefore suggest that we proceed to the consideration of the measure instead of debating the question whether we can fix a day.

Mr. DANIEL. I will be very glad to entertain the Senator's suggestion in a few moments.

Meantime, sir, as I was observing—and my remarks are apropos to the discussion of the bill—we should take into consideration the condition of Congress, the condition of the country, the condition of the Senate, pending measures before the Senate in the nature of a treaty and existing treaties with foreign nations, a protest made by the minister of a foreign nation, all of which combine and concentrate their influences in objection to any hasty or imperious consideration of this measure.

While it may be said that it has been before one Congress and another, while it may be said that the Senate has passed favorably upon it in one form and another, it has never been considered under such conditions as are presented now. It has never been considered under the shadow of a respectful protest sent to us by the minister of a foreign state. It is true that that protest was somewhat irregularly laid before the Senate. It was a communication from that foreign minister to the Secretary of State. The irregularity was not upon his part. There was no message from the President of the United States accompanying that protest; there was no communication from the Secretary of State expounding the Government's view of the relation created by that protest; but a mere naked protest, a communication to the Secretary of State, was in an irregular and side-long fashion interjected into the Senate without the default of that minister and without explanations or expositions from the executive department of our Government. Therefore, Senators had for themselves to study out what was the effect of that communication. They were not advised or prompted, nor have they had any light shed upon it by the executive department of the Government. And we do not know from any intimation or from any view of the Executive or from any statement accompanying this document what may be the views of the executive department concerning this matter. It may be that all our labors here at this session would be in vain if we were to withdraw ourselves from the pressing legislation that demands our attention and bestow our attention upon the canal. There is nothing from the executive department, however delicate, from which we may draw implications and inferences as to what its position would be.

So, Mr. President, in the present condition of affairs, I ask the gentlemen who are so anxious about the condition of the people, who say there is a public outcry for the passage of a bankruptcy bill, to heed their constituents and move to take up the bankruptcy bill and proceed to deal with a measure in which our own immediate constituents are so much concerned. Sir, the millions of people in this country who have been wrecked, ruined, prostrated, and almost destroyed by those peculiar brands of prosperity which have been served out to them under recent systems of legislation are much more interested in trying to reestablish themselves in business and join the industrial throng who are trying to build up in this country than they are in some ill-considered and but poorly digested scheme, as I conceive, to spend $100,000,000 of money that does not exist and must be wrung out of them by taxation to build a canal in a foreign state, which as soon as it is built will become a highway of the world at the use of the very British brethren whom it is said we should be in rivalry with to get hold of it. The very moment that the canal is built, by treaty between Great Britain and Nicaragua, Great Britain is to have the advantages on the canal of the most favored nation. However much you may favor the United States in the bill, however much our negotiators with Nicaragua may incline to favor the United States in their treaty of cession or in any provision in their charter or in any inclination of partiality to us, the moment that partiality is extended, the moment that favor is granted, Great Britain has a treaty with Nicaragua that grants it to her upon identically the same terms; and yet, Mr. President, we are urged to expedite the passage of the pending bill in order to obtain some visionary and undefined advantage over Great Britain.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I simply desire to supplement that which has been so well stated by my colleague [Mr. WHITE]. The friends of this measure merely desire an expression from the Congress of the United States as to whether they favor the passage of the pending measure. For twenty years or more, in some form or other, it has been before Congress. During the past three years, in which time I have had the honor to occupy a seat upon this floor, the measure has been before us. It has been discussed in all of its various phases, and at this session I have, for one, remained silent as a friend of the measure, hoping by doing so that its opponents, after having presented all of their objections, would be willing to give us a vote upon the question.

It is a measure of great importance not only to the whole country, but especially so to the 3,000 miles of coast bordering on the Pacific Ocean. California, Washington, and Oregon, through their respective legislatures, by joint resolution, and through their different commercial organizations, have, as well as Alaska, by petition, again and again memorialized Congress to vote upon the measure. Only two weeks ago in San Francisco, the great metropolis of the West, the great commercial city of the Western empire, there assembled a mass meeting of 10,000 representative citizens, and they passed resolutions in favor of the measure, after setting forth in a preamble the great advantages which they believed would accrue to this country, and especially to the Pacific Coast, by its passage.

I have data and figures which I should like to present to the Senate showing why, from a commercial point of view, I believe the canal would be worth to the United States three times, aye, ten times, its estimated cost; but I forbear inflicting the Senate with the figures and with such an argument, because every Senator upon this floor has well weighed the question in his own mind and is ready to-day to vote in accordance with his judgment and with his own convictions of his duty to his country and this great measure of national importance.

I wish, however, to say a word in answer to the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I want to say parenthetically that Virginia, Georgia, the Carolinas, and all the States upon the Gulf of Mexico would profit by the building of the canal quite as much as the great States on the Pacific Ocean or the States of New England. They have inexhaustible mines of iron and great mineral wealth, and they would find a market for it in the West. They would find it by manufacturing rails and sending them to Russia, where they are now constructing one of the great railroads of the world.

I wish to say that the United States will have an advantage in this canal that England or no other country can have unless our present navigation laws are repealed. We have on the Atlantic Ocean from Maine to the Gulf 2,500 miles of coast line, while on the Pacific Ocean from San Diego up, with 800 miles on the coast of California, and with the coast of Oregon, Washington, and Alaska we have nearly 4,000 miles bordering on the ocean. No foreign ship, no vessel flying a foreign flag, can engage in this coasting trade. That commerce belongs alone to our own people, to our own country, and therefore our vessels will take the product of Virginia, they will take the coal from their inexhaustible coal fields, and find a market for it on the Pacific Coast. It will be transported in American vessels manned by Americans. That is one of the great advantages which will accrue to the United States over that of any other country.

Mr. President, the opposition to the pending measure has surely been presented with all legal acumen, with all ingenuity and shrewdness, by the legal gentlemen from Indiana, Wisconsin, and Virginia. It has been presented in all of its most offensive phases, if I may use the term, by which it could be made objectionable to our friends representing the interior States of the country. If there has been a weak spot they have probed it. If there has been anything in the bill that they could so present, upon which there was a shadow of doubt, it has been presented to us with the most specious argument possible to convince us laymen that it is not a wise measure for Congress to pass. But the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who in his great learning, his legal ability, his zeal and persistency in whatever he undertakes, in whatever he advocates, with his conviction of right and duty to his constituents and his country, has, I think, substantially answered every objection that has been presented.

Now we come to you and say, give us the opportunity, give the Senators upon this floor the privilege of voting upon the measure. Each one is the custodian of his own conscience. Each one is responsible to his constituents and to our whole country for his act here. While I claim to be guided by patriotic and honest motives, although perhaps mistaken in some of my views, I cheerfully concede to those who differ from me that they are equally as honest and equally as conscientious and patriotic as I. But let us vote, and whatever the majority vote may be, every one of us will bow in acquiescence to the will of the majority when so expressed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I inquire what is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SEWELL in the chair). The question before the Senate is on the recommittal of the bill to the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I thought there was a question of unanimous consent.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not so understand.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no; the bill is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the recommittal of the bill to the Special Committee on the Nicaragua Canal.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I hope the bill will not be recommitted. We have spent many years in trying to do something, and the present condition surrounding the canal project, it seems to me, makes it important to have some affirmative action. To recommit the bill would look too much like an abandonment of the scheme altogether, and I think if we should do that we would be very sorry. I think we ought to pass the bill.

With regard to giving way to the bankruptcy bill, there is no doubt that there is great necessity for a voluntary bankruptcy act, and one could be passed without debate; but if it should be accompanied by an involuntary bankruptcy feature it would be the greatest calamity that could happen to this country at the present time. Whatever may have been the cause of the depression, it will not be denied that many thousands of enterprising business men are unable to convert their assets into money and meet their obligations. That condition is almost universal. Almost everyone is behind in payments. I am not willing to place those people at the mercy of their creditors. There is no danger that the creditors will force a person really insolvent into bankruptcy. That they will not do, because there are not assets enough to divide; but the temptation to collect a debt through the instrumentality of the bankruptcy law and destroy a man's property when there is enough to pay all the creditors is very great, and it would be indulged in to an extent that would prove alarming.

I have had some experience with bankruptcy laws. I have observed their operation for a good many years. Every one has been repealed in pursuance of the most urgent demand of the people. Very soon around the bankruptcy courts, around the commissioners connected with the administration of the law, there congregates an army of lawyers' strikers, and it so disgusts the community that they petition for the repeal of the law. If the bill passes there will be petitions here for its repeal in less than six months, and particularly if we join with it involuntary bankruptcy and make a general war upon the creditors, we shall add to the difficulty which already exists.

Now, I think it is about time for a year of jubilee to those who are really insolvent, and we should pass a voluntary bankruptcy law this year. If that does not fill the courts enough, if there is any necessity to amend it so as to extend its operations at the next session, very well. You can pass the measure that is most needed now without debate, but if you accompany it with an involuntary bankruptcy law, which, in my opinion, in the present condition of the country, would be a scourge and would produce more distress than the act could possibly do good, then we shall have to resist it, and it would probably take as much time to pass such a measure and agree upon its terms as would be left of the present session, independent of the time required for the appropriation bills.

I hope that those having charge of the bankruptcy bill will not present anything more at this session than the voluntary portion of that measure. You can get that, and when that is in operation, if more is needed to accomplish the purpose, you can easily amend it by adding to it an involuntary provision. I hope there will not be pressed upon the Senate at the present session an involuntary bankruptcy law.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, it is not to be supposed or not to be taken for granted that the opponents of the pending bill are opponents of the scheme to connect the Pacific and the Atlantic oceans by an interoceanic canal. When a similar bill was before this body, I took occasion to say that, while I was in favor of connecting the two oceans by a canal, I was opposed to the instrumentality of connection by and through such a bill.

Since that period grave complications have surrounded the question. The minister plenipotentiary of the Greater Republic of Central America has made a protest which has gotten before this body involving considerations of great moment, in my opinion. The main point in the protest of the minister is that an article of the treaty of cession, as it is called, prohibiting foreign governments from taking control of the canal, is violated by this bill. After the protest was read, and after an argument was made on the protest by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] attempted to amend the bill in certain particulars so as to obviate the objections or the protests made by the minister from the Greater Republic of Central America.

In view of the serious character of the protest, in view of the possible complications between the United States and the Government of Nicaragua arising out of the protest and the facts surrounding the protest, it occurs to me that the bill ought to be discussed with the greatest deliberation and care. Moreover, the report of the Ludlow commission throws such a flood of light upon all the engineering problems surrounding the building of the canal and gives facts and data so utterly opposed to the finding of the chief engineer of the canal, Mr. Menocal, that in my opinion the Senate of the United States ought to take due care and wisely deliberate before it adopts this bill for a canal to be constructed upon the plan of the chief engineer of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

All these considerations are such as to warrant the gravest and the most deliberate discussion of the bill.

Mr. President, while I sympathize with the people of the Pacific Slope in their desire to have such a water communication as will compete with the railroads, or a water communication that will answer the ends of their commerce, I think it is better to make haste slowly. I think that undue and precipitate action in adopting an ill-considered bill, or a bill that will not effect their purposes, will produce more delay and more embarrassment to them than if they now wisely consider, patiently consider, industriously consider the terms of the pending bill to see whether the bill will accomplish the purposes which they have in view. I do not think it will. While I am in deep sympathy with the people of the Pacific Slope and desire to accord them, so far as the Government of the United States may, the privilege of water communication between their country and the Atlantic, I do not think that it will advance their purpose by undertaking to pass the bill in its present shape.

Therefore, I coincide with the Senator from Virginia in the appeal he has made for such careful deliberation of the bill as will insure, first, the building of the canal, and second, all the rights of the United States; and as incidental to those rights, and as incidental to the proper attitude of the United States, care should be taken lest by passing the bill in its present form we antagonize the Republic of Nicaragua and violate concessions under which the present company is undertaking to construct the canal.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, the remarks which have been made by the friends of the bill, and the appeal which has been addressed to those who oppose it, require some observations to be made before entering upon its discussion on the merits.

This project for a canal across the Isthmus at some point has been a historical dream almost from the very hour when Balboa—first of Europeans—gazed upon the unknown waters of the Pacific seas from the mountain tops of the Isthmus. The United States have always testified their interest in the great scheme. The people of this country have been challenged to its consideration in every way which could engage them or appeal to their imagination. That the United States should give countenance and favor to the project for the construction of the canal has been pressed in various forms and ways upon the people. Political conventions have expressed themselves in favor of a Nicaraguan canal, or an isthmian canal more generally, and within the last three Congresses there has been much debate and much effort made otherwise to bring to the public mind every suggestion, every argument, every feature of statistical information which could win it public favor.

Speeches, reports of committees, various newspaper presentations of the subject, all have been put before the country, and they have almost altogether, with two or three very notable exceptions, been favorable to the scheme, with little of the argument in opposition presented. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] has done great service, not only in his speech a few days since, but in the Fifty-third Congress, on this subject. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] challenged attention to the great risk which would be undertaken in a most admirable and beautiful speech, such as he always makes. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] also presented a powerful argument against it, and introduced in the Fifty-third Congress a measure which was so obviously just and proper that it was adopted instead of the bill and became the law for a commission of examination. But, with the exceptions named, and some others, perhaps, which for the moment I do not recall, the argument of years in Congress in every various form in which it could be presented has been put before the people to enlist their sympathy with this project and to engage their patriotism in support of it.

Indeed, sir, it is a thing which appeals to the imagination of any man; and this particular project is especially charming. One pictures ships—the ships of the world—in the mind's eye climbing the mountain sides to an elevation of 110 feet above the level of the sea, and then, passing to and fro as upon a thread in mid-air, descending again into the great deep upon the other side. It indeed presents a project captivating to the mind. But the proposition with which we have to deal has not been by any means argued to the people of the United States. Few of them realize that it stands not now upon the old lines of public policy settled by the wise men of this country during the last sixty years, but is a new scheme—a scheme which proposes that the United States alone shall load upon the overburdened shoulders of its taxpayers the entire cost, all the risks, and all the responsibilities, financially and internationally, which are involved.

That proposal was not originally presented by this Maritime Canal Company. It has worked itself into the present form step by step, with gradual encroachment, until at last we are presented with the simple proposition that we will pay directly in bonds to this company four million and a half dollars for the privilege of building the canal at our own cost, besides $7,000,000 more in the paid-up stock of the company.

Sir, the kindly favor of the people of the United States to this general project is by no means, in my judgment, one which they would yield to the proposal we now have under discussion. And I beg to say that after all this array of argument, after all the speeches that have been made here through years in favor of the general plan and circulated among the people, it is not unfair, it is not ungenerous opposition on the part of those who oppose this scheme to insist upon looking at it as now before us face to face and considering all that it involves as matter of national public policy as well as of cost and expediency.

It seems to me that this demand for an immediate vote now pressed upon the opponents of the bill is peculiarly an unreasonable one in view of the time and the circumstances under which this bill is now brought forward. It will be remembered that the result of the brief discussion in the Fifty-third Congress was to send an inquiry to a board of engineers to report whether, first, the scheme proposed was feasible at all at any cost; and, next, what would be the probable cost. The board was created, money was appropriated, and they entered upon their duties. There was the chance for the friends of this scheme to have silenced their enemies. If it had the merit which had been claimed for it, might we not have expected that those merits would have been exhibited by that report? But what happened? That board reported with promptness. Commissioned in the early part of the year 1895, with diligent labor it visited the scene, collected all the information within reach, gathered by previous surveys, by observations and examinations, and on the 31st of October it filed with the Secretary of State its report.

Sir, the friends of this measure, I have grounds for belief, knew pretty soon what that report was. They seem to have been struck breathless. Well they might have been. We could not learn its details for a little while. It was through the public press that gradually, toward the end of that year, after Congress had assembled, it began to be known that the report of that board of engineers had condemned this project as one already ripe for execution so completely that had it been made to a board of directors of any corporation in the United States there would have been an end of the project at once, unless, after careful and particular further examination, the difficulties which the board presented, and which seemed almost insuperable, could be surmounted by engineering skill.

The friends of the bill did not yet ask for the publication of the report. By and by, however, nearly two months after Congress had assembled, in the long session of this Congress, a resolution was addressed to the President, requesting a copy of that report, which was promptly sent forward, I believe transmitted on the 7th of February, 1896. There it lay on the table of the Speaker undisturbed until the 4th of March, 1896, when it was referred to a committee and ordered to be printed. That report, so strong seemed to be the control which the friends of the scheme exerted for the subject, was not then printed, with its large addenda and appendices and tables and maps and illustrations. We looked for them. The report came half fledged before Congress, and for the first time I have just been enabled to obtain the other part of the report, this large document [exhibiting], bearing the imprint of the Government Printing Office, under date of 1897, this present year.

Sir, hearings were had by a committee in another body, which have been printed, and which are accessible to us, in which it would seem as if that board, composed of one of the best engineers of the Army, another of the Navy, and another illustrious in this country for his great works of engineering skill, was simply subjected to cross-examination with a view to possibly discredit the public service which they had rendered in patriotic fidelity to the obligation assumed by their acceptance of the appointment.

Then, at the last session of this Congress, when there was ample time for the discussion of this great measure, why was it not brought forward? A day or two—I think not so much as a week—before the adjournment of that session, this bill was reported. We all remember that the last long session of Congress was an unusually short long session. There was little of special importance to engage the body beyond the appropriation bills and political speeches, and they were perhaps less in number than are usually made anticipatory of a coming Presidential campaign. This bill might easily have been debated then, but, as I said, it came before this body only as the time for its adjournment was nigh. Since then we have had a Presidential election, absorbing to a very great degree in its nature, obliterating and sweeping from mind many of the matters which before were prominent in our attention. Now, this measure is brought in here at this short session of Congress, and demand to suspend all their opposition is made upon those who feel a public duty resting upon them to resist it, in order that its friends may hurry the scheme through.

In what can it be supposed that this plan has been so much improved by merely waiting, as that now we shall rush it into execution in defiance of that report of the board of engineers which we ourselves invoked because its perilous character was so fully exhibited in advance? Yet it was a week ago last Thursday that the Senator from Indiana concluded his remarks upon this bill, somewhat in advance of the expectation of those who were intending to join him in resistance to it; and when a little time was asked, only until another day, for the collection of papers necessary to discussion, we had the insinuation given against us that our purpose was only to filibuster; it was denied that we should proceed to debate, and appeals were made at once for an immediate vote on the bill.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, I suggest that there is not a quorum of the Senate present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, as I was remarking, after but a single speech had been made in opposition to the measure, so long ago as a week preceding last Thursday it was attempted to deny to the opponents of the bill privilege to discuss it further; and yet, sir, although seven legislative days have been passed since that time, the opponents of this measure have secured opportunity to enjoy but one. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] on Tuesday of last week—if I remember the date correctly—made a speech, which engaged the attention of the Senate by its strength and eloquence. Two full days have been consumed in speeches by the chairman of the select committee. Sir, I do not complain of it. Very necessary indeed was it that the bill should have defense; very necessary indeed was it that the friends of the bill should be rallied again, if possible, to the support of a scheme which had been justly condemned, as this measure was, to immediate reconsideration in the proper legislative way by committees, if not for immediate and entire suspension, until proper diplomatic representations had been made between our Department of Foreign Affairs and the Government which had interposed its dignified and respectful objections to this measure.

The Senator from Alabama tells us, indeed, that the people are in a high state of feverish excitement to have this bill passed, and he denounces upon those who have ventured opposition the thunderbolts to flash from the sky of public wrath. I venture to differ with him in respect to the judgment of the people on this subject. I dare to think he is mistaken, and if I believed he was correct, then, indeed, I would feel a double duty incumbent on all those who entertain the opinions I do to challenge that public judgment by renewed discussion, knowing or believing that they did not understand the subject who thus so flippantly would cast the United States under such a mountain weight of difficulty in defiance of its historical policy.

I wish to say to my very greatly esteemed friend the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], with whom I enjoy the utmost cordiality and kindness, who have with other Senators upon this floor, including my good friend the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], appealed to me to withhold objection and permit a vote to be taken, that I think they ought to recognize the sense of great public duty which those who oppose this measure conceive demands of them to present the arguments against it in full, elaborately, and abundantly until its entire nature and character shall be exhibited from one part to the other. Not one of us, my distinguished friend on the left [Mr. CAFFERY], our generous and chivalrous coadjutor from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], the learned and powerful Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], would interpose objection to any request which justly appealed to our courtesy, or for any personal consideration that could be shown to the men who occupy so high place in the Senate and in the country's estimation. But the duty which rests upon us is not of a personal character. It carries no personal reasons with it. It is a public duty which we can no more avoid or shun than we could sacrifice manliness, patriotic love, or desire for the glory and welfare of our country.

Nor, sir, is there any occasion or need for this course, and I wish that the Senators who made this appeal would reflect upon that. Our venerable friend the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who is to be the chief character in the Cabinet of the next Administration, though he himself has repeatedly reported this bill or some bill, not this one exactly, though he has made elaborate reports in favor of engaging in the project, has now told you plainly that no incorporated company can be intrusted to build the canal. He speaks with foreknowledge of the diplomatic duties which will devolve upon the next Administration in respect perhaps to this very project, and with forecast of the difficulties which will ensue. He told us other things still more important to the just consideration of the appeal which is made to us here to-day. He told us what many hope, that this bill can not in any case pass the present Congress, because it has yet to go to the House of Representatives, and I suppose he felt himself able to assure us what would be the result of its consideration in that body, and I fervently trust he is right. But, sir, with what cogency, with what effect, can either our sense of duty or our courtesy be addressed by Senators to yield and permit a reckless and inconsiderate vote to pass the bill before its character is known, when we are to receive in another House the rebuke for our precipitancy?

If, under such circumstances, we are here obstructing public measures by insisting upon debate of this scheme, is it not singular that that obstruction be not instantly removed? I am not desirous, much as I have studied and labored over this project, of engaging the attention of the Senate to declare my views, except only if the passage of this measure is to be demanded, I feel I ought to resist it by every means of fair debate until its character can be brought home to the knowledge of those who favor it, and especially to the minds of the people of this country. I shall readily yield the floor at any moment to proceed to the consideration of any other measure which, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] says, is urgently pressing for our legislative attention. Let them, therefore, who stand here in the attitude of declaring that the work which we are doing in reference to this bill is pure futility, the mere expression of sentiment on the part of the Senate, not even the first step to the enactment of a bill which will become a law, remove the obstruction to other important legislation if they will. I protest that no appeal is justly addressable to us who desire to argue it.

Mr. President, I shall make one or two other observations before I undertake the discussion of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. Would it interrupt the Senator from Wisconsin if I were to ask him a question?

Mr. VILAS. No, sir.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator, if he is going to address himself to this subject, to give us some information upon a point as to which I have been unable to get information. I have been out of the city for a week, and perhaps it has been discussed here. I should like to know something about the cost of the canal. I am quite well aware that there is difference of opinion between the engineers of the old company and those of the Government. It is not a very large difference, I believe—seventy or eighty million dollars, or some trifling amount like that. I should like to know whether the Senator can assure me that even the sum which has been fixed will build the canal. I have been informed by very good engineers that, taking even the Government engineers' estimate, it will not complete the canal.

I have taken some interest in this matter for several years, and if the Senator is going to address himself to this question, I wish, if he can, that he would give us some idea as to what the canal is to cost; if he can not, I hope some Senator who is in favor of the bill will do so. I do not want to interrupt the Senator now, however. I thought perhaps it would suggest to him to take up the point and give us some information upon it.

Mr. VILAS. I intend at a point in the course of my discussion to draw attention to that subject. It will not take long to present it. But at this juncture I should prefer not to divert my argument to enter upon it.

Mr. TELLER. I did not mean to ask the Senator from Wisconsin to do it now, but at some time in his argument I wish he would give us his view as to the cost of the canal, if he can.

Mr. VILAS. I shall do it somewhat fully, and I will therefore postpone it.

I wish to make one other observation. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], very much to my surprise, the other day when I made a motion to recommit the bill, because I wished to relieve the Senate, in response to such suggestions as had been most ably made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and others, spoke of it as if it were a personal affront. No man could be more surprised than I by the suggestion.

If there be in any conceivable way such a thing as affront in a proper and parliamentary motion against a bill, especially like this, which seems to me peculiarly a subject for recommittal, if we can judge by the constant repetition of amendments to it by the very distinguished and honorable Senator himself, if there be anything to warrant the idea of offense, I would prefer that the motion should be withdrawn. I stand ready at any moment, if that be possible, to ask leave of the Senate to withdraw it. That Senator is greatly my senior in years and in service in the Senate. Nor do I in any wise assume to put my feeble powers in competition with his. But while I have only the warmest personal kindness toward him, and will show him every personal courtesy and every official courtesy, yet when we stand upon this floor we are in the contemplation of the Constitution of the United States equal members of this body, I not less than he an ambassador from one of the sovereign States of this Union, and no less is it mine than his duty to exert my powers, feeble and insufficient though they are, to present all such arguments, all such views as may be entertained by me as a Senator, in reference to whatever subject may come before the Senate.

I shall continue to do it in the same spirit of personal and fraternal regard, but with no withholding of anything that appears to me necessary either to say or to do in opposition to this measure. I trust that the assurance which I give now may be accepted for everything that shall be said in the course of the discussion to which I shall have the honor to ask the Senate to listen.

That Senator said of himself and this company which stands as the first great beneficiary of the bill:

> I have been studious and diligent about it; I have been faithful and honest, and there is not a spot on the escutcheon of the Maritime Canal Company or anybody else connected with this business. It is perfectly pure and clean and free, and I would despise it if it had any stain upon it at all.

I accept every word of it, and accredit that honorable and distinguished Senator with entire ignorance of the bill in any other respect than as it appeals to him from the standpoint of a mode of promoting what appears to his imagination as a great international project which the United States ought to assume and carry forward. But the rest of us must be at liberty to look at the Maritime Canal Company with the eyes which we have, and to judge of the measure proposed with the judgments which we possess. If we see in it a "job," we shall be at liberty even to characterize it as it is to us, and to do so with no sort of reflection, express or implied, upon the Senator from Alabama, and without, directly or indirectly, in any way whatever impugning his high personal character, credit, or honor.

I regret, sir, that the Senator sees fit so freely to indulge in personal antagonism to everybody—not in the Senate, I mean, but out of it—who seems to differ with his judgment upon the bill. He was severe in his arraignment of the distinguished and amiable gentleman who represents a country whose dignity we ought to regard even almost as our own—the Greater Republic of Central America. He was severe and vigorous in his criticism upon the chairman of the Board of Engineers, whose report has been so complete a demonstration of the unwisdom of this measure. But I trust that it may be possible for us to proceed with the debate upon the pending bill without in any wise being thought for a moment to contravene any obligation of personal kindness and courtesy which we should show, and which we most warmly desire to show, to the distinguished and honorable Senator whose heart is so much engaged in this scheme.

Mr. President, I desire, as my first proposition, to assert, and to cause it to be understood in its full import, that the present proposal is not one of Government favor and countenance to the Nicaraguan Canal. It is not even the creation of a corporation of the United States to execute that work. That has already been done, most improvidently done, as I shall try to show. But this bill is nothing less than the proposal that the United States Government itself shall assume the entire undertaking, furnish every dollar of its cost, become its owner and proprietor, and, with all it implies, take upon its own shoulders all the charges, risks, and responsibilities, and the chances not only of success or failure in work, but of international complications and entangling alliances, of vexatious controversies, and possibly of war.

Now, let us observe the truth of this through a careful, but as speedy, analysis of the bill as I can make. The bill declares, first—

That the capital stock of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua shall consist of 1,000,000 shares of $100 each, and shall be nonassessable, and no more than this number of shares shall be issued except by the consent of Congress.

That strange declaration is that the capital stock of this enterprise shall not furnish a cent of capital.

The second section of the bill is definitive:

That the words "the Nicaragua Canal," whenever used in this act, or the act to which this is an amendment, shall be held to include all real and personal property and franchises, railroads, piers, channels, dams, locks, embankments, and other works necessary for or incidental to the construction, equipment, maintenance, and operation of the said interoceanic canal, etc.

The third section comes to the point:

That if the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua shall within one year from the passage of this act show to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that all the stock of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua heretofore subscribed for or issued, except that heretofore issued to the Republics of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, has been called in, returned to, and canceled by the treasurer of the company, or that satisfactory arrangements have been made for the return and cancellation of said stock, and that all bonds issued by said company and obligations to deliver bonds have been redeemed and canceled or that satisfactory arrangements have been made for their redemption and cancellation, and that all liabilities of the said company have been satisfied, and all contracts and agreements heretofore made by said company, including all contracts with the Nicaragua Canal Construction Company, have been canceled, or that provision has been made for the satisfaction and cancellation of said liabilities and contracts—

I do not pause, notwithstanding the emphasis I give to some of these words, to comment upon their extraordinary character, but only to point out the result of this section on my proposition—

the Secretary of the Treasury shall, in behalf of the United States, subscribe for 700,000 shares of the capital stock of said company—

Which is declared to be nonassessable, whatever the subscription may be—

and said company shall thereupon issue to the said Secretary of the Treasury of the United States 700,000 shares of the capital stock of said company herein provided for, to be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States—

Seven-tenths of the whole, and of course a complete controlling interest so far as this nonassessable and purely fictitious capital stock represents the corporation—which stock shall be issued in consideration of the guaranty by the United States of the bonds of said company hereinafter provided for, and shall be regarded as fully paid and nonassessable. In addition thereto, 70,000 shares of nonassessable capital stock of said Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua shall be issued and delivered to such person or persons as may be designated by those stockholders of the said company whose stock has been surrendered and canceled, as hereinbefore required.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. VILAS. With pleasure.

Mr. SMITH. I desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he knows whether the members of the Maritime Canal Company are citizens of the United States?

Mr. VILAS. I do not. I am not aware what the fact is in reference to their citizenship.

Mr. MORGAN. They are all citizens of the United States.

Mr. VILAS. I only know in reference to that point that the concession upon which the company was really created requires that the stock shall be offered to the people of other nations, and that 5 per cent shall be reserved for the inhabitants of Central America.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that they are all citizens of the United States except as to Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

Mr. VILAS. I should be glad to ask the distinguished chairman of the special committee if he can point to any part of the reports or hearings or testimony taken which states the facts with reference to the citizenship of the company or with reference to the money expended and other things of that kind?

Mr. MORGAN. Every one of the reports that has been made, except the report I made last Friday, contains a statement as to the citizenship of the parties and the expenditures involved. A detailed statement is given in a great many of the reports of the expenditures. Then, the president of the Maritime Canal Company every year has submitted under oath to the Secretary of the Interior a full statement of the whole operations from the first organization of the company down to the present time.

Mr. VILAS. Has that statement ever been laid before the Senate in any way, so as to be printed?

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. VILAS. Or is it in any printed form? I should like to know where to get it.

Mr. MORGAN. It is in printed form, and can be obtained in the document room, and is also in these reports.

Mr. WHITE. I will state to the Senator from Wisconsin that, so far as the Secretary of the Interior is concerned, he will find it in his report, filed recently.

Mr. VILAS. It will be observed how significant the third section is in support of the proposition which I made, since it places the entire control of the capital stock of the company in the United States by giving them seven-tenths of all of it.

I next draw attention to section 8 in respect to this point, which further provides—

That the United States hereby reserves the right to purchase the stock issued as hereinbefore provided for, other than that issued to the United States and the States of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, at any time, at such sum as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of the Treasury and the said stockholders, which sum shall in no event exceed the par value of said stock, together with 3 per cent per annum thereon from the date of its issue to the opening of the Nicaragua Canal to commerce. No dividend upon said stock shall ever be made by said directors except from the net earnings of said corporation.

Costa Rica is entitled to 1½ per cent, Nicaragua to 6 per cent, of the capital stock under the concession made by those two States—$7,500,000 at par value—of the $100,000,000 of stock. The United States, then, by this act, forbids the sale of the remaining $22,500,000, of which $7,000,000 in amount is bestowed upon the stockholders of the Maritime Canal Company, as now existing, for the surrender of their stock.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt, I will state that those are not the facts. The concession from Nicaragua, and also from Costa Rica, provides for the issue of the original stock, and Nicaragua is entitled to $6,000,000.

Mr. VILAS. Six million dollars to Nicaragua and one and a half million dollars to Costa Rica.

Mr. MORGAN. And $6,000,000 to the promoters of the Maritime Canal Company.

Mr. VILAS. I am not raising any point there.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, these gentlemen in this bill gave up that $6,000,000 of stock.

Mr. VILAS. I am not at this point raising an inquiry into the wisdom of this trade or its expediency. I am simply pointing out that while the bill does leave $22,500,000 of stock in other hands than the United States, yet it prohibits that stock from being sold, reserving to the United States the right of being the sole purchaser of it, thus absolutely putting our grasp upon every dollar of the stock of that company, nominal though it may be, which is not vested in Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

Mr. MORGAN. That is admitted.

Mr. VILAS. There can not be much doubt about that from the terms of the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the purpose.

Mr. VILAS. Now let us turn to section 4, and see what is provided. After the stock is thus taken care of in these two sections, we come next to the following, in the fourth section:

That upon the issuance and delivery of the stock and bonds provided for in sections 3 and 7 of this act the places of the directors of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, except such as represent the States of Nicaragua and Costa Rica—

One for each of these stockholders—shall become vacant. The board of directors of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua shall consist of eleven directors—

I have forgotten whether that changes the number.

Mr. TURPIE. Yes, sir; it was fifteen.

Mr. VILAS. Formerly fifteen. Section 4 proceeds—

one to be appointed by Costa Rica, one by Nicaragua, and one by the stockholders of the Maritime Canal Company other than the said Governments, and eight to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and removable by the President of the United States for cause. In case of a vacancy in the membership of directors appointed by the President the same shall be filled, etc.

And then follows a provision prohibiting a director from being interested in the stock or otherwise pecuniarily in the company, and other provisions in respect to their character.

Thus the control of the direction of the company is entirely withdrawn from the directors now in office and a new board is substituted, to be appointed in the way in which the Constitution of the United States provides for the appointment of officers of the United States.

Let us now take the next section. Section 5 provides that these directors shall classify themselves into three classes, by lot, to hold, respectively, for two, four, and six years, etc., and that 6 of the 11 directors, of whom 5 at least must be directors appointed by the President, shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, thereby again guaranteeing to the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua and to the stockholders of the alleged stock, the twenty-two and one-half million dollars, that they shall have no voice in the board of directors except for argument's sake and so far as they can persuade the Government directors to yield to them.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say to the Senator, if he will allow me, that the concession provides that Nicaragua shall have one director and Costa Rica one director, and if the company went to Great Britain to get their money they would be limited by the same restrictions.

Mr. VILAS. I recognize that perfectly, and at a proper time, when I reach that stage of the discussion, I shall point out that those concessions provide a great many other things which are ruthlessly trampled upon by this bill and disregarded, and, in respect to this particular feature of it, that those concessions stipulate not for a nonassessable and worthless representative of nothing, but for an actual share in the true contribution of creative and constructive capital in whatever form of stock, bonds, securities, or otherwise that capital should be actually put into the enterprise. Now, it appears that the United States is crawling into the skin of this corporation.

The sixth section provides the compensation of the directors and other officers, etc., and directs the duty of examination by them and their report.

The seventh section, appropriately placed about the middle of the bill, in my mind is the section which represents the mouse in the meal. It provides—

That as soon as practicable after the passage of this act an account shall be stated with the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, which shall include all necessary and proper expenditures which have been made or incurred by said company or for its account by its agents since the 3d day of June, 1889, in and about the construction of said canal, or in any way incident thereto, or connected therewith, including all railroad and telegraph lines built by the said company, and all administration and promotion expenses. The amount of said expenditures shall be ascertained and determined by a commission consisting of two members, one of whom shall be appointed by the President of the United States, and the other by the stockholders of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, whose stock is to be surrendered, as hereinbefore provided; and in case the said commissioners should fail to agree upon the amount of said expenditures, they shall select some third person as arbitrator, whose decision in the matter shall be final. For the reimbursement of said expenditures so ascertained, and in liquidation of the amount thereof, including interest thereon, there shall be issued and delivered to the person or persons selected by the stockholders of said Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, whose stock has been surrendered and canceled as provided for in secton 3 of this act—

The same beneficiaries, it will be observed, to whom, for the same reason, $7,000,000 of the capital stock was previously assigned—bonds of said company in an amount equal at their par value to the sum of such expenditures so ascertained, which sum shall not in any event exceed $4,500,000 and the interest thereon. Said bonds so to be issued shall have the guaranty of the United States indorsed thereon, as provided in section 10 of this act, and the acceptance of the same shall be in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States or the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

Mr. President, I shall by and by have occasion to draw attention to the fact that that section is the one absolute section in the bill. Whatever becomes of all the rest of it, that section takes effect by the passage of the bill. We may never, if we should have a good board of directors, engage even in the construction of this already discredited route; we may never be able to realize the least particle of right under the concession of Nicaragua; but whatever we get or do not get, the stockholders of the Maritime Canal Company obtain $4,500,000 of bonds, and so much more as the interest on their expenditures amounts to up to the time.

I shall not pause now to discuss the question whether the United States ought to exert the great power of Congress to force upon this poor and weak corporation the acceptance of this proposal to take their all for four million and a half dollars and interest nor any of the questions of expediency involved in it. I simply call attention to the fact that that section, supplementing the section in regard to the stock, completely crushes out and extinguishes the entire interest of those people who had stock in that canal and leaves the United States supreme in its control.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to an interruption by the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. I simply desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether the interest stipulated to be paid to the stockholders of the old company by this bill is to be paid upon the amount of their expenses, whatever they may be, or upon the gross amount of $4,500,000 as the largest amount the United States is to pay?

Mr. VILAS. I think there can be no occasion for any misconstruction. The language is:

For the reimbursement of said expenditures so ascertained, and in liquidation of the amount thereof, including interest thereon.

The bonds shall be delivered equally at par value not to exceed $4,500,000 and the interest.

Mr. CAFFERY. So if the expenditures are in excess of $4,500,000, interest will be paid upon the sums in excess?

Mr. VILAS. That is the way I interpret the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. If I may be allowed to make a statement, the Senator from Wisconsin understands the bill, I believe, from what he says, as providing for interest upon the sum of $4,500,000?

Mr. VILAS. For interest on all their expenditures.

Mr. MORGAN. To the amount of $4,500,000—that they are entitled to interest on that sum?

Mr. VILAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not so understand the bill. Interest was due under the sum of $4,500,000 upon whatever sum the expenditures have been, so as to raise it not beyond $4,500,000. Now, another point——

Mr. VILAS. If the Senator will permit me at that point, I should like to ask him what, then, is the significance of the words in the third line on page 7, "and the interest thereon," the second mention of interest?

Mr. MORGAN. That is the interest on the sum expended up to $4,500,000.

Mr. VILAS. No; but these words follow the declaration that the bonds shall not exceed $4,500,000 "and the interest thereon."

Mr. MORGAN. That means, and was intended to mean, the interest on the sum expended by them under the sum of $4,500,000, which is the outside limit of all that they can ever receive.

Mr. VILAS. But that is explicitly provided for previously.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, the Senator says that feature of the bill goes into effect immediately on the passage of the bill.

Mr. VILAS. And the acceptance of the company.

Mr. MORGAN. None of the bill goes into effect except upon the acceptance of the company. It does not become a legislative act because this is an amendment to an existing law, and its validity and efficiency and effect depend upon its acceptance by the Maritime Canal Company under the conditions prescribed in the bill.

Mr. VILAS. At some proper time in the course of this discussion I shall submit to the distinguished Senator from Alabama whether he thinks the only salvation to the United States of this money, if we pass this bill, will lie in the conscience of the Maritime Canal Company——

Mr. MORGAN. Not by any means.

Mr. VILAS. It certainly will not lie in their interest, for the property they possess at this date, judging from what has been shown both by the engineers and from other sources of information, can hardly be estimated to be worth $500,000.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, the company can sell a million acres of land and also the concession, which is their property and not ours. This whole measure is a mere proposition to them that we are willing to make a certain deal with them. If they do not accept it there is nothing in it.

Mr. TURPIE. I will remark that the company has no lands and will have none until the canal is completed. The title of the land is in the two Republics that made the concession and the treaty of cession expires on the 24th day of April next.

Mr. VILAS. I was about to observe that the title to the lands is, like everything else in respect to it except the personal property, machinery, etc., dependent wholly upon the maintenance of the concession and the completion of the canal.

Mr. MORGAN. We propose to complete the canal. That is what we are trying to do. But it does not depend upon that. There is a fee-simple title conveyed by these concessions, and I do not suppose the Senator from Wisconsin will be found here, if the bill is defeated, trying to rob the concessionaires of that million acres of land in favor of Nicaragua.

Mr. VILAS. I hope I should be found in no place and at no time trying to rob anybody, and I assure the Senator that among those whom I feel, in my capacity as a Senator here, I am most bound to defend from robbery are the taxpayers of the United States.

Mr. President, at some time in the course of the discussion I intend to speak upon the character of this section 7, but I am only alluding to it now for the purpose of showing the completeness of the proposition that the United States alone are to undertake this canal.

Section 8 I have already mentioned. Section 9 steps in next and recognizes that the whole capital stock is of no value; that $4,500,000 of bonds will have no effect toward construction, and it reads:

That to secure the means to construct and complete said canal, and to meet the expenditures made on account thereof, the said Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua is hereby authorized to issue coupon or registered bonds, or both, of the said company, in denominations of not less than $50 nor more than $1,000, to an amount not exceeding $100,000,000, to be dated on the 1st day of July, 1896, to be payable on the 1st day of July, 1926, but redeemable at the pleasure of the United States at any time after the 1st day of July, 1906, at par, with interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, payable quarterly on the 1st days of October, January, April, and July of each year, from the delivery of the bonds to said company by the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time as by this act required: Provided, That the President of the United States may at any time suspend the issue of said bonds until Congress, being informed by him of the reasons for such suspension, shall otherwise direct. And said bonds shall be secured by a first mortgage on its property and rights of property now existing or hereafter acquired, of all kinds and descriptions, real, personal, and mixed, of all franchises and rights of the said company, including its rights and franchise to be a corporation. Such mortgage shall contain a provision for a sinking fund sufficient for the payment of said bonds at maturity in accordance with the provisions of section 12 of this act. Such mortgage shall be so framed as to be valid as a first lien under the laws of Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

The United States is then to become the maker of a mortgage, the guarantor of a mortgage, and is to go off into Costa Rica and Nicaragua to discover the terms in which its liability shall be safely declared. And it is the property of this concern that we think so much of and hear so much about that is to be mortgaged and subjected to the jurisdiction of the courts in Nicaragua and Costa Rica. The United States, which can be sued only by their own consent, file here this stipulation to confer a jurisdiction against them upon the courts of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and the Attorney-General is then directed to see to it that the mortgage is sufficient; and provision is then made for its execution in triplicate and record.

Section 10 then provides how the mortgage bonds shall be printed by the United States, and this very deft and shrewd phrase is introduced to show that we are to be saved from that expense:

At the expense of said Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

And provision is made for the form of the bonds. Then comes this declaration:

Before the issue of said bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury he shall cause to be engraved and printed and duly executed on each of said bonds the guaranty of the United States, in the words and figures following, to wit: "The United States of America guarantees to the lawful holder of this bond the payment by the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua of the principal of said bond and the interest thereon as it accrues." And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, if the interest on said bonds as it becomes due is not paid into the Treasury of the United States by the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, to pay the same, and the sum required for that purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Thus by that section every dollar that is to be contributed to the construction of that canal or its completion is to be provided by the United States.

Section 11 directs the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua to pay the money into the Treasury to pay the interest on these mortgage bonds.

Mr. President, who is it who is thus to pay the interest into the Treasury of the United States? The United States Government itself, for it is the only stockholder. Where is the interest money to come from so that the canal company can pay it into the Treasury of the United States? From the sale of the bonds guaranteed by the United States, the only source in the world from which a dollar can be derived by that Maritime Canal Company, every dollar of that subscribed capital stock being nonassessable. Until the canal is built, nobody knows how many years hence, that declaration is simply a pretense.

Mr. MILLS. After the expenditure of the $70,000,000 which are expected to be realized from the sale of the bonds, suppose there should require to be more money raised, more capital with which to finish this work, where is that money to come from?

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, the poor stockholders who own the stock of that company, the United States, that is to say, would probably be obliged to appeal to Congress to issue another $100,000,000 of bonds.

Mr. MILLS. That is it exactly.

Mr. VILAS. And I should be gratified if I could be assured that the repetition of that process would stop before we reached $500,000,000, if we actually complete the work.

Section 12 is another ingenious section to express the idea of this independent entity, called the Maritime Canal Company, into which the United States has thrust itself, until all else there is of true life is expelled from its being. Let us look at it:

SEC. 12. That for all sums that the United States may pay upon the principal or interest of said bonds under their said guaranty the United States shall be subrogated to all rights and liens under the said mortgage which the holders of said bonds or any of them would have had in respect thereof if the same had remained unpaid by the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua and had not been paid by the United States under their guaranty.

That is to say, the same right to enforce collection against itself that the holders of the bonds would have. The maker and the guarantor being the same person, the guarantor reserves to himself the right to enforce upon himself as the maker the privileges which would be enjoyed if they were different persons by the law of subrogation.

But until the expiration of five years after the said canal shall be put in operation, and so long as, during said five years, the canal shall be in operation and remain under the control of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, this subrogated lien and right of the United States as aforesaid shall not be enforced by foreclosure.

Then provision is made for a foreclosure of the mortgage, which I shall not weary the Senate by reading.

I want to turn to one other section in support of the proposition with which I set out the reading of this bill:

SEC. 13. That the said canal shall be constructed under the supervision and according to the plans and specifications prepared by the Engineer Department of the United States Army.

The Army of the United States is directed to become the servitor of this corporation. The rights reserved by the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, making the concession in the stipulation how the engineering work should be done, are brushed away as if they were of no consequence.

The President of the United States, upon the recommendation of the Chief of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, shall detail three competent engineers from the War Department to enter regularly the service of the Maritime Canal Company, and said engineers shall select one of their number as chief engineer, and thereafter shall detail such additional number as may be required from time to time by the board of directors for the construction of said canal, provided the same can be done without detriment to the public service.

Then provision is made for the chief engineer, his duties, salary, etc., and authority given to the President to appoint a board of three civil engineers to inspect the route, etc., and make recommendations.

Mr. GRAY. And $200,000 appropriated for that.

Mr. VILAS. And $200,000 appropriated for that, as the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] very pertinently suggests.

Provision is then made for representation in the board of directors, and a limitation put upon the corporation as to the issue of any more mortgages, as of course they could not do, being wholly made the creature of Congress; and there is a direction that the bonds shall not be sold for less than their par value. That is the bill.

It will be observed that in every particular of importance there can be no qualification to the proposition with which I set out, that the United States undertake everything whatever in respect to this canal at this stage, undertake its risks of construction, the mischances of all the surveys hitherto made, all the perils of international complications and quarrel.

Why should the United States Government, if we are to do that thing, undertake thus to invest itself with a false guise? Why should the United States Government put on a mask when it sets forth before the world to perform this great contribution to the progress of civilization? Sir, masks always mean deceit. What is the purpose concealed under this subterfuge? Is it to gain from the State of Nicaragua the advantages of the concession which this company bought from that State? Nicaragua stands before us with open hands, with the kindest expression of national good will, the desire to unite with us in the construction of that canal. From the time when government began to exist in that territory it has been seeking in its feebleness the strong hand of capital and aid sufficient to construct this canal. The very objection filed by its minister, Mr. Rodriguez, proffers at once to the United States immediate negotiation to effect that result. We are in no need to try to cheat Nicaragua, we need wear no false mask in order to deceive her as to the character in which we present ourselves on her soil to do this great work.

Who, then, do we aim at? Is it that enemy who lurks behind every bush whenever any project of international consequence arises; that enemy which threatens us from Halifax, from Jamaica, from the islands of the Pacific; that old, constant, dreaded nightmare of America, as some men would have us to believe—is it England? Why do we wish to cheat England? Why do we wish to pretend to England that it is not the United States which is about to build this canal, but the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, a concessionaire of the poor States of Nicaragua and Costa Rica? I shall have occasion to point out, perhaps, why that idea may be entertained by some. It may be that it is thought that in that way we can violate with impunity the international obligations which we contracted by the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; but if so, sir, there is as little necessity for that as there is for any other course of deceit.

I can conceive of but one other possible motive that can actuate the disposition to put a sham cover on the kindly countenance of our great Republic when it shall step beyond the boundaries of its own territory, and that is that there may be some pretext of excuse for bestowing upon this corporation, whose concession expires on the 27th day of April next, the four millions and a half of bonds and the seven millions of nonassessable capital stock. If there be any other reason in the world why we should pretend to be what we are not; why the United States should crawl into the skin of a corporation of its own creating; why, instead of going forth in our sovereign capacity to do our duty among the nations of the earth, we should go there as the poor creature and subject of Nicaragua, with no other right but that which had been conceded to a corporation dealing with and purchasing a concession from that State, I am unable to see.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the next point. I will pass from the trivial—I mean only comparatively speaking—the mere insignificant details connected with this enterprise, to the greater question, Should the United States proceed to undertake that canal, and, if so, for what reasons and in what manner?

The distinguished and honorable Senator from Alabama argued to us at great length—no; I should not say that, but at some length and with some particularity—that this project would be one that would yield great profits; that it would be, indeed, a splendid investment of our millions, an investment from which for a period of ninety-nine, and possibly one hundred and ninety-eight, years we might derive annual compensation that would, perhaps, be a consolation and comfort to the taxpayers of the United States. The expectation of profit as a matter of probability may very well be left where the eloquent and cogent Senator from Indiana has left it, for, as he said, at least two-thirds of a century the project, after having engaged the attention of the great promoters and capitalists of the earth, has stood blacklisted, under taboo, with nobody to consider it even as worthy of investment.

Sir, it is almost difficult to maintain a sobriety of consideration when one reflects on the report of the board of engineers, which I shall have occasion to discuss at a little later stage, upon the history of government subsidies in general and especially upon the experience of France at Panama. Think of our Pacific railroads as an investment of a profitable character for the United States! Think of the $240,000,000 which have scratched the dirt and sunk out of sight on that isthmus where the savings of France found their burial place! It may be that a keen imagination can spread the morning sky of this project with golden hues, but it certainly requires an imagination as happy, a temperament as sanguine, a composure as serene to carry men through poverty as have become famous in the distinguished promoter and projector of America—Colonel Sellers.

Whence is the profit to come out of an enterprise which can not but cost unknown millions, when the best engineers dare not declare they know yet how it can be safely built? But, sir, I need spend no time upon that subject. I must, of course, do the honorable Senator from Alabama the justice to recognize what I am sure he must have intended, not the presentation of a reason why the United States should enter upon this project, in that it would prove profitable, but only a sort of balm to our fears while engaging the moneys of the United States in so vast a scheme. It can require no discussion before this body to establish the proposition that the United States can not engage in an enterprise for the purpose of making money. The United States have no such function of government. Our Constitution has delegated to the Federal Union only certain limited powers within its sphere of action, and no one of those is to raise taxes or borrow money for the purpose of making profitable investments in foreign lands. If, then, anybody indulges in the theory, the rosy hallucination that golden showers will follow the possession of stock in this canal company, let him at least acknowledge that that expectation furnishes nothing in the nature of argument why the United States should undertake this scheme.

But another argument is presented, and presented seriously. It is claimed that the canal is necessary to the defense of the United States against her enemies; that we should enter upon this grand scheme out of a military necessity for it pressing upon us. High sounding words about the national defense are inserted occasionally in resolutions procured from some assemblage. Such resolutions are easily to be procured and are commonly passed inconsiderately. We had one presented the other day signed by four gentlemen as a committee, I believe, of the National Board of Trade, in which they declared to this body, constituted as it is, presumably, at least, made up of men of intelligence, such as the Constitution contemplated would occupy these seats—they declared to us that this canal should be built because it would "afford incalculable advantages to the Government in the event of a foreign war." Sir, they will be incalculable, indeed, for they will be exceedingly difficult to discern or realize. I think such a declaration as that is not creditable to any body who pretends to understand the relations which such a canal would bear to the American public.

Sir, I think Senators will recognize, with reflection upon this subject, that the canal is more likely to be an element of weakness than of strength, were we to have a foreign war with any power possessed of great naval strength; and I do not believe that even this committee of the National Board of Trade would feel their knees knock together much at the peril of the United States if engaged in war with a country that possessed no naval strength. It can only be as against the former that we need "incalculable advantages" in this canal.

Without arguing which it should be at this stage, it is obvious that the canal must be either neutralized as to all the world, like the Suez Canal, so that all vessels of war as well as of peaceful commerce may pass it in time of war as well as in time of peace, or else the canal must be under the exclusive control of the United States, at least in time of war. Suppose the first case—that the canal is neutralized. Then what do we find? We shall have created a waterway of intercommunication between the Atlantic and the Pacific by which our western coasts are exposed to the naval strength of Europe, against which now they are defended by Cape Horn. That point was seen by a Secretary of State in 1882, and Mr. Frelinghuysen, in his dispatch to our minister to England, drew his attention to the peril in time of war to which such a canal would expose our Western coasts. I read from his dispatch of May 8, 1882:

> A canal across the Isthmus for vessels of all dimensions and every character, under possible conditions hereinafter referred to, would affect this Republic in its trade and commerce; would expose our western coast to attack, destroy our isolation, oblige us to improve our defenses and to increase our Navy, and possibly compel us, contrary to our traditions, to take an active interest in the affairs of European nations.

Well put, so far as it relates to the question of military advantage to be derived from it in case of neutralization, so as to be available to ships of war. In that event, the dreaded menace to our peace which the Senator from Alabama has so often apprehended will be greatly facilitated, when there shall set forth again the—

> ——mariners of England,
> * * * * *
> Whose flag has braved, a thousand years,
> The battle and the breeze!

I suppose he would contend, therefore, for the other course, and that if the canal were to be built it must be assumed that, being built by us, it shall be under our exclusive control. What does that mean? It means that we shall either shut out vessels of war in time of war or that we shall exercise the right to shut out not only vessels of war, but vessels of peace also in time of peace. Let us assume that our exclusive control takes the form most favorable to this contention; that the United States simply claims the right to shut out from the canal vessels of war in time of war with us. Then where are we with our military and naval advantages in the canal? We have established a great work at immense cost which any enemy, almost, can destroy. The report of the engineers speaks to that point.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wiconsin yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. Would the Senator yield to a motion to go into executive session? I desire to make that motion.

Mr. VILAS. If the Senator from Virginia will withhold the motion for a few moments, I shall be glad.

Mr. DANIEL. With pleasure. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator. I thought he had probably reached a point where it would be agreeable to him to yield.

Mr. VILAS. I will yield to the Senator for that purpose in a few moments.

I read from the report of the Board of Engineers, page 50, just a brief clause now, to this point:

> It is proper to note the multiplied points at which the canal would be exposed to injury after construction—

Mr. GRAY. What report is that from?

Mr. VILAS. From the report of the Board of Engineers.

Mr. GRAY. Is it a recent report?

Mr. VILAS. It is the report of the board which we sent there in 1895—> and the comparative facility with which a breach could be made at any point on the long line of embankments, if, for any reason, military or malicious, it should be intended to destroy the canal navigation until the breach could be closed.

Sir, we should be obliged to put on the line of the canal great fortifications. We should be obliged to maintain navies at both the ocean ports, at either terminal. We should be obliged in time of war to keep an army there patrolling the route of the canal all the time. Otherwise we should be at the mercy not only of the naval powers of Europe, but even of the poor—I speak only of them with reference to their military strength—feeble powers of Central America. This Republic, which for a hundred years has feared no enemy, would, powerful as it has become, be, with that canal, in a condition of almost puerile weakness, so far as that is concerned. There would be our vulnerable point. There our millions and hundreds of millions would be obliged to go to maintain fortifications and naval defenses and to support armies and powers in case of war. There this great and powerful nation would find the fatal spot which, like the heel of Achilles, exposed its tremendous strength to the dart of the feeblest enemy. That, sir, is what folly can do for a great nation. That, sir, is what a board of trade knows about the "incalculable advantages" for military defense of an isthmian canal.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me to make an inquiry?

Mr. VILAS. With pleasure.

Mr. WHITE. Is not the argument which the Senator is now making directed against the construction of any canal under any auspices or at any time?

Mr. GRAY. As a military defense of the United States.

Mr. VILAS. No, sir; and when I resume my discussion I will point out how I think that great work of civilization should be constructed and how the United States should be the glorious leader to its consummation.

Mr. GRAY. I suppose, if the Senator from Wisconsin will allow me, that he will contend that any canal to fulfill the objects and purposes which are proclaimed for it must be a work of peace, and that it is idle to talk about it as a part of the machinery of war.

Mr. VILAS. Precisely. I intend to point that out when I pretty soon reach that part of the discussion. But I am dealing with it now only in respect to this pretended argument in its favor of military advantage to be derived from it. It is a simple demonstration which no man can gainsay that if we allow the vessels of our enemies to pass it as a neutral waterway in time of war, as I shall show we are bound to do, then we expose our Western coasts to an enemy against which they are now perfectly defended, and if, on the other hand, we maintain an exclusive control and undertake to shut out vessels of war in time of war, we have exposed ourselves to all the weakness which I have in the last few minutes pointed out.

But I wish to ask, What is the supposed theory of utility by which the canal can be made a valuable auxiliary to our national defense? It can be no more than that we can pass our ships of war more readily from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific, or the other way. That is all. But why do we wish to pass them? Do we need to send ships of war to our Pacific coast to defend it? Sir, against what enemy? There is the guaranty of nature for our safety. Three thousand miles of a vast wilderness of water, yea 5,000 miles, lie there defending our coasts.

Mr. MILLS. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield for a moment?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS. Does the Senator prefer to go on further to-night, or would he yield to a motion to adjourn? I suppose he must be fatigued by this time.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] desires to make a motion for an executive session. I promised to give way to him for that purpose.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to consult the Senator's convenience about it.

Mr. DANIEL. So do I.

Mr. VILAS. I shall not go further to-night, although there are a few more observations which I desire to make in reference to the point on which I was speaking.

Mr. DANIEL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 2, 1897, at 12 o'clock meridian.

MONDAY, February 1, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

PURCHASE OF OR SPECULATION IN GOVERNMENT CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6834) to prevent the purchasing of or speculating in claims against the Government by United States officers, with Senate amendments.

The bill and amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, that is a very important bill. I desire to know if the Judiciary Committee have examined the Senate amendments. It seemed to be an exactly proper measure as it left the House.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman any motion to make?

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to know if the amendments of the Senate have been called to the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. I see the gentleman is present; and I would be glad that it lie on the Speaker's table until the gentleman can examine it. It seems the Senate has made some very important amendments.

Mr. HENDERSON. I did not understand the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. My inquiry was whether or not you had examined the amendments of the Senate to the bill prohibiting the purchase of fees by United States officers?

Mr. HENDERSON. I have not. The Senate amendments have not been before our committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. There are a number of important amendments.

Mr. HENDERSON. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HENDRICK] introduced the bill, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] had charge of it. The amendments of the Senate have not been before us. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it lie on the table for the present, until I can have time to look at the amendments.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will remain on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE (when the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures be passed without prejudice.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, when the Committee on the Judiciary was just called, I happened not to have a bill that I wanted to call up. I ask that the committee be again called.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Committee on the Judiciary will again be called.

There was no objection.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN UTAH.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (S. 2037) providing times and places for holding terms of United States courts in Utah.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the circuit court of the United States in and for the State of Utah shall be held at the time and place provided by law for holding the United States district court in and for said State.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of holding terms of the district court, said district shall be divided into two divisions, to be known as the northern and central divisions. The counties of Weber, Davis, Morgan, Rich, Cache, and Boxelder shall constitute the northern division, the court for which shall be held at the city of Ogden; and all remaining counties of the said State shall constitute the central division, the court for which shall be held at the city of Salt Lake.

SEC. 3. That all civil suits not of a local character which shall be brought in the district or circuit courts of the United States for the district of Utah, in either of said divisions, against a single defendant, or where all the defendants reside in the same division of said district, shall be brought in the division in which the defendant or defendants reside, or where the cause of action arose, or if there are two or more defendants residing in different divisions, such suit may be brought in either division; and all mesne and final process subject to the provisions of this act issued in either of said divisions may be served and executed in either or both of said divisions.

All issues of fact in civil causes triable in any of the said courts shall be tried in the division where the defendant, or one of the defendants, reside, or where the cause of action arose, unless by consent of both parties the case shall be removed to some other division.

SEC. 4. That the clerks of the circuit and district courts for said district shall each appoint a deputy clerk at each of the places where their respective courts are required to be held in the divisions of the district, except in the division in which such clerk shall himself reside, each of which deputies shall, in the absence of the clerk, exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of the clerk within the division for which he shall be appointed: Provided, That the appointment of such deputies shall be approved by the court for which they shall have been respectively appointed, and may be annulled by such court at its pleasure; and the clerks shall be responsible for the official acts and negligence of all such deputies.

SEC. 5. That the terms of the district court for the district of the State of Utah shall be held at the city of Salt Lake, beginning on the first Monday of May and the first Monday of December in each year, and at the city of Ogden, beginning on the first Monday of March and the first Monday of September of each year; and all suits, prosecutions, process, recognizances, bail bonds, and other things pending in or returnable to said court are hereby transferred to and shall be made returnable to and have force in the said respective terms in this act provided, in the same manner and with the same effect as they would have had had said place of holding been designated in the original act.

SEC. 6. That no action, suit, proceeding, information, indictment, recognizance, bail bond, or other process in either of said courts shall abate or be rendered invalid by reason of the change of time in the holding of the terms of said courts, but the same shall be deemed to be returnable to, pending, and triable at the terms herein provided for.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In section 3, lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "or where the cause of action arose;" and in lines 14 and 15 strike out the words "or where the cause of action arose."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments to the Senate bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BRODERICK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SUPPRESSION OF TICKET "SCALPING," ETC.

Mr. SHERMAN. By direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I call up the bill (H. R. 10090) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce."

The bill was read.

Mr. QUIGG. May I inquire of my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN] whether this is the so-called "antiscalpers' bill?"

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill comes from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and is known as the "antiscalpers' bill."

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Has the committee directed that this bill be called up at this particular time?

Mr. SHERMAN. The committee directed that the bill be called up in the morning hour. This is the first time the committee has been called in the morning hour since the direction was given.

Mr. TERRY. I should like to suggest to the gentleman in charge of this bill that it is a very important measure, and it would be best that some time be set for its consideration, so that all may know when it is to come up. It should not come up here like a "jack-in-a-box."

Mr. SHERMAN. I will very gladly enter into an arrangement for the bill to be called up at some future time and have sufficient time assigned for the fullest discussion. I have no desire to curtail debate.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I raise the question of consideration on the bill.

The question being taken, Will the House consider the bill? it was decided in the negative—ayes 35, noes 88.

So the House refused to consider the bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS TENNESSEE RIVER NEAR CHATTANOOGA.

Mr. PATTERSON. By direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I call up the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 9799) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Chattanooga Western Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Chattanooga," giving the said company more time in which to begin and complete said bridge, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the Chattanooga Western Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Chattanooga," approved January 27, 1894, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved; and any alterations or changes that may be required by Congress in the bridge constructed under this act, or its entire removal, shall be made by the corporation owning or controlling the same at its own expense. Furthermore, if the construction of said bridge shall not be commenced before January 1, 1898, and completed before January 1, 1901, all privileges conferred hereby and this act shall become null and void."

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. FLETCHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have had under consideration House bill 9799, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, being a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Chattanooga Western Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Chattanooga," giving the said company more time in which to complete said bridge. Under date of January 9, 1897, the War Department reported on the same, saying: "No objection is known to the passage of the bill by Congress so far as the interests of navigation are concerned." This report is herewith attached.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., January 9, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reference to this office of a letter, dated the 7th instant, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, inclosing for the views of the War Department thereon House bill 9799, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the Chattanooga Western Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Chattanooga,' giving the said company more time in which to begin and complete said bridge," and in returning the same I beg to say that no objection is known to the passage of the bill by Congress so far as the interests of navigation are concerned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. MACKENZIE,
Acting Chief of Engineers.

Hon. DANIEL S. LAMONT,
Secretary of War.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PATTERSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI NEAR LEXINGTON, MO.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman; I have another bill which I am directed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to call up.

The bill (S. 3401) to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo.," approved July 26, 1894, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo.," approved July 26, 1894, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to extend the time for the commencement of the construction of said bridge to one year and its completion to three years from the approval of this act.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill merely extends the time within which this bridge may be constructed. The original act was in the usual form of bridge bills. The committee has unanimously reported in favor of the passage of this bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COLUMBIA RIVER, WASHINGTON.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am also directed to call up the bill (H. R. 9736) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River, in the State of Washington.

The bill was read.

The amendment reported by the committee, to insert, after the word "Secretary," in line 8 of section 2, the words "of War," was read, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS ALABAMA RIVER, NEAR MONTGOMERY.

Mr. SHERMAN. By instruction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I also call up the bill (H. R. 9101) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Montgomery Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River near the city of Montgomery, Ala.," approved March 1, 1893.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of an act approved March 1, 1893, to authorize the Montgomery Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River near Montgomery, Ala., be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That all telephone and telegraph companies shall be granted equal rights and privileges in the construction and operation of their lines across said bridge; and if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized shall not be commenced within one year from March 1, 1896, and be completed within three years from same date, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall cease and be determined."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

TO PREVENT TRANSMISSION OF OBSCENE LITERATURE, ETC.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I call up the bill S. 1675.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person to deposit with any express company or other common carrier for carriage from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia any obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, picture, paper, letter, writing, print, or other matter of indecent character, or any article or thing designed or intended for the prevention of conception or procuring of abortion, or any written or printed card, letter, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where, how, or of whom, or by what means any of the hereinbefore mentioned articles, matters, or things may be obtained or made; and any person who shall knowingly deposit, or cause to be deposited, with any express company or other common carrier for carriage from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or who shall take from such express company or other common carrier with intent to sell, distribute, or circulate any matter or thing herein forbidden to be deposited for carriage, shall for each offense, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned at hard labor not more than five years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS SABINE RIVER BETWEEN LOUISIANA AND TEXAS.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I call up the bill (S. 3303) to authorize the construction by the Kansas City, Shreveport and Gulf Railroad Company of a bridge across the Sabine River between the States of Louisiana and Texas.

The bill was read.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BENNETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MONONGAHELA.

Mr. BENNETT. On behalf of the same committee, I call up the bill (H. R. 9168) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Monongahela River from the city of McKeesport to the township of Mifflin, Allegheny County, Pa.

The bill was read.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BENNETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SPECULATING IN CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Judiciary was passed temporarily. I now ask, on behalf of that committee, that the House take up the bill (H. R. 6834) to prevent the purchasing of or speculating in claims against the Federal Government by United States officers, nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and ask for a committee of conference.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, Mr. BURTON of Missouri, and Mr. HENDRICK.

APPOINTMENTS BY BREVET.

Mr. HULL (when the Committee on Military Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 3719) to provide for appointment by brevet of active or retired officers of the United States Army.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HULL (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, this is simply a question of concurring in a Senate amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have the bill read, Mr. Speaker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all officers of the Regular Army of the United States, active or retired, who served in the volunteer forces during the late war, shall receive a brevet in the Regular Army equal to the highest rank held or the highest brevet received in the said volunteer forces and be commissioned accordingly as of the date of such brevet: Provided, That they have not already received a brevet of equal or higher grade in the Regular Army.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Line 5, strike out "shall" and insert "may, at the discretion of the President."

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad if the gentleman would explain this bill for the benefit of an untutored civilian, who is not familiar with military matters.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the original bill simply provided for giving officers now in the Army the brevet rank which they had in the volunteer service, allowing them to wear the uniform on ceremonial occasions, and so on. The bill as it passed the House made it imperative on the President to give them this rank, but the Senate amendment leaves it discretionary with the President.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does it involve any expenditure of public money?

Mr. HULL. None whatever.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does it involve, in case of death, any additional pension?

Mr. HULL. Not at all. We do not pension on brevet rank.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

ROCK ISLAND BRIDGE.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, I call up the bill (H. R. 9775) to repeal so much of chapter 189 of the Statutes of the United States of America, passed at the third session of the Fifty-third Congress, and approved March 2, 1895, as requires that the lower portion of the Rock Island Bridge shall not be occupied by any street railway company without paying a reasonable rent therefor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso in "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1895, being chapter 189 of the Statutes of the United States of America, passed at the third session of the Fifty-third Congress, and which proviso is in the appropriation for the Rock Island Bridge, in the following words: "Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall not, under the act 'to empower the Secretary of War to permit the establishment, under certain conditions, of a horse railway upon and over the island of Rock Island, and the bridges erected by the United States connecting the cities of Davenport and Rock Island therewith,' approved March 3, 1885, permit the lower section of said bridge to be occupied by any street railway without paying a reasonable rent therefor," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

An amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out the word "repealed," in line 20, and add the following:
"Amended by adding after the final words, 'paying a reasonable rent therefor,' the following words, 'unless said company, in lieu of such rent, shall furnish and deliver at the electric motor on the draw of the bridge the necessary and proper electric power for operating the draw, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War,'" so long as said company occupies or uses said bridge for railway purposes.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some explanation of that bill. It seems to me that it ought to have come from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. That part of it which pertains to the bridge certainly ought to have been referred to that committee. The other part might legitimately, I suppose, have been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. If I caught the purport of the bill correctly from the reading, it is to allow this street railway company to occupy a portion of the bridge without compensation, changing what has been the law heretofore, requiring them to pay for the privilege of using this bridge. Without some explanation, I feel bound to object to the bill, and coming from the committee that it does, it seems to me that it is out of order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the Rock Island Bridge is entirely under the control of the War Department, and the gentleman is mistaken in his statement that this bill allows the street railway company to use the bridge without compensation. The bridge, I repeat, is under the control of the War Department. The original act provided that the rental to be paid by the company should be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the street railway company. That rental was fixed at $2,400 a year, but the Secretary and the company, after consultation, have mutually agreed that it will be better for both parties if the company shall be required to furnish the power for operating the draw. The War Department estimates that it will cost the Government $3,600 a year to operate it as an independent piece of machinery. It is arranged for operation by electricity, and the street railway company, having abundant power, can draw off enough to operate the draw without any great expense to themselves, while at the same time there will be a marked saving to the Government. The amendment proposed by the committee was submitted by the War Department, providing that this street railway company, as long as they use the bridge, shall furnish the power to operate the draw. The Government, of course, has the machinery there and a man to take care of it, but it will have to put in a dynamo to manufacture the power unless some such arrangement as this can be made. Therefore this provision of the bill, while it does make a saving for the railway company, makes at the same time a saving to the Government.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the rental now paid by the street-railway company?

Mr. HULL. They have never paid any. Under the old law they used this bridge free, just as it was used by wagons. This lower part of the bridge is free, and wagons, teams, foot passengers, and traffic generally are permitted to go free; but the act establishing a new bridge provided that the railroad company should pay certain rental for the use of the bridge.

Mr. DOCKERY. How much?

Mr. HULL (continuing). And the amendment is recommended by General Flagler and the Secretary of War as being highly advantageous to the Government and strictly fair to the street railway company.

Mr. DOCKERY. Did I understand the gentleman to state that they pay a rental fixed at $2,400 a year?

Mr. HULL. That was the amount fixed by the Secretary of War; but they pay nothing, as a matter of fact, now.

Mr. DOCKERY. But there is a provision in the sundry civil bill which you are seeking to repeal which requires that payment. Now, what is the amount contemplated in the bill for that purpose?

Mr. HULL. As I have stated, there is a cash rental of $2,400; but the Department has thought it better for the Government to have the railroad company furnish the power at all times to operate the draw of the bridge than to pay the cash rental; that it would be for the benefit of the Government to adopt that course.

Mr. DOCKERY. And you estimate the expenditure for that purpose at $3,600?

Mr. HULL. That is what it would cost the Government.

Mr. DOCKERY. What would it cost the street railway?

Mr. HULL. Well, they have their plant necessarily; and it is estimated that it will not cost them so much as that. Of course, it will not cost them as much as it will cost the Government, because the Government will have to establish a new plant, furnish dynamos, and other necessary machinery to operate the draw, so that this arrangement will be a decided saving to the Government.

Mr. MILES. Does this proposition meet the approval of the Secretary of War?

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir; and of General Flagler and the Ordnance Department generally, which has charge of this matter.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has looked into this matter, and is satisfied with it.

Mr. CANNON. I think it is probably the best that can be done.

Mr. BLUE. I would like to know whether or not the responsibility of maintaining the draw is cast upon the company in lieu of the rental.

Mr. HULL. The Government has control at all times, but the responsibility of furnishing the power is thrown upon the company.

Mr. BLUE. By this bill?

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir; the amendment of the committee makes it imperative upon the company to furnish the power at all times to operate the draw.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has looked into this matter and is satisfied with it, and perhaps it is the best that can be done in the interest of the Government. It seems, however, from the figures presented by the chairman, to inure largely to the benefit of the street railway company.

Mr. CANNON. I think a word will explain the matter, if the gentleman will yield to me.

Mr. HULL. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I think I can cover the condition in a single remark.

Prior to the erection of the new bridge at Rock Island, which by agreement is to be constructed and maintained half and half by the railway company and the Government, and which was originally constructed three-fifths by the railway and two-fifths by the Government, under legislation the railroad company passed over the bridge free of all rent. That was the condition with reference to the old bridge; and the new bridge was constructed, and it was provided in the appropriation that the Secretary of War should fix a rental for the use of the bridge by the street railway company plying between Rock Island and Davenport, and the rental was fixed at $2,400.

Now the street railway company kicks, the common council kicks, all the people kick, because, they say, "It is a free bridge, and everybody else has a right to use it, why should it not also be free to the railway company?" In this condition the railway company says, "We can not afford to pay the rent you demand and comply with certain other obligations that have to be performed, but we will furnish you the power, that is worth $3,600, to operate the draw continually." The Chief of Ordnance says that this will be for the interest of the Government; that it will cost the Government at least that or more to furnish the power. The amount it will cost this company therefor is $1,200 more than the rental, according to this statement, and it seems to me that it amounts to practically a fair trade; because if we do not accept the proposition, if it is not arranged in this manner, an effort will undoubtedly be made, and there may be some possibility of succeeding in time, to secure the free right of the company to the use of the bridge anyway by striking out the provision of the last appropriation bill bearing upon the question. So that I expect the best thing is to allow the bill to pass in its present form.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SALES IN SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6352) to simplify the system of making sales in the Subsistence Department to officers and enlisted men of the Army.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 1299 and 1300 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same are hereby, repealed, and that section 1144 of those statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1144. The officers of the Subsistence Department shall procure and keep for sale to officers and enlisted men, at cost prices for cash, such articles as may from time to time be designated by the Secretary of War: Provided, That sales of such stores on credit shall be made only to officers and enlisted men who have not been regularly paid, or who are in the field where it is impracticable to procure funds, and to recruits during their first month of enlistment, the amounts due therefor to be charged on the pay accounts of officers and on the muster and pay rolls of enlisted men next after the date of purchase and deducted from the payments made upon such pay accounts or muster and pay rolls by the Pay Department."

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask for a brief explanation.

Mr. HULL. Do you want the report read?

Mr. DOCKERY. I think the gentleman ought to make a brief explanation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think the House is entitled to at least a brief explanation of all these bills.

Mr. HULL. The only change this makes in existing law is in regard to furnishing unlimited credit to officers and men at these posts. This bill provides for extending credit to men who have not been paid, but cuts off credit to those who have been paid regularly, and lets them pay their bills as they go along. The bill is recommended by the Subsistence Department, as it simplifies accounts, and will work to the advantage of both the soldiers and the department, preventing a soldier getting in debt beyond what he should. It is simply to prevent the Government from carrying soldiers from month to month, when they are regularly paid, and provides for carrying them where they are not regularly paid, so that this works no hardship if the paymaster does not get around regularly.

Mr. BLUE. It makes no increase?

Mr. HULL. It makes no increase.

Mr. TERRY. What section of the law is repealed?

Mr. HULL. Section 1144.

Mr. TERRY. What does section 1144 relate to?

Mr. HULL. The sale of supplies from the quartermaster's supplies, to enlisted men and officers.

Mr. TERRY. This is a bill in the interest of the men and not in the interest of the sutlers?

Mr. HULL. It has nothing to do with the sutlers. It relates to the sale of Government supplies from the Subsistence Department, and it is recommended by the general in charge of that department.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PROTECTION OF NATIONAL MILITARY PARKS.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 7320) to prevent trespassing upon and providing for the protection of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every person who willfully destroys, mutilates, defaces, injures, or removes any monument, statue, marker, guidepost, or other structure, or who willfully destroys, cuts, breaks, injures, or removes any tree, shrub, or plant within the limits of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $1,000 for each monument, statue, marker, guidepost, or other structure, tree, shrub, or plant destroyed, defaced, injured, cut, or removed, or by imprisonment for not less than fifteen days and not more than one year, or by both fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 2. That every person who shall trespass upon the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park for the purpose of hunting or shooting, or who shall hunt any kind of game thereon with gun or dog, or shall set trap or net or other device whatsoever thereon for the purpose of hunting or catching game of any kind, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not less than fifty or more than one thousand dollars or by imprisonment for not less than five days or more than thirty days, or by both fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 3. That the superintendent or any guardian of such park is authorized to arrest forthwith any person engaged or who may have been engaged in committing any misdemeanor named in this act, and shall bring such person before any United States commissioner or judge of any district or circuit court of the United States within either of the districts within which the park is situated, and in the district within which the misdemeanor has been committed, for the purpose of holding him to answer for such misdemeanor, and then and there shall make complaint in due form.

SEC. 4. That the superintendent or any guardian or police officer of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park may, under such regulations as have been or may be established by the park commissioners, approved by the Secretary of War, take up estrays of animals found anywhere on the grounds or the roads within the limits of said park and shall impound the same. At any time within five days after the impounding of any estrays the same may be delivered to the owners upon the payment of $5 for each animal impounded. If more than one person claim ownership of an impounded animal within such five days, then the park superintendent shall take affidavits of all such persons, and such other testimony as may be offered as to ownership, and upon hearing such he shall decide and deliver the animal or animals to the party apparently best entitled to possession of the same. The fines collected upon the delivery of impounded animals to the owners shall become part of a fund out of which to pay the expenses of impounding such estrays, and an account of the collection and expenditure of such fines shall be annually made to the Secretary of War. If an animal or animals impounded be not returned to the owners thereof, as provided for herein, within five days, then the same shall be sold by the superintendent or assistant superintendent of the park, at public auction, and shall be delivered to the highest bidder upon paying over the amounts so bid to the superintendent or assistant superintendent. When such money has been paid, such purchaser shall become the owner of the animal or animals so purchased, which must then be removed from the park. All moneys paid over to the superintendent or assistant superintendent under such sales shall be turned into and become part of the impounding fund herein provided for.

SEC. 5. That any person to whom land lying within the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park may have been leased, who refuses to give up possession of the same to the United States after the termination of said lease, and after possession has been demanded for the United States by any park commissioner or the park superintendent, or any person retaining possession of land lying within the boundary of said park which he or she may have sold to the United States for park purposes and have received payment therefor, after possession of the same has been demanded for the United States by any park commissioner or the park superintendent, shall be guilty of trespass, and is liable to a penalty of not less than $100 or more than $1,000. And it shall be lawful for the park employees, by force, to eject such person from the land so held and from the park.

The Committee on Military Affairs recommended the following amendments:

In the title strike out the words "the Chickamauga and Chattanooga," and after the word "Park" add the letter "s."

In line 7, page 1, strike out the words "the Chickamauga and Chattanooga" and insert the word "any," and after the word "Park" add the letter "s."

In line 2, page 2, section 2, strike out the words "the Chickamauga and Chattanooga" and insert the word "any," and after the word "Park" add the letter "s."

Strike out all of section 4, and in section 5, page 4, line 2, strike out the words "the Chickamauga and Chattanooga" and insert the word "any," and after the word "Park" add the letter "s."

Mr. COX. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa one question before he proceeds. The bill seems to confer on the guardian of the park the power to arrest, and it does not confine him to the inside of the park. Now, I call your attention to this. If it is confined to the inside of the park, that is all right; but does not the gentleman think the bill confers power outside of the park?

Mr. HULL. The bill was prepared by the commissioners of the park, and we have amended it as we think it should be amended to deprive anyone of power outside of the park. We have made several amendments.

Mr. COX. I do not think the bill says that.

Mr. HULL. The keeper of the park has no jurisdiction outside of the park, and I can not see how he can go outside of the park to perform any duty whatever. I do not believe he has any power to act outside of the park.

Mr. COX. It would do no harm to put in an amendment which would make that certain.

Mr. HULL. If you desire to offer an amendment making that positive and imperative, I shall not object to it. My opinion of it is that the power ceases at the boundary of the park.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is right. These powers are conferred upon him within his jurisdiction.

Mr. COX. Of course that is the regular rule. He has no jurisdiction outside of that, and we do not want to confer jurisdiction beyond the park.

Mr. HENDERSON. The bill treats and discusses him as the superintendent of the park, and only gives him powers as such.

Mr. COX. I think the amendment I suggest should be put in the bill.

Mr. HULL. I think the bill is all right. We went over it with the commissioners, and eliminated a great many provisions that we thought should be eliminated, which conferred extra jurisdiction. The bill confines him entirely to the park, and the passage of the bill is necessary in order to preserve the parks.

Mr. MADDOX. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. The park is in my district, and I want to know if this fourth section is stricken out of the bill?

Mr. HULL. I ask the Clerk to report that part of the amendments reported.

The committee amendments were again reported.

Mr. HULL. The fourth section is stricken out. It is all right. I call for a vote on the amendments.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I understand that section 4 of the original bill was stricken out.

Mr. HULL. Section 4 of the original bill is stricken out.

Mr. HENDERSON. And what was No. 5 is now marked No 4.

Mr. MADDOX. All right.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. TERRY. I would like to suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that the minimum punishment for hunting is too high. You have got it not less than $50. Some fellow might stray in there with an old flint-lock musket and be caught hunting.

Mr. HULL. The line is well established, so that no man can stray in there.

Mr. TERRY. Have you a wire fence around it?

Mr. HULL. When the monuments are there, the line is very well established.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to suggest an amendment. The minimum punishment is too large, especially if a fellow should happen to go in there hunting. This is 10 miles square. It has no inclosure, and some innocent country fellow might get in there with a flint-lock gun and shoot a squirrel, and you punish him by inflicting a fine on him of $50. Leave it to the courts.

Mr. HULL. Had we not better adopt the committee amendments, and then you can offer an amendment?

Mr. TERRY. I do not know. I came over and talked to you, but could not get any consideration, and I thought I had better talk to the House.

Mr. HULL. That is not an amendment to the committee amendment, but an amendment to the bill.

Mr. TERRY. I wanted to get you to agree to strike out that $50 and say not to exceed $1,000.

Mr. HULL. I do not think I could agree to it. Of course, if the House should choose to make that amendment I will accept it.

Mr. TERRY. I move to amend, then, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments proposed by the committee.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. TERRY. Now, Mr. Speaker, that the amendments of the committee are disposed of, I move to strike out "fifty" as the minimum amount of the fine and amend the bill so as to read that it shall not exceed a thousand dollars, wherever it occurs.

Mr. HULL. There is a wide range between $50 and $1,000, and if no minimum is fixed the court will go over $50 all the time.

Mr. TERRY. I think the court will be able to fix a minimum.

Mr. DOCKERY. In the penal statutes that have been enacted in recent years the minimum has been stricken out and the maximum given, so as to leave the court discretion in the matter.

Mr. HULL. I have no objection; but I have no authority from the committee to accept it.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee says he has no objection.

Mr. HULL. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment is to strike out the minimum, and simply leave the maximum of not to exceed $1,000.

Mr. TERRY. That is it. I think that is the way that these statutes should be. That is the tendency of the age. Put it that way all the way through.

Mr. MADDOX. That is the statute of Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will submit his amendment.

Mr. TERRY. My specific amendment is to strike out "fifty;" so as to read "not exceeding a thousand" in the section where "fifty" occurs for hunting.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 7, strike out "not less than fifty;" so as to read "punishment by a fine not more than $1,000."

Mr. MADDOX. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDOX. I also move to amend section 4, line 13, in old section 5.

Mr. HULL. You must remember that section 4 of the original bill is out entirely.

Mr. MADDOX. This is section 4 of this bill, and I move to strike out the words "hundred dollars."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 12, strike out the words "less than $100 or," so as to read, "liable to a penalty of not more than $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SECTION 4829, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 666) to amend section 4829 of the United States Revised Statutes, concerning surgeons, assistant surgeons, and other medical officers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4829 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by the addition of the following words: "Provided, That surgeons, assistant surgeons, and other medical officers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and the several branches thereof, may be appointed from others than those who have been disabled in the military service of the United States."

Mr. McMILLIN. Does this change the compensation at all?

Mr. HULL. No, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. It simply opens the field to those who have not heretofore been eligible?

Mr. HULL. That is all. It simply enlarges the field from which selections can be made.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONGRESSIONAL MEDAL OF HONOR.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCLELLAN].

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I call up the bill (H. R. 9822) for the recognition of officers of the Army to whom the Congressional medal of honor has been awarded.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That officers of the Army to whom medals of honor have been awarded in the name of Congress, under the joint resolution approved July 12, 1862, or the act approved March 3, 1863, shall be designated upon each published register of the Army of the United States by the letters M. H., which shall be borne immediately after the names of said officers where arranged in said register according to departments, corps, regiments, and the retired list.

Mr. HENDERSON. What do the letters "M. H." stand for?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Medal of honor.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thought they might stand for "Mark Hanna." [Laughter.]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCLELLAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I call up the bill (H. R. 8890) as to medals of honor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President may present medals of honor not only to such officers, noncommissioned officers, and privates as have most distinguished themselves in action, but to any persons who have been attached to the Army and performing service therewith and who have distinguished themselves by conspicuous bravery and military service in action.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman whether any estimate is presented in the report as to the number of individuals to whom this legislation will apply?

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, a surgeon in the Army, a Dr. Nagle, had a special bill brought in providing for the presentation to him of a medal of honor upon the ground, which he undertook to establish by evidence, that on a certain occasion he had taken command of a battalion, or of several companies of troops, and had fought them with efficiency and bravery, but that the Secretary of War had held that he had no right to give the recognition of a medal of honor to any person who was not regularly enlisted in the service, this doctor having been only a contract surgeon. Under the circumstances, the committee did not think it proper that they, or this House, should assume the power of the Secretary of War to determine in any particular case whether a man should have a medal of honor or not, while they did think that if a man had been attached to the Army and serving with it, whether under contract or otherwise, and had been distinguished by conspicuous bravery in action, he ought not to be deprived of the right to receive a medal of honor merely by the fact that he had not been definitely enlisted in the Army when the service was rendered.

Mr. McMILLIN. But by this proposed legislation you put upon the Secretary of War the probability of having to consider a very large number of claims to this distinction. Now, does not the gentleman think that if the facts in this case are as he has stated them, it would be better for the committee to recommend the granting of a medal to this particular officer than to entail upon the War Department the amount of labor that will be entailed by passing this general bill?

Mr. PARKER. No, sir. It seemed to the committee that the distinction of a medal of honor, which is granted now by the Department with great care and upon the record, should not be lowered by permitting individuals to procure special separate acts of Congress granting the honor.

Mr. McMILLIN. But by this bill you allow the medal to be given under a general statute to men who never determined to enlist in the service.

Mr. PARKER. We do that only where they were actually attached to the Army and performed service there.

Mr. McMILLIN. What kind of attachment and what length of service do you require?

Mr. PARKER. It seemed to us that if a man had been in any kind of service in the Army and, while he was not bound to fight, had distinguished himself in battle by conspicuous bravery, by services that would be distinguished if performed by a man who had regularly enlisted, he would be better entitled to the medal of honor than a man who had simply done his duty.

Mr. McMILLIN. But heretofore, as I understand it, the medal of honor has been granted only to those who have manifested a willingness to take "pot luck" with the Government, to enter the service and stand or fall with it.

Mr. PARKER. The medal of honor has been granted heretofore only to officers regularly in the service who were bound to do their best, and if in any case a man who was not regularly enlisted performed the same kind of distinguished service, it seemed to the committee that recognition ought to be granted to him, not by single act of Congress, but by the Department, because we do not believe in Congressional recognitions in such matters, which usually amount to very little.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If the gentleman will permit me, the rule of the War Department heretofore has been to give the medal of honor only to those officers and enlisted men who most distinguished themselves in action by acts of individual bravery outside the line of their ordinary duty.

Mr. HULL. And I would suggest this further idea, that the War Department will be a great deal more conservative in granting medals of honor than the Congress of the United States would be if we once set the precedent of granting such medals to individuals by special bills. I think, therefore, that in the interest of the men who are to come after us on this floor, it is well for us to establish a tribunal, and say to the people who claim to be entitled to such distinctions: "You can go to the Department, and if you can show that you performed sufficiently distinguished services, you can get this medal there." We all know that it is an easy matter for members and for the friends of an applicant to make a fair showing before Congress, and I am sure that a great many more men will receive such distinctions if we establish the rule of granting them here to individuals than if we leave the whole matter to the War Department.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCLELLAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. HULL. That is all the business, Mr. Speaker, that our committee desires to call up now.

PASSED ASSISTANT SURGEONS, UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. HULICK (when the Committee on Naval Affairs was called). I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to call up the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (S. 1296) to commission passed assistant surgeons in the United States Navy and to provide for their examination preliminary to their promotion to the grade of surgeon was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That passed assistant surgeons now borne upon the Navy Register shall be commissioned as such by the President, such commissions to bear the dates upon which said passed assistant surgeons, respectively, received their appointments as such: and hereafter assistant surgeons shall be regularly promoted and commissioned as passed assistant surgeons, and passed assistant surgeons as surgeons, subject to such examinations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, however, That no examination of passed assistant surgeons shall be ordered until the expiration of six months from the passage of this act, during which time promotions shall be made as now provided by law.

Mr. DOCKERY and Mr. McMILLIN. Is this bill on the House Calendar?

Mr. HULICK. It is.

Mr. McMILLIN. It strikes me that the bill belongs properly to the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, though I can not decide positively whether such is the fact until I hear the report. If the bill carries any additional emoluments, which a casual reading would seem to imply, then it certainly must be considered in Committee of the Whole under the rules.

Mr. HULICK. This bill does not carry any increase of pay or emolument. It merely recognizes the rank of passed assistant surgeon and authorizes and directs the President to grant commissions in that rank. At present such commissions are not issued. It is proposed by the bill that commissions be issued, based upon an examination. At present a person serving as assistant surgeon may be promoted to the rank of passed assistant surgeon without an examination. The Secretary of the Navy thinks it important for the good of the service that an examination, physical and professional, should be required—that no one shall be promoted to and commissioned as a passed assistant surgeon or surgeon until the prescribed examination has been successfully passed. The object of this bill is to authorize and direct such an examination before the granting of a commission.

Mr. McMILLIN. The bill will not entitle these officers to any additional pay?

Mr. HULICK. The bill does not affect their pay or their rank in any way. The Secretary of the Navy believes it proper for the good of the service that this examination be required.

Mr. McMILLIN. What compensation do these officers now receive?

Mr. HULICK. I am not advised as to that; but the compensation will not be in any wise affected by the passage of this bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is the gentleman sure that there is no increase of compensation after the passage of the examination?

Mr. HULICK. No increase whatever except what would accrue under the present law without an examination. The object of the bill is simply to require an examination as a preliminary step to advancement from the grade of assistant surgeon to that of passed assistant surgeon, or from passed assistant surgeon to surgeon. A man may serve fifteen years or more before passing from one grade to another, and may in the meantime become physically or mentally unable to satisfactorily perform the duties of the next higher grade, and hence the necessity of an examination.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is the bill recommended by the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. HULICK. It is; also by the Surgeon-General.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman have the report read or incorporated in the RECORD?

Mr. HULICK. I call for the reading of the report for the information of the House.

The report (by Mr. HALL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 1296, report it back with the recommendation that it be passed; and the committee hereby adopts the Senate report on said bill, which is as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the above Senate bill, report it back with the recommendation that it be passed.

The bill has the approval of the honorable Secretary of the Navy, who states in an official communication to this committee that its adoption will tend to promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Navy. The bill has also the support of the Surgeon-General of the Navy, who states that the defective system acting so injuriously to the interests of the Naval Medical Corps should be remedied as soon as possible.

The bill provides for examinations for promotion, which are deemed by the Secretary of War essential to the efficiency of the Naval Medical Corps. Applicants for the position of assistant surgeon are obliged now to pass a rigid examination, and in about three years after entering service they are subjected to a second, previous to admittance to the rank of passed assistants. They are not subjected to another examination for a period which averages thirty-one years, including promotion, and no effort is made to ascertain their physical, mental, or professional qualifications for advancement until they come up for promotion to the grade of medical inspector.

There seems to be no good reason why medical officers should not be regularly commissioned on reaching the grade of passed assistant surgeons, and be required to show their fitness for advancement to the grade of surgeon. The bill herewith presented provides for the establishment of the grade of passed assistant surgeon and for the examination of officers in such grade before their promotion to that of surgeon.

The Surgeon-General of the Navy, in his annual reports for the past three years, has set forth arguments and facts relating to the necessity for the examination of passed assistant surgeons preliminary to their promotion to the grade of surgeon. He states that under existing laws passed assistant surgeons are not commissioned and are not required to pass the usual physical and professional examinations prior to their promotion to the grade of surgeon. This, he says, is most harmful to the Medical Corps and to the service at large.

Passed assistant surgeons, under the present law, remain in that grade for a period not less than fifteen years, and then without either professional or physical examination are promoted to surgeon, in which rank they remain fully as long before they are examined for the next grade of medical inspector.

The Surgeon-General therefore recommends that all assistant surgeons, when examined and found qualified for promotion to the grade of passed assistant surgeon, be commissioned in that grade, and be required to pass a further examination prior to promotion to the grade of surgeon.

The bill herewith returned provides for such examination and commission, and as it is clearly in the interest of the medical service of the Navy, your committee recommend that it be passed.

Mr. HULICK. There is evidently a mistake in that part of the report which states that the bill provides for the establishment of a new grade. That is an error.

Mr. McMILLIN. I observed that there seems to be contemplated the establishment of a grade to which the officer is to pass by reason of this examination. Now, if the gentleman can show that there is no increase of pay contemplated upon the establishment of that grade or passing to that grade, then the bill is in order for consideration during this hour; otherwise it is not. If the gentleman is not prepared to show that, he does not show that the bill comes within the rule.

Mr. HULICK. I did not prepare this report. It was prepared, under the direction of the committee, by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL].

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman object to having the bill go over until some future day which may be suggested (reserving whatever rights may now exist), in order that we may ascertain whether there is to be any increase of emoluments upon the establishment of this grade?

Mr. HULICK. I can state to the gentleman that there is to be no such increase of emoluments, and it is not the intention to establish a new grade, as can easily be seen by reading the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I understood the gentleman to say that he did not know what the pay of officers of this grade is.

Mr. HULICK. I did not present this report. I called the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL], who prepared the report, to the fact that there was the mistake to which I have referred. The bill itself provides merely that the assistant surgeons shall pass to a grade already established, and passed assistant surgeons to that of surgeon, upon examination.

Mr. McMILLIN. Would the gentleman object to allowing the bill to go over until to-morrow?

Mr. HULICK. Oh, no, not at all, if there is any serious objection to immediate action.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest that the bill ought to be fully understood before final action is taken upon it. We ought to know exactly what its effect is to be if passed.

Mr. HULICK. The only effect will be to require the examination of passed assistant surgeons before they advance to the rank of surgeon. As stated in the report, a passed assistant surgeon is required to remain in that grade at least fifteen years before being entitled to promotion to the rank of surgeon. At present no examination is required as a prerequisite to such promotion. In some cases an officer may serve in the subordinate rank as long as thirty years before coming up for promotion. During that time he may become physically or mentally disqualified for passing to the higher grade. The object of the bill is merely to require an examination without affecting in any way the grade or the pay. The bill requires this examination, and upon this examination it requires the President to commission this class of assistant and passed assistant surgeons as they are promoted.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will ask consent to let this go over——

Mr. HULICK. But if the gentleman insists, I will not object to letting it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let it go over until the day after to-morrow, so that I can have an opportunity of conferring with the Secretary of the Navy with reference to it. I suggest to the gentleman that he withdraw the bill temporarily.

Mr. HULICK. I will withdraw the bill until Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that if he withdraws the bill he can present it again when the committees are called.

Mr. HULICK. I do not care to consent, Mr. Speaker, if this is to be longer delayed. It is a matter that should have been acted upon some time ago.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have only a desire to get the information from the Navy Department, and no purpose of delaying the bill. I want to ascertain exactly the additional expense to the Government.

Mr. HULICK. It does not in any wise affect the pay, so far as that is concerned. I prefer not to pass it over unless, of course, the gentleman insists, in which case I will accommodate him.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think there will be no difficulty in reaching the bill hereafter, as the Speaker suggests there will be another call of the committee undoubtedly.

Mr. HULICK. I will not object, as the gentleman seems to insist upon the point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the bill; and the Clerk will resume the call of committees.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LACEY (when the Committee on the Public Lands was called). Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Public Lands have no bill on the House Calendar, but there is, we find, a somewhat urgent bill presented from Louisiana by the gentleman from that State [Mr. ROBERTSON], which is on the Union Calendar and ought to be acted upon. If admissible, I would ask consent to take that up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would only make confusion if unanimous consents are presented on the call of the committees, when there is no reason for the action any more than at any other time. The Chair thinks it is better not to interrupt the call in that manner.

Mr. LACEY. Very well, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk resumed the call of committees.

The Committee on Claims was called.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 1929) for the relief of William H. Crook.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that this bill is on the Private Calendar. This call only considers bills in order on the House Calendar.

Mr. BARNEY. I supposed when the committee was called, it would be in order to take up a bill on either of these Calendars.

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. McMILLIN. I take it, from the caption of the bill, that it is a bill requiring an appropriation or involving an expenditure. In that event it is not in order.

Mr. BARNEY. I will withdraw the bill.

JOHN N. QUACKENBUSH.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 3318) for the relief of John N. Quackenbush, late commander, United States Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Navy by promotion in the line, and limiting the number of commanders to be appointed in the United States naval service, are hereby suspended for the purpose of this act only, and only so far as they affect John N. Quackenbush; and the President of the United States is hereby authorized, in the exercise of his discretion and judgment, to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint said John N. Quackenbush, late a commander in the Navy of the United States, to the same grade and rank of commander in the United States Navy as of the date of August 1, 1883, and to place him on the retired list of the Navy, as of the date of June 1, 1895: Provided, That he shall receive no pay or emoluments except from the date of such reappointment.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a second on that motion.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I will yield as much time as he may desire to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, this bill permits a very tardy act of justice to be done to this officer. Some four or five times it has received the favorable action of the House. I think on three occasions, certainly twice, it has passed and gone to the President in the last days, or last hours, of the Congress, and has been lost in the general shuffle incident to those hours.

This officer, Commander Quackenbush, was court-martialed more than twenty years ago, and one of the very last acts of President Grant was to commute the punishment, which was, by order of the court, dismissal from the service, to ten years' suspension from rank and pay. That time expired in 1883, I think; but by a mistake, clearly shown to be a mistake, in the Navy Department the place of the officer had been filled in the service, so that when the term of punishment had expired it was not possible for the Navy Department to restore him.

Now, he has been trying since 1884 to have this double punishment which is now being inflicted upon him terminated. This bill proposes to do that. It is a just and proper measure which ought to receive the support of every member of this House, and I hope it will. I know that at least four times the House has acted favorably upon this measure.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am opposed to the passage of this bill; but I shall not enter into the details, which have been heretofore given in full to members of this House.

This bill passed at the last session, after a very full and exhaustive examination of the reasons for and against it. I do not propose to revive that contention by any presentation of facts or arguments, at this time, but will simply content myself with voting against the bill, as I do not think it ought to pass.

Mr. EVANS. I do not myself think that there is any necessity for any further discussion of the bill, because the House has fully considered it, and, by an almost unanimous yea-and-nay vote, passed upon its merits at the last session.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. CONNOLLY. How many times was this officer court-martialed?

Mr. EVANS. He was court-martialed once, to my knowledge. That is the thing that we are concerned with now.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Do you not know that he was court-martialed more than once, or was just once?

Mr. EVANS. He may have been court-martialed one other time; I am not sure.

Mr. CONNOLLY. What was the offense?

Mr. EVANS. The offense of which he was convicted in 1874 was being drunk.

Mr. CONNOLLY. How many times was he convicted of that?

Mr. EVANS. I do not know. Certainly once, and only once so far as I know or believe.

Mr. CONNOLLY. What was the other court-martial for?

Mr. EVANS. I can not tell that, if indeed he was ever court-martialed before. He was only placed upon waiting orders the other time.

Mr. CONNOLLY. It seems to me this is pressing this matter to a very hasty vote, to ask that this man be restored to the rolls when his comrades in the Navy convicted him of unfitness to serve, and he was tried more than once by them and convicted more than once. It seems to me it is rather a suppression of the facts here to ask a vote so hastily. I have not had an opportunity to read the report this winter, but I remember reading it last winter, and it is a very outrageous chapter to bring before Representatives here and ask them to restore that man to the service that he disgraced repeatedly from the beginning of his career, even, as I remember, while he was a student at Annapolis.

Mr. EVANS. I was about to say all these matters have been passed upon in the fullest manner by Judiciary Committee after Judiciary Committee and by this House after an elaborate discussion. I do not desire to enter into any further discussion of it now, but only to remind the House of these facts. The bill would have doubtless become a law at the last session but for the fact that it did not reach the President in time for him to consider it. Whether that is so or not, this House has expressed itself upon it, and I am sure, from a pretty accurate knowledge of the indisputable facts in the case, that the House acted correctly and justly. For that reason, if nobody else desires to speak, I call for a vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I want to say just a word about this bill. It is legislation that I would have been averse to but for the fact that General Grant gave it careful examination. This officer's only fault, getting a little too enthusiastic among his brother officers, is a fault of course unknown to all of us, and yet from reading and from observation of others we can make some allowance for it. General Grant looked the matter up and concluded that he had inflicted punishment enough. This man is to-day far advanced in years, with two lovely daughters, without means, and I think one-tenth of the good women of this District are knocking at our doors and our hearts to have this action taken. But for a mere mistake it would have been done without asking. The matter was considered by our committee, and after being considered twice no dissenting voice was heard in the committee.

Mr. HULICK. What was that "mere mistake"?

Mr. HENDERSON. Taking a little too much Budweiser. That was his mistake. I sincerely hope our hearts will be open to the appeal on behalf of this gentleman.

Mr. HULICK. I will ask if he has been "enthusiastic" at any time since then?

Mr. HENDERSON. Not to my knowledge.

And then (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

ANNIE E. NOLAN.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged report on the bill S. 2129. I want it referred to a committee of conference, and I ask the Clerk to read the report of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the request of the Senate for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2129) granting an increase of pension to Annie E. Nolan, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill and the action of the Senate and House.

The bill was read.

The Senate disagreed to the amendment of the House, and asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference requested.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. WOOD, Mr. KIRKPATRICK, and Mr. BAKER of Kansas.

STEAM-VESSEL INSPECTORS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries be discharged from the further consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, and I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1007) to amend "An act to amend 'An act to amend section 4400 of Title LII of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulations of steam vessels,' approved August 7, 1882;" and also to amend section 4414, Title LII, of the Revised Statutes, "Regulation of steam vessels."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That "An act to amend 'An act to amend section 4400 of Title LII of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulation of steam vessels,' approved August 7, 1882;" and also to amend section 4414, Title LII, of the Revised Statutes, "Regulation of steam vessels," approved March 1, 1895, the last paragraph of section 2, page 360, Supplement to Revised Statutes, volume 2, be amended so that it will read as follows:

"Every inspector provided for in this or the preceding sections of this title shall be paid his actual and reasonable traveling expenses or mileage, at the rate of 5 cents a mile, incurred in the performance of his duties, together with his actual and reasonable expenses for transportation of instruments, which shall be certified and sworn to under such instructions as shall be given by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. DOCKERY. I demand a second.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this bill is introduced at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury, contained in a letter which was printed as House Document No. 53; and the purpose of the bill is to save the Treasury a sum of $22,000 a year. Of course that is a novel proposition, but yet I hope it is not so startling but that the House will pass the bill. The law of 1871 provided that these inspectors should receive their traveling expenses at the rate of 10 cents per mile. The law of 1874, a general law incorporated in an appropriation bill, provided that no such expenses should be allowed beyond the actual traveling expenses of each officer of the Government; and we lived along under that law from 1874 down to 1895, when Congress passed the act mentioned in the title, increasing the salaries generally of all steamboat inspectors, and at the same time allowing them traveling expenses at the rate of 8 cents per mile. Under that law, for the last two years, but particularly in 1895, the Treasury Department paid the sum of $57,000 for traveling expenses at 8 cents per mile. The actual traveling expenses were only $35,000. So that the Treasury paid more than $22,000 to these inspectors in excess of their actual expenses; on an average $190 apiece to each inspector; or, in other words, this provision—it may be called a "joker"—in the law gave inspectors $190 increase in salary beyond that provided in the schedule of salaries in the bill. Now the Secretary suggests that instead of 8 cents a mile they be allowed 5 cents a mile, which, he says, will cover their actual traveling expenses, and will save $22,000 a year to the Treasury; and in the condition of the Treasury I thought that perhaps this little leak ought to be stopped, and that the House might be prevailed upon to pass the bill. I ask for a vote. The letter is by Secretary Carlisle.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to make a few remarks——

Mr. DOCKERY. In opposition?

Mr. GROSVENOR. In regard to this bill. What does the gentleman from Missouri say?

Mr. DOCKERY. I believe I am recognized in charge of the opposition. I desire to yield the gentleman some time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In opposition? I am in favor of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, how much time do you want?

Mr. GROSVENOR. About two minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I will yield the gentleman time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am delighted, Mr. Speaker, that there are so many evidences of the intense desire on the part of the outgoing Administration for economy in the curtailment of fees and salaries of the officers of the Government. I regret only that the heads of Departments were not able to discover some of these difficulties some years ago. This very distinguished Secretary of the Treasury did not find out that somebody was getting too much traveling expenses until it appeared to him within a short time.

Mr. PAYNE. I will yield to the gentleman some time if he will permit me for a moment. I think I ought to state that this letter was dated 22d of May, 1896, being a communication to the Speaker of the House, and referred to the first year under the law of 1895. The letter had been overlooked, so that the Secretary of the Treasury is not to blame for this bill. The letter was referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. I overlooked the letter myself, and I only introduced the bill to the House when my attention was again called to the matter a short while ago.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well; I am glad to hear it. This was not the subject that I wanted to speak upon, however.

Mr. DOCKERY. Evidently not.

Mr. PAYNE. I felt it incumbent upon me to make this statement.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to congratulate the country that the distinguished Secretary of State, in charge of a Department of the Government that was turned over, absolutely assaulted, rifled, and looted by the spoilsman of Massachusetts, the president of the Massachusetts Civil-Service Association, who came here, and in a period of sixty days turned out of office 80 per cent of the whole incumbents and filled the offices with unfamed, unexamined, and, in nine cases out of ten, incompetent men.

Then the State Department did not discover that the fees of those gentlemen, thus turned loose upon inoffensive foreign countries [laughter], were too large until within the last few months the distinguished Secretary of State has found out that the fees and emoluments of the consuls and consular agents of the Government abroad are entirely too high, and has issued an order, which will go into effect shortly after the 4th of March, if it has not already, absolutely depriving those officers of even respectable compensation. I am delighted that a streak of economy has appeared in that direction, but it would have been much more consonant with a just appreciation of the necessities of the Government if it had shown itself about three and a half years ago.

Mr. McMILLIN. I presume my friend from Ohio is more rejoiced at this streak of economy because he has little hope of any such streaks at any day in the future. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope that if we do have any such streak it will be an intelligent streak. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. It is likely to be a well-oiled streak.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, if debate is exhausted, I ask for a vote.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] desires to be heard.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether it would not be better in his opinion to fix this rate of 5 cents per mile as a maximum? Why should we pay 5 cents a mile for transportation when it costs only 2½ or 3 cents a mile?

Mr. PAYNE. In that I have followed the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury, who says that this will about cover the actual expenses. Five cents a mile will amount to within a few hundred dollars of the amount that was actually expended in 1895.

Mr. LOUD. The traveling of these officials is generally confined to short distances, is it not?

Mr. PAYNE. It is; but sometimes their stay at a place is prolonged, and this will help to pay their hotel expenses.

Mr. McMILLIN. As the officer has to swear to his expenses, anyway, what is the objection to providing that he shall be allowed not exceeding 5 cents a mile, so that if the actual expense in any case is less than that, the Government will get the benefit of the saving?

Mr. LOUD. This provision for 5 cents a mile relates only to traveling expenses, and does not include hotel bills. It is my opinion that the act which the gentleman from New York referred to would have allowed the Department to cut down these expenses, because I think it simply fixed a maximum rate.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the suggestion of the gentleman from California would meet the situation. Whenever you fix a maximum rate, in some way or other the expense always reaches that point.

Mr. LOUD. Well, they are bound to reach it any way under the bill as it stands; so, even if the gentleman from Tennessee is right, we should be no worse off.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to striking out the 5 cents a mile, so as to provide that the actual traveling expenses shall be paid in all cases.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, I think there should be a limit.

Mr. PAYNE. Striking out the 5 cents a mile and allowing actual expenses would put them on a par with other Government officials in this respect.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is a substantial, tangible amendment, and I hope the bill will be amended in that way.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to strike out the words "at the rate of 5 cents per mile," so that the allowance will be for actual traveling expenses.

Mr. LOUD. I hope the gentleman will consider that for a moment.

Mr. PAYNE. I make that request, and if the gentleman from California sees fit to object, he can do so.

Mr. LOUD. I think if the gentleman will consider the question for a moment he will see that that would be opening a very dangerous door. I think there should be a maximum rate. Every other Department of the Government has a limitation fixed.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the gentleman is mistaken. The law of 1894 fixes no limitation but actual expenses.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does not the gentleman from New York think that the amendment I suggested to him a moment ago would cover the case? The reports show that this is above the amount required to meet these expenses. Now, if he will put that as the maximum rate and let these officials go up to that, but not beyond it, he will close the door which the gentleman from California thinks so dangerous.

Mr. PAYNE. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his letter, said that in some rare instances actual expenses exceed 5 cents a mile. That happens in cases where the distance traveled is short and where the official is compelled to stay at a hotel for a number of days.

Mr. LOUD. I do not think it was ever contemplated that the Government should pay the hotel bills of these officials.

Mr. PAYNE. The Government pays the hotel bills of all its officials who travel on official duty. It does that under the law of 1874.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that at the last session we passed a bill known as the salary bill to regulate the compensations of marshals and district attorneys, and that bill provided for paying actual expenses. The tendency has been to abandon the old mileage system and pay the actual expenses of officials.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is correct. And I think that proposition is better for the further reason that whenever you fix the maximum an account is always rendered for the full amount.

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, I think the gentleman from New York had better make it for actual expenses.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman understands, of course, that I do not object to his putting the bill in the way he desires. What I suggested was only by way of suggestion.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask to modify the bill by striking out the words "at the rate of 5 cents per mile."

Mr. LOUD. I shall have to object to that, Mr. Speaker. I would rather have the bill as it stands.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask for a vote, then, on the original proposition.

The question being taken, the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

EXTENSION OF TIME TO SETTLERS.

Mr. ELLIS. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9493) to amend an act entitled "An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes," approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes," approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof, be, and the same is, amended so as to extend the time within which persons entitled to purchase lands forfeited by said act shall be permitted to purchase the same in the quantities and upon the terms provided in said section at any time prior to January 1, 1899: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to interfere with any adverse claim that may have attached to the lands or any part thereof.

The SPEAKER. The question is on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. PAYNE. In order that an explanation of the bill may be made, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

There being no objection, the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, the only change proposed to be made by this bill in the existing law is to insert "1899" instead of "1897." By the act of September 29, 1890, the unearned lands of the Northern Pacific Railroad grant from the town of Walulla, in the State of Washington, to Portland, Oreg., were forfeited; and, by the provisions of that act, persons who had settled upon those lands under license from or contract with the railroad company were permitted to buy the land thus settled upon in tracts not to exceed 320 acres each. The time within which this might be done has been heretofore extended to January 1, 1897; but by reason of the extreme hard times and the failure of crops, this land being principally located in eastern Oregon, where there has been a partial failure of crops during the past two or three years, some of those settlers have, by reason of the facts given, been unable to meet the requirements of the law. They are now living on the land, having established their homes there. Under the provisions of the act heretofore passed and the amendments to the same they were to pay the Government $1.25 per acre for the land. But for the reasons I have just stated they have been in some cases unable to do this.

On the 31st of December last, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Acting Secretary of the Interior suspended all entries on the land coming within the provisions of this act until Congress should have time to act. In other words, those officers considered it so important in the furtherance of equity and justice that the rights of these settlers be preserved that they made an order withholding the lands from entry until Congress might have time to legislate on the subject. The officers named have given the pending measure their hearty approval in a letter which is made a part of the report. They say it is a measure of substantial justice, and it has the unanimous support of the Committee on the Public Lands.

There are comparatively few cases which this bill will reach. Almost all the persons who were permitted under the provisions of law to make these purchases have done so, as they had no assurance that there would be any act passed for their relief. The order to which I have referred, suspending entries on this land, was made on the very last day on which the purchase could be consummated. As appears by communications which I have received from home, these settlers have in some instances paid as as high as 22 per cent interest and commission in order to raise money to make their payments to the Government. Those men who have not made their payments have failed to do so because they were absolutely unable by any honorable means to procure the money. This bill proposes merely that they be permitted to complete within the next two years the purchase of the lands on which they have established their homes for years past. If this legislation be passed, the Government will receive $1.25 per acre for the land. If the extension is denied, the land will be thrown back on the market as part of the public domain, to be taken up under existing laws. There are persons in the vicinity of these lands who are hoping that this bill may not pass in order that they may "jump" the claims of the unfortunate settlers who, by reason of the want of funds, have been unable to complete their purchases. The "jumper" would then come into possession of all the improvements on the land without paying anything for them, and the settler would lose his land and the Government would lose its $1.25 per acre, which will be paid by these settlers if the two years' extension as proposed be granted.

Mr. McMILLIN. If I correctly understand, this bill does not propose to remit any part of the price the Government is to get for this land.

Mr. ELLIS. Not one cent.

Mr. McMILLIN. The bill merely postpones for two years the payments which were required to be made not later than January, 1897.

Mr. ELLIS. That is the effect of it. It gives the present occupants the opportunity to complete the purchase of the land at $1.25 per acre rather than allow it to revert to the Government for occupancy under existing laws.

Mr. LACEY. The bill as reported proposed to include certain amendments which had been made to the original act. Are those amendments embraced in the bill as proposed to be passed under a suspension of the rules?

Mr. ELLIS. I was about to meet that point. I ask unanimous consent to correct the bill by inserting in line 11, after the word "section," the words "and the amendments thereto."

The SPEAKER. The proposed correction will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "section," in line 11, insert "and the amendments thereto."

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the proposed correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will not ask that time be occupied in reading the report; but I hope that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ELLIS] will embody in his remarks the recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office in favor of the passage of this bill.

Mr. ELLIS. I will do so, and submit the report of the Committee on the Public Lands, which contains the recommendations referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN]:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred House bill 9493, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

That by virtue of the third section of the act heretofore mentioned those persons who had contracts with or licenses from the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, made prior to the forfeiture of its grant by the act of September 29, 1890, were permitted to purchase said lands held by virtue of said contracts and licenses, providing the persons so holding such lands had made settlement of or resided upon the lands so claimed, by paying therefor the sum of $1.25 per acre for any land so settled or resided upon, the number of acres in no case to exceed 320.

By virtue of said act and the acts amendatory thereof, the time in which parties were entitled to purchase said lands expired on January 1, 1897.

On December 31, 1896, the Acting Secretary of the Interior, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, issued an order withholding all lands covered by the provisions of said act from entry or in any way being disposed of until such time as Congress should act in the premises.

Owing to the late date of the issuance of said order, all those entitled to purchase under said act who could possibly procure the means made purchases.

Those who would be the beneficiaries of the bill now pending are comparatively few, and have been prevented from completing title to the land settled upon by reason of the failure of crops and the general stringency of the times.

Should this bill fail to pass, all persons who would receive a direct benefit by reason of the same becoming a law will be compelled to lose the land they have hitherto held under laws existing prior to January 1, 1897, together with all the improvements placed upon the same. In every instance the parties claiming the right to purchase have placed valuable improvements upon the land, and would be obliged to lose the same should this bill fail to pass. Most cases covered by the provisions of this measure are of persons of small means, who were by reason of their poverty utterly unable to avail themselves of the benefits of the laws heretofore passed.

By the passage of this bill the Government will also be benefited, as it will receive the sum of $1.25 for every acre disposed of under the same. The failure to pass the bill will deprive the Government of said amount, and the land can only be disposed of under existing laws.

In view of the opinion of the Department, submitted herewith and made a part of this report, it is the unanimous opinion of the Committee on the Public Lands that the passage of the said bill will give a much-needed relief to those who will be the beneficiaries, while the failure to pass the same will leave them entirely helpless.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 19, 1897.

SIR: In reply to your note of the 13th instant, inclosing for my consideration and such suggestions as I might think proper with relation thereto, H. R. 9493 "To amend an act entitled 'An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes,' approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof," I have to say that the report of the assistant commissioner of the General Land Office, inclosed herewith, sets forth all the facts relative to the legislation heretofore had on the subject-matter of this bill. It also sets forth the fact of the action of this Department on December 31, 1896, directing the local officers at Vancouver and Walla Walla, in Washington, and The Dalles and Lagrande, in Oregon, to reserve all lands granted in said districts from any disposition except to receive applications and money tendered by persons protected by said section 3, pending the action proposed in this bill.

As the purpose of the legislation proposed seems to be for the relief of actual settlers and purchasers of the lands referred to in the bill, I have no objection to urge against its passage.

Very respectfully,

D. R. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN F. LACEY,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands, House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by your reference for report in duplicate and return of papers, of a letter from Hon. JOHN F. LACEY, chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, United States House of Representatives, submitting for your opinion and suggestion, to aid the committee in its consideration, a bill for the amendment of section 3 of the railroad forfeiture act of September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof.

The bill provides for the extension of time within which persons entitled to purchase lands forfeited by said act shall be permitted to purchase the same, in quantities and upon the terms provided in said section, at any time prior to January 1, 1899.

In reply, I have the honor to state that section 3 of said act of September 29, 1890 (26 Stat., 496), which granted the purchasers under its provisions two years from its passage, was first amended by the act of February 18, 1891 (26 Stat., 764), which provided that said period begin to run from the date of promulgation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the instructions to the local officers for their direction in the disposition of the lands, and not from the date of the passage of said act.

By the act of December 12, 1893 (28 Stat., 15), the period allowed such purchasers was extended to January 1, 1897, with a proviso that such extension should not "be so construed as to interfere with any adverse claim that may have attached to the lands or any part thereof."

A further amendment was made by the act of January 23, 1896 (29 Stat., 4), which made no further extension of the time of purchase.

At the request of Hon. William R. Ellis, of Oregon, this office, with the approval of Hon. William H. Sims, Acting Secretary of the Interior, on December 31, 1896, by telegram to the local officers at Vancouver and Walla Walla, Wash., and The Dalles and Lagrande, Oreg., reserved all lands claimed in said districts under said third section from any disposition, except to receive applications and money tendered by persons protected by said section pending the action proposed in this bill.

The purpose of the bill seems proper, and I have the honor to recommend its passage.

The bill and accompanying letter are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

E. F. BEST,
Assistant Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill as modified, it was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

GEORGE H. PLANT.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 1083) for the relief of George H. Plant, of the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to George H. Plant, of the District of Columbia, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,216.85, the same being the amount found to be due to him by the Court of Claims for losses and damages sustained by him by reason of a collision between the U. S. S. Gettysburg and the steamboat Lady of the Lake, on the Potomac River, and to be received by him in full satisfaction of all claims and demands in consequence of said collision.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent that the second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. I only wish, Mr. Speaker, to say a single word to the House in reference to this matter.

I objected to this bill the other day, and the objection was based on the ground that the owner or commander of the steamer, Lady of the Lake I think is the name of the vessel, seemed to be at fault just as much as the officer in command of the U. S. S. Gettysburg. And I think the reading of the report, which I have made since, fully bears out the suggestion. I was mistaken about the law of admiralty. It is different from the law of the road in such cases as this, and the negligence on the part of the party injured is not a bar to recovery, but the damage is divided between the parties who are at fault; that is, the party who causes the damage on the one side and the party who contributes to the damage by his own negligence on the other.

I think the bill ought, probably, to pass, but at a lower rate than that proposed. While I think the claim is a good one against the Government, and one that ought to be paid, still I am inclined to think that the beneficiaries should receive only one-half of the amount that is recommended here. I believe the claim is a good one to that extent.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] was the first member who reported this bill to the House from the Committee on Claims, and his report has been subsequently adopted in the report now before the House, drawn by Mr. DENNY.

I would like to say, in connection with this claim, that it grew out of an accident on the Potomac, a collision between a war ship belonging to the United States Government and the Lady of the Lake, a vessel belonging to Mr. Plant, who is the beneficiary under the pending bill. Under the rules governing navigation on the Potomac River, ships are required to keep to the right; but in the same rule it is provided that a ship which is, for instance, coming up the river on the left, by blowing a signal of two whistles, can notify a vessel coming in the opposite direction that it desires to keep on that same side.

In the present case the Lady of the Lake was coming up the river on the left or the Virginia side of the river, and met the U. S. S. Gettysburg going down the river on the same side. The rules require a steamer going down on the left side of the river when signaled, as the Lady of the Lake signaled the United States steamer, to answer by two blasts of the steam whistle, which meant that it accepted the offer so made and would allow the steamer coming up to continue on its course. The Lady of the Lake then came on up the river, governed by the rules of the road, and acting under the assumption that the war vessel would observe the agreement thus made. After going some distance, for some cause the Government steamer tried to change to the other side, and blew a blast on its steam whistle, indicating to the Lady of the Lake that it desired to go on the other side. The Lady of the Lake promptly responded that it would not change; and it could not make the change desired by the Gettysburg by reason of the proximity of the two vessels, which made it impossible, according to the testimony, for the Lady of the Lake to cross the bows of the other steamer and take the other side. The collision therefore came by reason of the action of the Gettysburg in endeavoring to change its course after it had been agreed upon and accepted by the other vessel, and this bill is simply to pay the loss sustained by the Lady of the Lake on account of the collision and injury caused by the Government vessel under the facts stated.

Then a naval board was appointed by the Secretary of the Navy to ascertain who was at fault on account of the collision. That naval board was the board referred to by my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] when this matter was up before. The members of the board stated that while technically there was some blame which might be laid on the pilot of the Lady of the Lake, yet under the law governing the movements of steamers upon the river she was not responsible for the accident. And you can readily see, Mr. Speaker, that it was impossible, after the Government steamer had accepted the signals of the Lady of the Lake indicating the course that she would pursue, to shift that course and change it when the vessels were close together; and for that reason the Lady of the Lake could not revoke the acceptance of the first signal made by the Gettysburg.

But the most important investigation of all in connection with this collision, where a United States steamer was concerned, was made by the board of local inspectors of steamers in Baltimore who were appointed to investigate the case, and their findings are set out in the report of the committee signed by James D. Lowry and William O. Saville, in which they exonerate the Lady of the Lake entirely, and state that the accident was not the fault of the owners of the Lady of the Lake at all.

Then, subsequently, with the findings of the inspectors, showing that the Lady of the Lake was not to blame—first the findings of the naval board and then the findings of the board of inspectors—a bill was brought here and was sought to be passed. An objection was urged, and it went to the Court of Claims, for the purpose of establishing the right of this party to recover. That court found the facts as stated, and the findings are set forth fully in the report, showing that the Government was responsible for the injury and that these people are entitled to recover the same.

The amount that was appropriated is simply the money that was spent in getting the boat in good condition and the loss that was sustained while she was undergoing repairs, as computed from an average of years. Now, three departments of this Government, commissioned under the law to ascertain the fault and cause of this accident, have all concurred in saying that the Lady of the Lake was not at all at fault, but that the Government's vessel was entirely at fault, and that this amount should be recovered.

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD].

Mr. HULICK. This amount is made up of the actual damages to the vessel, and the damages that accrued by loss of services of the vessel while she was undergoing repairs. Now, what was the amount of actual damage to the vessel, and what was the amount that was charged up for loss of services?

Mr. SWANSON. There was a bill introduced here which included estimated damages.

Mr. LOUD. Consequential damages.

Mr. SWANSON. But this bill only gives the actual damages as ascertained by the court.

Mr. HULICK. I understood the gentleman to say that it consisted of actual damages to the vessel——

Mr. SWANSON. That is right.

Mr. HULICK. And also damages sustained by the owner because of the loss of use of the vessel. Now, what is the amount of actual damages to the vessel, and what is the amount of damages for loss of service?

Mr. SWANSON. The court finds the cost of the repairs to be $2,216.85, and the actual loss of earnings while undergoing repairs to be $3,000. That is the finding of the Court of Claims. These sums aggregate $5,216.85, and that is what the court recommends. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] is better acquainted with this matter than I am, and any time that I have I yield to him.

Mr. LOUD. I think the gentleman is getting along very well, and probably I would defeat the bill if I should get in.

And then (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

JOSEPH E. VANTINE.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 7969) to increase the pension of Joseph E. Vantine.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Joseph E. Vantine, late first-class fireman on the U. S. S. Richmond, United States Navy, on the pension roll at the rate of $72 per month, in lieu of his present pension.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. There will be no debate unless a second is demanded.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second, and I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. MILES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7969) to increase the pension of Joseph E. Vantine, late first-class fireman on the U. S. S. Richmond, United States Navy, having carefully examined and fully considered the facts presented, respectfully report:

Joseph E. Vantine enlisted in the United States Navy May 19, 1857, as second-class fireman on the U. S. S. Minnesota; promoted to first-class fireman May 26, 1857, and served as such to June 10, 1859, when discharged.

He reenlisted as first-class fireman July 13, 1861, and served on the North Carolina to July 27, 1861; on the Richmond from July 28, 1861, to August 29, 1864; on the Princeton from August 30, 1864, to September 9, 1864, when honorably discharged.

Joseph E. Vantine was the first man to suggest the use of chain cables hung over the sides of vessels for protection from the enemy's missiles, and the efficiency of the device was demonstrated by Commodore Farragut's squadron on the Lower Mississippi in April, 1862, in the passage of Forts Jackson and St. Phillip, and the encounter with the Confederate ram, and it resulted in the capture of New Orleans, La. This chain armor was used afterwards on board the Kearsarge in her capture of the Alabama.

In the attack on Fort Hudson, La., March 14, 1863, a shot from the enemy's guns struck the boilers of the Richmond, and the fire room and other parts of the vessel were filled with steam, when he, under great difficulties, drew the fires from under the boilers and prevented them from exploding, thus saving the ship and perhaps many lives. While this was being done he became exhausted from the heat and cooking steam and had to be relieved every few moments, until by his persistent intrepidity and assiduous efforts the grand work was accomplished. For this heroic act he received special complimentary mention in the Admiral's report, and was afterwards presented with a bronze "medal of honor," by act of Congress.

Joseph E. Vantine is now pensioned at $12 per month under the act of June 27, 1890, for injury to back and disease of rectum.

The proof submitted to your committee shows that claimant received an injury to his back about July, 1861, while removing a part of an iron ventilator from the port coal bunker of his vessel, and that this injury was enhanced and the disability aggravated by the arduous work at Port Hudson, La., in March, 1863, and the disability has increased with his advancing years; and that he had a stroke of apoplexy August 6, 1895, and is now suffering with complete paralysis of the right side and entire loss of the power of speech; and that he is now totally and permanently helpless, and, his physician says, "will probably never be any better." He has three minor children and his wife, entirely dependent, and with no income except his small pension; and he is now in such condition as to require the care and attention of another person.

In view of the testimony, from which it is reasonable to conclude that his paralysis is a result of his naval service, and in view of his gallant and meritorious service, your committee earnestly recommend the passage of the bill without amendment.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know how much this bill carries?

Mr. WILLIS. This bill carries $72 a month, which the law would allow to this man provided this disability could be shown to be of service origin. They claim not to be able to exactly show that this man incurred this disability in the service. He is a wreck. He has been going down since his discharge from the Navy. He is now a paralytic, and has to have the attention of one person all the time, and sometimes two persons. He is old and poor, and unless we help him he is, in a sense, hopeless. Senator GRAY is perfectly conversant with this case. His brother-in-law, Dr. Black, is this man's physician. I have taken the pains to go down to his home and ascertain the facts. He has been a brave servitor of the Government. Congress gave him a bronze medal, but that is a very hard and dry and unyielding substance, and will neither be a supplement to his larder nor to his wardrobe. He will not live long. He will probably be dead within a year, and you will have only to pay his pension for that time.

Mr. LOUD. That is a very full answer. I want to say to the gentleman and the House that so far as I am concerned, I would be willing to waive all doubt that might exist in the minds of any gentlemen as to whether this gallant sailor received his present disability in the service; but, Mr. Speaker, we are attempting by the passage of this bill to correct the pages of history, which I rather regret. History has handed down to us the statement, which has gone broadcast over the world, that Admiral Farragut conceived the idea of putting these chains around this vessel, and we have admired his brilliancy for having conceived that idea. Now, while I would not object to the $72 a month, I do not think we should at this late day, in an act of Congress and in a report, seek to change a condition of history about which there is at least some doubt. I think the gentleman will admit the force of that himself. This is an endeavor here by an act of Congress to take away the credit from a very gallant officer——

Mr. WILLIS. I beg your pardon. We take nothing away from Admiral Farragut.

Mr. LOUD. The credit of having first adopted this method of protecting a vessel of war. Of course Farragut has crossed over to the other side, and, as the gentleman suggests, can not lose anything; but still it blasts many a hope and many a kindly and patriotic feeling toward Admiral Farragut which I think his memory should be allowed to retain so long as this generation may exist.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman is hypercritical. I know of no page of history which attributes the first suggestion of hanging chain armor over a vessel to Admiral Farragut.

Mr. LOUD. This report says this man was the first.

Mr. WILLIS. This report says that this suggestion was made by this man to him. But that does not touch the merits of the question. The question is whether this man's present physical condition may be attributable to his service in the Navy. If so, if we could satisfy the Pension Bureau that this was so, then they would immediately give him $72. They are anxious to do it. They feel that it is a genuine case; but they walk along the line of technicalities so close that it absolutely reminds one of the numberless mistakes that have been made by the physicians from the time of Æsculapius to the present.

Mr. LOUD. Why do you not give the man a pension on the merits of his case without seeking to change existing history.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor of the bill, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

TO REPEAL TIMBER-CULTURE LAWS.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended and the bill S. 3328 be passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3328) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes."

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of an act entitled "An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," on page 1098, United States Statutes at Large, Fifty-first Congress, volume 26, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That section 2301 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2301. Nothing in this chapter shall be so construed as to prevent any person who shall hereafter avail himself of the benefits of section 2289 from paying the minimum price for the quantity of land so entered at any time after the expiration of fourteen calendar months from the date of such entry and obtaining a patent therefor, upon making proof of settlement and of residence and cultivation, for such period of fourteen months; and the provisions of this section as to making proof and obtaining patent after fourteen months' residence shall apply to the lands embraced in the ceded portion of the Sioux Reservation in North Dakota, South Dakota, and Nebraska, opened for settlement under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1889, and no other payment shall be required of any person who has heretofore or may hereafter make entry of said lands than is required by the provisions of the act of March 2, 1889, opening said lands to settlement.'"

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a second.

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is satisfied it is so guarded as not to include anything outside of what is mentioned?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir. There is no question but what it simply includes the land within the Great Sioux Reservation. Most of these lands are in the State of South Dakota, and the bill passed the Senate simply covering the lands within the State of South Dakota, but the amendments proposed also include the lands of the reservation in the States of North Dakota and Nebraska, because the Great Sioux Reservation projects slightly into both of those States. I can state to the gentleman that under the act of 1889, by which the Great Sioux Reservation was opened, the lands were opened to settlement under the homestead law. Settlers were required to pay $1.25 an acre for the land when they filed on it within three years from the date of the ratification of the treaty opening the same. The next two years it was 75 cents, and after that 50 cents per acre. There was no right to commute given under the original act. That law was amended in 1891, giving the settlers the right to commute, and pay the amount the Government was to compensate the Indians for these lands under the treaty. By a recent ruling of the Interior Department, in case the settlers commuted, they were not only required to pay the amount for the land provided by the act of 1889 opening the reservation, but in addition the $1.25 under the old law. It was never intended, Mr. Speaker, under the treaty or the act ratifying the same, that the settlers should be obliged to pay any more for the lands than $1.25, 75 cents, or 50 cents per acre, as the treaty and original act contemplated.

Mr. LOUD. I want to say to the gentleman that I do not know that I am opposed to the bill, because I am not familiar with that section. Neither do I know that there can be any objection to extending it to the rest of the country; but I am rather of the impression, from the reading of the bill, that unless you insert the word "only" you are going to make this apply to all the country. I ask the gentleman's attention to that especially.

Mr. GAMBLE. I would simply reply to the gentleman that it can apply to this reservation alone by the express provisions of the section to which this act is an amendment, and such is the opinion of the Assistant Commissioner of the Land Office, whose report on this bill goes with it, and I will ask to have the report and the letter of the Assistant Commissioner made a part of my remarks.

The report and letter are as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3328) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," have had the same under consideration and report it back with the following amendments:

After the word "in," in line 21, insert "North Dakota;" and after the word "Dakota," in line 21, insert "and Nebraska."

And recommend the passage of the bill as amended.

By act of Congress in 1889 a large portion of the Sioux Reservation in South Dakota, North Dakota, and Nebraska was opened up to settlement under the homestead law, but the bill required five years' residence before final proof could be made, and then the settler was obliged to pay the Indian price for the land. In 1891 Congress passed an act which provided that the settler should commute after fourteen months' residence, and under this provision many settlers did commute after fourteen months' residence and paid the Indian price for the land, borrowing money and giving security upon the same. Some patents were issued.

In June, 1896, the Secretary of the Interior ruled that where the settler commuted after fourteen months' residence he must not only pay the Indian price for the land, but $1.25 per acre in addition thereto, and he has suspended the proof now pending in his Department.

The object of this bill is to relieve these settlers from the payment of this additional $1.25 per acre. It will be impossible for them to pay it. They can not borrow money on the land, as no one will loan that amount upon it. These lands are arid lands, and only valuable for grazing, and it is a mistake to offer them for settlement under the homestead law. However, the people who are occupying them are engaged in grazing, and a limited population can be sustained in this way.

To require this additional payment of $1.25 per acre will simply compel the people now residing upon these lands to abandon them, and when once abandoned it is doubtful if they will again be occupied. There were 8,500,000 acres of this reservation opened up to settlement in 1889, and up to the present time less than one-tenth of the area, or less than 800,000 acres, has been taken by settlers.

The report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, herewith attached, is made a part of this report.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 9, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 5, 1896, requesting information as to the ruling requiring homestead settlers on lands formerly embraced in Indian reservations to pay the Government for the land in addition to the payment required for the benefit of the Indians, as you desire to have the law amended, if an amendment is required, for the relief of the homestead settlers.

In reply I have to state that the only requirement of the nature indicated pertains to the lands formerly embraced in the Great Sioux Reservation, in the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, and Nebraska.

These lands were open to settlement and entry under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. L., 888). Said act provides that the lands—

"Shall be disposed of by the United States to actual settlers only, under the provisions of the homestead law (except section 2301 thereof) and under the laws relating to town sites: Provided, That each settler under and in accordance with the provisions of said homestead acts shall pay to the United States for the land so taken by him, in addition to the fees provided by law, the sum of $1.25 per acre for all lands disposed of within the first three years after the taking effect of this act, and the sum of 75 cents per acre for all lands disposed of within the next two years following thereafter, and 50 cents per acre for the residue of the lands then undisposed of, and shall be entitled to a patent therefor according to said homestead laws, and after the full payment of said sums."

It will be noticed that under said act no commutation of homestead entries was permissible.

Section 6 of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 1095), which amended section 2301, United States Revised Statutes, relating to commutation of homestead entries, provided:

"And the provisions of this section shall apply to lands on the ceded portions of the Sioux Reservation by act approved March 2, 1889, in South Dakota, but shall not relieve said settlers from any payments now required by law."

Under date of May 13, 1896 (22 L. D., 550), the honorable Secretary, having under consideration the application of the State of South Dakota "for 5 per cent of the net proceeds of sales of lands within the boundaries of what is known as the opened portion of the Great Sioux Reservation," held that the provision of section 6 of the act of March 3, 1891 (supra), "clearly recognizes the trust character of the payments originally required of entrymen of Sioux lands, and means that when such entrymen so elect they may commute, after the time named, by paying the minimum price for the land, in addition to the payments required under the act of 1889."

In view of the honorable Secretary's decision, the district land officers having jurisdiction over the Sioux lands were instructed by letter C of June 23, 1896, to collect from parties applying to commute homesteads for said lands $1.25 per acre in addition to the payments required under the act of March 2, 1889 (supra), and similar action was taken on all cases pending in this office unpatented.

Homestead settlers who make ordinary five-year proof are not affected by said ruling, which applies only to commuted homestead entries.

Very respectfully,

E. F. BEST, Assistant Commissioner.

Hon. R. F. PETTIGREW,
United States Senate.

Mr. LOUD. I notice that the reading of the bill does not say that it shall apply to that section only.

Mr. GAMBLE. It unquestionably applies to that section only, because in its terms it is limited to the Great Sioux Reservation, in South Dakota, and the committee amends the act by including also the remainder of the reservation within the States of North Dakota and Nebraska. The act can not by any possible construction be extended so as to include other lands in addition to those specifically mentioned and brought within the provisions of the act.

Mr. LACEY. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this ruling was not made until 1896, and from 1889 down until 1896 the amount paid to the Indians was accepted by the Department in full payment in commutation, and patents issued accordingly. But unquestionably a strict construction of the act of 1889 requires that $1.25 shall be paid in addition to the Indian price. That construction having been adopted, the bill becomes necessary simply to give to the settlers who commuted prior to 1896 the same benefits as to those who commuted after that time. When this construction was adopted, it was a construction undoubtedly right according to the strict letter of the law. But that never was the intention of Congress—to require that the $1.25 should be paid, and in addition thereto the Indian price.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is of course fully aware that "strict construction" varies very materially in different minds. The gentleman might assume to be strict construction what another man might regard as very lax construction. Why not make the bill specific by inserting the word "only," so there can be no possibility of misconstruction?

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, in compliance with the suggestion of the gentleman from California, I ask consent that the bill be amended by inserting the word "only" after the word "apply," in line 19, on page 2. I ask also that the amendments proposed by the committee be agreed to.

Mr. KEM. Do those amendments contemplate embracing the whole reservation?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir. The amendments were recommended with the object in view that all the lands within the reservation would be brought within its provisions. In the first instance it applied only to South Dakota, but it has been amended so as to cover Nebraska and North Dakota.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] asks consent to modify the bill as he has suggested.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

FORT LYON MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 4985) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the State of Colorado, and so forth.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the State of Colorado the right to occupy, improve, and control, for the purposes of a soldiers' home, to be established and maintained thereon by said State, the Fort Lyon Military Reservation, to include the buildings located thereon, on condition that said State shall, within three years, establish such home, at which provision shall be made for the care and maintenance of officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines who have served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, their dependent parents, widows, or orphans, and under such rules and regulations as said State may provide: Provided, That the United States reserves to itself the fee and the right forever to resume possession and dispose of the said lands whenever it shall appear that the State of Colorado has ceased to use the same for such public purpose.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, this bill is to authorize the State of Colorado to occupy, for the purposes of a soldiers' home, an abandoned military reservation. No soldiers have been quartered there for twelve or thirteen years. There is no possibility that the Government will ever again need the reservation for military purposes, and it has been turned over from the War Department to the Interior Department. On the back of the report will be found a letter from the Interior Department, stating that part of this reservation (which consisted originally of some 5,000 acres) has been thrown open to homestead settlement, only the part on which the buildings stand being reserved.

Mr. DOCKERY. How many acres are in that?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Over 500 acres, a little short of a section. The buildings are going to wreck. The Government has an officer there in charge of them, at an expense of $1,000 a year; but the windows are being knocked out, the roofs are leaking, and the buildings are naturally decaying, not having been occupied for twelve or thirteen years. There is at present a soldiers' home, maintained by the State of Colorado at the State expense, at a town called Montevista. There are a number of buildings there which have been erected by the State; but it has been found that the location is not a good one for a soldiers' home on account of the altitude, which is perhaps seven or eight thousand feet above the sea level. The old soldiers find that the atmosphere affects their nervous systems and they become unwell and discontented. Fort Lyon is on the Arkansas River, about 3,500 feet above the level of the sea, and is well adapted for such a home. As I have already said, there is no use to which the Government can put those buildings, there being no longer any occasion to use them for military purposes.

Mr. STEELE. You ask these buildings for a State home, as I understand?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir; for a home to be maintained at State expense.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the value of this land?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Probably not over $5 an acre.

Mr. DOCKERY. And there are about 557 acres?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; there are some buildings upon the land that would make it worth considerable if they could be used for any useful purpose.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the probable value of the land, including the buildings?

Mr. SHAFROTH. If you put it up at public auction you probably could not get $10,000 for the land and buildings, although the buildings cost, I think, some $46,000. They probably would not bring the cost of moving them off the land.

Mr. DOCKERY. What assurance have we that, in the event of this bill passing, the State will locate a soldiers' home there?

Mr. SHAFROTH. There has been a general request for it. The gentleman will observe also that we do not ask for title to the land, but only for the use of it and the buildings.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has the legislature taken any action toward the erection of a home there?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that both houses of the legislature have petitioned for the passage of this bill and every State officer.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is there any precedent for this proposed action by the Government?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I think there are quite a number of precedents, though the reservations have generally been ceded for school purposes. This land is not near any city and is of no particular value. There is no water right attached to it which would give it a special value.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is this bill approved by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Commissioner of the General Land Office favors it, although he says it is not the province of the Interior Department to indicate to Congress what disposition shall be made of the public lands.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has the Secretary of the Interior been consulted in regard to it?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; there is a letter written by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in which he gives the history of this reservation——

Mr. DOCKERY. But does the Secretary of the Interior approve it?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; in the same manner. They approved it so far as they approve any of these bills. They do not formally approve any measures of this kind. They say it is for Congress to determine what should be done with these lands. Here is the language of the Department:

This office does not feel called upon to express an opinion as to the propriety of the proposed legislation, as it is a matter wholly within the discretion and subject to the legislation of Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has either the Secretary of War or the General of the Army expressed himself on this proposition?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It having been found that this land was not needed for military purposes, the War Department turned it over to the Interior Department. The reservation originally embraced some 5,000 acres, all of which, except the part on which the Government buildings were situated, was thrown open to homestead entry. The bill affects only that part of the land on which the buildings are situated. If the property at any time should not be used as a soldiers' home, the title will revert to the Government.

Mr. MILNES. Has the legislature of Colorado expressed any desire with reference to this matter?

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is a petition here signed by all the members of the legislature. It is not in the shape of an official act.

Mr. MILNES. I should suppose that if the State wanted this land, the legislature would have passed some formal resolution on the subject.

Mr. SHAFROTH. A memorial, as I have just stated, has been sent here requesting that the land be ceded for the purpose contemplated. Every officer of the State concurs in this request.

The question being taken, the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

IMPROVEMENT OF EASTCHESTER CREEK, NEW YORK.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10012) relating to the improvement of Eastchester Creek, State of New York.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to expend the whole or any portion of any appropriation heretofore made for the improvement of Eastchester Creek, in the State of New York, in accordance with the surveys and report for such improvement, upon that portion of the improvement included in recent surveys extending the improvement to the head of tide water.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let a second be first ordered on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FAIRCHILD] will act as tellers.

Mr. BLUE. Before the vote is taken, I should like to hear an explanation, in order that I may vote intelligently.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order until a second has been ordered on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I withdraw my objection. My object was merely to hear the report read.

The SPEAKER. Under the present order of procedure, it is necessary that a second be ordered on the motion to suspend the rules, if debate is desired. Is there objection to the request that a second be considered as ordered? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, the report in this case is short, and it explains this matter in a nutshell. I ask that it be read.

The report (by Mr. HOOKER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10012) relating to the improvement of Eastchester Creek, State of New York, having had the same under consideration, report the same back and recommend that the bill do pass.

The improvement of the stream to which this bill relates has been in progress for many years, and numerous appropriations have been made therefor. The river and harbor bill passed at the first session of this Congress appropriated $12,000 to continue improvement in accordance with the report of the Chief of Engineers. A provision was also included in the river and harbor bill for additional surveys to extend the improvement to the head of tide water, a distance of about 2,000 feet. Such survey has been made. The proposed extension will carry the improvement to one of the main thoroughfares of Mount Vernon, a city of more than 20,000 population, and into the heart of the territory the improvement is designed to benefit.

The purpose of the present bill is to enable the Secretary of War to use his discretion whether it be advisable to expend any portion of the former appropriation upon that part of the improvement embraced in new surveys. It makes no additional appropriation.

Your committee are of the opinion that the Secretary of War should not be forced to expend all of the twelve-thousand-dollar appropriation upon a specified portion of the work in case he should deem it in the interest of economy or advisable to expend it upon the whole improvement.

Your committee therefore feel justified in recommending favorable action on the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from New York whether this proposition has the approval of the Secretary of War?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I do not know that the proposition has either his approval or his disapproval. There has been a survey made.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has this been submitted to the Secretary of War?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. This bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I do not know that the bill itself has been submitted to the Secretary of War. But all that the bill provides for having done is to be subject to the discretion of that officer.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has the matter been submitted to the Chief of Engineers?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Not the bill itself. Surveys have been made and reported upon by the Engineer Department.

Mr. DOCKERY. Who is responsible, then, for the suggestion contained in the bill?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Members of the Board of Trade and other citizens of Mount Vernon, a city of 20,000 population. I will add that I also, residing in that same locality, am responsible for the suggestion.

The appropriation of $12,000 was made in last year's river and harbor bill. Although the report speaks of extending this improvement an additional distance of about 2,000 feet, my opinion is that the distance may be less than 2,000 feet. The question is simply whether the money already appropriated shall be expended in deepening the improvement already made, or in extending the improvement this additional 2,000 feet, which would bring it into the heart of the section to be benefited, reaching a main highway of the city of Mount Vernon.

Mr. DOCKERY. The proposition which the gentleman seeks to change by the bill under consideration was approved, I assume, by the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers, and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. That is right.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, that proposition having received the approval of the Department and of the proper committee of this House, the gentleman proposes to change its terms by a bill which has not been submitted to the Secretary of War or to the Chief of Engineers or to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. It has been submitted to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and favorably reported. The report has just been read. The provisions of the bill can not be carried out except with the consent of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers.
